

WHOLE NO. 1846.

Grenada has a corps of new preachers. Dr. J. J. Wheat in the staff. Rev. J. M. Huggins on the circuit, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan on the district. Then we have Rev. Thos. J. Newell the college, who preaches everywhere. We expect much of these great good men. Indeed, we have taught to expect much of men who occupy these places by the grace of their worthy predecessors. The and Bobb and Price are hard to kill. We have had the pleasure of knowing Dr. Wheat several times. He is a great preacher. His words are made by a personal experience, and much to them. His preaching is full; his people think they have great of preachers. Dr. has been with us, and preached delightful sermons, though, as we had a strong hold upon him, Huggins is here in the same courage. We have not been to preach. I saw him on his visit to Grenada College Institute, and to the people. What a blessing comes to us in our preachers and we are glad the opportunity to bring, even in the midst of social troubles. The people state you send your paper can and that send their daughters to College Institute. In President Newell has offered a girl to a higher and better education to the church a beautiful treasury; but let us have made their marks on the map. Beneath every man, large him, or will be, the of our great men. Dr. has seen the undergrowth of the The Typist under the Vines.

LOOKING BEYOND.

Sometimes we feel a longing for the pressure of hands grown cold and weary in the strife. In the quiet grave more calmly resting. So full of loving service when in life.

Sometimes our hearts are filled with bitter anguish. Over some grief that seems too great to bear. For one so more dear than life has left us. And all our future seems dark and bare.

Sometimes we feel a deep and earnest longing for something which in life has been denied. And our vexed spirits make a low, sad wailing. That we have missed those joys for which we sighed.

Missed them—perchance within this earthly region—

But all we have is not our portion here. No, our freed spirits have a wider kingdom. A future life before us bright and clear.

Be glad with the radiance of a holy sun-light. Hear with the clearness of the crystal sea. In a dark sin-mist cloud our earthly vision. Of the great life eternal yet to be.

But peace, faint heart! let faith spread broad her pinions.

Soar to the upper realms of joy and light. Look on the things unseen with earnest glances. Look upward, onward—walk no more by night.

In the bright joy of that glad Easter morn— The last, the grandest, that our earth shall know.

What joy, what rapture in the glad remembrance. When bliss shall rise supreme o'er pain and woe.

Let us walk onward through this lower region. Through this deep valley where sin's shadow lies.

Looking beyond, where sunlight glids the mountains. For sometimes now too bright for mortal eyes.

Great Son of Righteousness, arise, and guide us. Through all the dark and dreary ways of life. Life and death, shed thy bright beams upon us.

And make us more than victors in the strife. —Parish Visitor.

Scylla and Charybdis.

The rocks are upon the one side and whirlpool, is on the other. With steady hand, with eyes clear and true, with a heart strong and trustful, pilot-stands grasping the helm. Sunbeams kiss the laughing waves; shimmer, glisten and dance, drawing back to the sun-god his tender carresses from thousands of emerald, they spheres of imprisoned light. Above the goodly ship, which, like some light-winged swan, cleaves the waters deftly, under the stress and drive of maelstrom, foreshall and glib, the blue sky arches like a benediction of the Father, "who is through all and in you all." Sunshine, glory, beauty; sparkling ripples beneath and smiling heavens above! But, steady there, helmsman! Over on the right port round the beetling rocks, while on the left is heard the mad rush and roar of the circling vortex; and there are treacherous quicksands and dangerous currents right ahead. The scene may change—the winds rage, the surges roar under its anger, the clouds blacken and lower like flouting serge, amid the wild, tumultuous gatherings of a storm-swept sea and sky.

"Spoh is life," saith my reader. True; but it is not thither, exactly, the parable runneth to-day. "Behold also the ships (of Zion), which, though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth." It is to those who hold with their hands the helm of the churches, to whom are entrusted the guidance of argosies, hearing freight very precious, that I would speak to-day. Whether he be a minister or layman, the pilot must be on the watch for the cliff or the maelstrom. Hard by, on the windward, may frown the rugged, ugly heights of "rigid sectarianism," while on the leeward, with eddying whirl, rub the dangerous waters men call "liberalism." Beneath the old ship that has "landed many thousands, and will land as many more," are the shallows of "superficial sentimentalism," and the shifting sands of "men's opinions." It requires care, patience, knowledge and grace to sail these straits. Steady there, pilot! With a clear head, a strong hand, and courage out of a pure heart, you can guide the good ship safely through. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear" what this parable teacheth. Preachers, indoctrinate your people. Indoctrinate—an old-fashioned, deep-meaning word; and I fear we are forgetting the value of its meaning. Recently I have devoted much time to the study of what may be called doctrinal subjects, or the points of difference between our system of theology and other systems, and am impressed, as never before, with the order, harmony and symmetrical beauty of Wesleyan Arminianism. Never before did I know with what potent weapons we are armed, oor behind what impregnable fortresses we stand, when it comes to polemical preaching. The old ship is staunch and sound, built after the great Master's model. Her covenant charter dates from the time of Abraham, and is as limitless as the power and grace of her Builder and Captain are immeasurable. But, helmsman, beware! Scylla still threatens and Charybdis yawns. The lofty, pretentious heights of "apostolic succession" on the starboard bow, and the "mystery grave" of baptism by immersion on only circles and whirls to the lar-or merman of the deep, may come on board, sometimes through your country, and persuade your crew that the vessel is unbound and her charter illegal. I warn you especially against the merman. He is so captious, so plausible, frequently perverting the very elect. These he straightway taketh down into the depths; then, with a tear and a sigh, you erase their names from the good ship's register, and write, while pity strives with indignation, Hic jacet sub aqua.

Oh, when will men learn that Christ came, "not by water only, but by water and blood"—the one a symbol of grace, the other of life! Or when will the human heart be emancipated from the visible mode or sign, and know that form is nothing, and spirit everything, with those "who worship God in spirit and in truth"? The essence, and not the sense, of life is divine. The fulfillment, and not the prophecy, is the important event. So when, with liquid phrases and flowing words, the merman cometh, telling of murmuring streams and silvery-flowing Jordans; beneath whose restful waters the old man of sin must be buried, and from the placid depths, considerably stirred just then, must rise in likeness to the new life, don't you trust him, pilot. He will conjure somebody, sure. Tell him you have letters of commission from the great King, and must be about your Master's business; that you have the royal chart before you, and have not time to waste in discussing the various routes; that your voyage is over water, and not under water; besides, you have an abundant supply of that refreshing liquid aboard for cleansing purposes. I tell you, beware of this merman. He will take your place at the helm, if you give him a half-chance; then, ten to one, he will sink the whole ship, for he believes in immersion anywhere and at all times. He is altogether too careless about water. Just study the log-book containing the record of many safe voyages in the past, glance over the chart (you should know it well), look where the index of faith is pointing to a star brighter and far more splendid than Sirius; then, grasping the wheel firmly, with a commanding voice bid the mariners unshroud more canvas, and throw it full and free to the breeze, that come down from the mountains of God's eternal promises, and sweep over the ocean of his boundless love.

Hard Knocks.—Romans viii, 35-39.

BY "GILDEROY."

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?"

Ans. No one; for Christ loved us from the beginning, and he will love us to the end.

Is the apostle here speaking about our love for Christ or Christ's love for us?

Ans. Christ's love for us, and "the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Why should the apostle have written thus to the Romans?

Ans. Because some held and taught that the Romans, Gentiles, were not included in the atonement, were not embraced in the love of God and Christ.

Is this fact manifest from the body of this epistle?

Ans. It is, for the apostle emphasizes "Jews and Gentiles, Greeks and Barbarians, wise and unwise; there is no difference; all under sin; he is the God of the Gentiles also," and many like expressions.

What are we to understand from all this?

Ans. That some had undertaken to separate others from the love of Christ; and from "the love of God which is in Christ."

What are the leading thoughts of this epistle?

Ans. That all are sinners, all alike guilty before God, all were foreknown, all were included in the atonement, and that all may be saved by "the righteousness of faith in Christ."

What is meant by "the righteousness of faith?"

Ans. Justification by faith, or the forgiveness of sin. "It is one God which shall justify this circumcision by faith and the uncircumcision through faith."

Is "tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword," any sign that Christ does not love us?

Ans. No; for these things are often necessary for the trial of our faith.

If they are patiently borne, what good comes to us?

Ans. We are made stronger thereby, and Christ loves us all the more.

What answer does the apostle give to the question about affliction separating us from the love of Christ?

Ans. "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."

Where is the emphasis placed by the apostle in this answer?

Ans. On "him that loved us."

As no person or affliction in this life separates us from the love of Christ, can any power or spirit in the world beyond separate us from his love?

Ans. No; "for I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Was this passage written to show that those who once love God will infallibly continue to love him to the end?

Ans. No; such a thought was not in the mind of the apostle; nor in the mind of the Spirit when it was written.

Has this passage any bearing on the doctrine of the "final perseverance of the saints," or against the doctrine of the "possibility of apostasy?"

Ans. None whatever. To apply this passage either way is to "wrest" or twist the Scriptures, and thus make them mean what they do not mean.

What great theme is the apostle here discussing?

Ans. The love of God and of Christ for every human being on the face of the globe.

True Preaching.

The true aim of preaching is to apply the truths of the gospel to the living experiences of men; hence the twofold test of a preacher's homiletical orthodoxy. Does he fairly and fully present the truths of the gospel? and, does he reach men? The history of preaching, even in our own day, reveals grave errors which have sinned against both these tests.

There is and, perhaps, always has been a tendency in many pulpits to slight the deep things of the gospel for the winnow novelties of the day. A smile may be seen lurking on many faces when the preacher begins to speak of "Justification by faith," or the "Witness of the Spirit," while many are delighted with the preacher of "Social Science," or the abuse of his congregation. Pastors sometimes give way, more or less, to this popular taste, and deal out sensational trash or wholesale abuse in place of the comfort and instruction of Scripture.

There is a reason for this tendency on the part of both preachers and people. This reason is found in the opposite error. The tendency just discussed is an exaggerated rebound from the dry, unpractical preaching of what has the form, but not the power of Scripture doctrine. A want has been felt for more practical preaching, and this tendency to sensationalism, though an exaggeration, is an exaggeration of a truth. Some preaching, while it seems to expound the gospel, does not touch the life and experience of men. The religion of Christ is a religion for the shop, the market-place and the fireside; and he who is so intent on the beauty of the truth itself, that he does not bring it home in its force to the consciences and lives of his hearers, does not preach the gospel in its fullness.

There is no necessity, however, for an empty sensationalism on the one hand, or an unpractical exegesis on the other. One of the most thorough exegeses in our church to-day has extraordinary power in applying the gospel to the wants of the heart and the experiences of the life. While we are studying the Scriptures in our closets, we must not fail to study men in their homes and places of business. In thus guarding against what may be only tendencies in our church, we shall approach the practice of the model Preacher, who, while he "opened the Scriptures" and expounded the Prophets, lived among men, and made every truth he uttered an answer to the wants of men.

The Sabbath a Home Day.

BY REV. H. H. GEORGE, D. D.

No institution is more sacredly fitted into the social system than the home. It is the first, therefore the oldest, and most signally favored of the divine appointments.

It is there children are born, nurtured, trained and made ready for life-work.

It is there the world's leaders get their first impressions, business men receive their early bent toward actual service, and all men and women are filled with first impulses toward Church and State life.

If the home be unfortunately constructed, and parental care be neglected, or unwisely exercised, influences for evil may go abroad that can never be measured and much less controlled. Were we able to trace backward the history of many of the business wrecks of our day, the defalcations and embezzlements, or many of the disasters and failures in social life, no doubt their earliest seed might be found to have been sown in the home. Hallowed influences were wanting, the worship of God was unknown, the sweet, softening, moulding influences of religion were not felt, and the natural tendencies of the human heart were unrestrained. The career of a life thus started must always be uncertain, and, sadly, too often perilous. It is not seldom that criminals upon the scaffold drop a hint of the life that led them there. It is reported of a young man who was sentenced to be executed for murder, that he spent the night before his execution in drawing upon the walls of his prison cell the steps to the scaffold.

In this picture he drew four steps: First, disobedience to parents; second, Sabbath breaking; third, gambling and drunkenness; and fourth, murder.

Among all the environments for good that encircle the home none can be named more beneficent and salutary than the Sabbath. Its quiet, peaceful hours, its solemn, sacred service, its hallowed associations of the good and faithful and true, must make their mark upon youth and age for good.

It is the day when the week's work is stopped, when parents and children are brought together, when the family are at home. A home day for a tolling, struggling family must mean a great deal. The calm, sweet rest of it in the family circle can not but have a softening, quieting, heart-reaching effect.

How far the order and peace, the happy friendships and joyous pleasures that are found in society are traceable to a sacred rest day at home, only God who can trace out the causes of events can tell.

But if parents have any ambition to cultivate the minds of their children, there is no better time than the Sabbath to talk and read and investigate subjects they will thereby store with information both their own minds and those of their children, fitting the family for its after responsibilities.

But, better than all, if parents have any desire towards the higher and better life for themselves and their children, the Sabbath is the day God made for his own service, a day for worship, for Bible study, and for the uplift of soul toward God and heaven. "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy." A religious man gets tired of the world's toil and rush and whirl of business for six days; he wants a day of rest, a holy rest day, when he can talk with God and walk with him and have some fellowship with the Father, Son and Spirit, and with God's dear people. Whatever his pleasures of the week may have been, he can truly say of the Sabbath, "This is the day God made, in it we'll joy triumphantly."

A religious family can't live without the Sabbath. It comes to them as a messenger from heaven to lead their hearts up to heaven. So sacred is it to them they can not afford to yield it, not to infringe upon it, and in no wise to compromise it. To every secular demand upon them to surrender it, they can only reply, "Now, then, can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?"

So sacred are all the joys and pleasures and worship of a holy Sabbath in a godly home, that no stranger, for any light reason, ought ever to invade such "heavenly places."

No family ought ever to intrude upon another on the Sabbath day for a pleasure visit. It is trading with secular steps into holy places and laying secular hands upon holy things. God made it to be a home day for the family, when it shall be together alone, and yet not alone, for he is with them. It is too hallowed for any unhalloved foot even to intrude. Let the visitor go back home, and make his own home sacred and worshipful, and then he will have no desire to invade the sanctuary of his neighbor.

It is to be lamented that so many who work hard all week, have so little appreciation of the Sabbath as a home rest day. Almost two solid months of each year are Sabbaths. What an opportunity to the laboring man for mental, moral and spiritual improvement!

Could the Sabbath be observed as a home day for rest and holy worship, and soul improvement in all the homes of this land, our standard of civilization and social improvement would get a grand uplift; and our nation would be as a beacon light to all the Sabbath-forgetting nations of the earth. And, better than all, God would crown us with his richest blessing as a nation that kept and honored his holy Sabbath.—American Sabbath.

Itinerant's wives, said a preacher past three score years and ten, are the greatest women in the world. How so? Why, to begin with, the itinerant is expected, unlike any other preacher, to make two or three supreme efforts every Sunday. To do it, he must be on Sunday morning in the best physical condition possible to ensure a vigorous brain and active intellectual powers; to grasp the truth and throw it into the congregation with force. His wife is his trainer. How watchful of his health, how fastidious with his diet, how careful of his inner and outer wrappings; how quickly she brushes away all apparent cares, personal and domestic, from his presence; how quickly she lifts and carries any unexpected burden; keeps dependency away from his heart; throws the light of cheerful faith into his, to illumine his countenance; and as he passes from study to pulpit, sends her prayer of faith after him; and if no one else, while preaching, says from the heart, "God bless him!" her heart keeps the divine fountain and the unfailing power of him from text to amen, and looks after the children besides. Yes, and more than that; sometimes the remuneration is so little that domestic help is out of the question; so that when duty calls him for weeks away from home, she can not avail herself even of that kind of championship. I have known the itinerant and his wife to be so separated by the exigencies of the work, that neither could have received intelligence from the other, in case of sudden death, until after the usual time of the funeral. I have known the wife remain alone day and night for weeks; and part of the time be so ill as to be unable to provide herself with proper food. I know a preacher who on a Sunday, starting out to go home from seven in the morning till eight at night, leaving his wife sick in bed with a bowl of gruel on the stand, lock her in for the entire day, the answer was, "By no means; we shall get on together till you return my Father and I." Sometimes the members live half a mile away from the parsonage, and in case of casualty, the wife could not avail herself of their kindness. Often with a natural fastidious taste in dress and in household fixtures, decorations and surroundings, limited means have forced contentment with the plainest bonnet and suit, furniture and just natural flowers and shrubbery. Grand woman. She lives for her husband so that he can the more efficiently live for Christ. There is no doubt but that many a preacher has been started on his itinerant way by a godly mother who has been made eminently successful by a devoted and pious wife. When we preachers appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that everyone may have due praise of God, it will be a forecast of deepest interest, which shall have the largest share of praise, the itinerant or his wife.—Selected.

Signs of the Times.

There are signs of a general upheaval all through the pagan, papal and Moslem world. Japan has suffered from a recent earthquake, in which thousands are said to have perished. China was visited by most destructive floods, and now is the scene of widespread riot and not a little bloodshed. South America—Brazil, Chili and the Argentine Republic—has been and is undergoing civil and political disturbances, which in some cases amount to a convulsion. Russia is expelling the Jews and preparing for war, and all Europe is either in a state of ferment or of uncertainty and apprehension. No one on the continent feels sure of the peace of Europe for thirty days ahead, and a European war means a world's upheaval. Africa has been the scene of almost continual conflict since the Zulu and Soudan wars. Turkey is on the verge of perpetual disturbance. The isle of the sea are the scenes of repeated and sometimes widespread antagonisms, either within their own coasts or with foreign foes. No one can predict how long Mexico and Central America, Burmah and India, Thibet and Korea will keep their uncertain quiet. There are some agitated students of affairs who boldly say that never within this century has there been such a general murmur of approaching conflict; and that only the destructiveness of modern engines of war prevents its outbreak. In the recent naval exhibition we saw a facsimile of a trial target upon which one of the largest of modern English ordnance, a 15-ton Armstrong gun, had expended its explosive force, and the ball—a conical one—had been driven through six feet of steel and iron, ten feet of oak timbers, five feet of solid granite, fifteen feet of concrete and six of brick masonry, in all penetrating forty-two feet before its progress was arrested!

Meanwhile, let it be recorded with thanksgiving that never has such a spirit of benevolence been exhibited as now among God's true children. For example, Mr. Thomas M. Russell, a Scotchman, has just willed £50,000 sterling to Rev. John Wilkinson for his work among the Jews; £8,000 were contributed by a single donor in Australia to modern missions, and we hear almost every week of large gifts to home and foreign evangelization. A prominent lady, a well-known countess, has sold all her jewelry and ornaments except her looms, that she may send her valuables to minister to God's kingdom; and amid all modern apostasies in doctrine and inconsistencies in practice, there is a practical protest of consecrated souls in the more complete self-surrender that includes property. Oh, for the new spirit of war for the Lord! When will the world be convulsed not by the preparations for gigantic destructive conflicts of arms, but by the universal uprising of the church of God in behalf of the world's conquest for Christ!—Missionary Review.

No Secret Followers.

Christ was not content to allow the woman who had been an invalid for twelve years to be healed without a public acknowledgement of his gracious power. It seems evident that she was unwilling to be healed publicly or openly. Not only the manner of her approach to Christ, but also her silence for a time to his inquiries as to who touched him, and her confession coupled with fear and trembling, show that she recognized a public healing by Christ as demanding a public confession of the same. Whatever may have been her motive for desiring to keep her healing a secret Christ would not allow it. She may have thought that if she acknowledged her healing to have been of Christ that she would be called upon to join the company of his disciples and minister unto them of her substance.

The practical truth taught us by the narrative of the woman's healing is, that Christ wants no secret followers. Those who are saved from the consequences of sin by his obedience and sacrifice, and the redemption of sin by his imparted power, have less reasonable excuse than the healed woman for desiring to keep these facts a secret. Although she had spent all her living—that is, she means for daily sustenance—upon physicians, she had something left. Did she imagine that if she acknowledged Christ as her healer, honest gratitude would require a payment of money? Or did she think that being healed by Christ would require her to join the band of disciples and leave home and friends to tell the good news? Other invalids that they might be healed? It seems as though such motives influence some to be secret followers of Christ. They do not make a public profession of their faith in Christ and join the church, because there is need of money and work to advance the kingdom of Christ. The church wants those who will give and work and pray. Sabbath-school, missionary and temporal workers are wanted, and, as professed followers of Christ, they feel as if they could not consistently refuse to become such workers.

The desire to be a secret follower of Christ arises from a love of the things of the world, or from ignorance of the blessings of publicly following him. Some think that if they are not known as Christians there is no inconsistency in their not doing as Christians should. Thus while they free themselves from the charge of inconsistency, they testify to their being lovers of the world, and by proving their friendship for it prove also their enmity to God. There is strength in union and organization in Christian work. The soldier in the ranks can accomplish more than when alone. The weak and slender thrashed twisted together make the strong cord. Christ wants no secret followers because a public confession of him as Savior honors him. Were all saved this would not needs be. This public confession and fellowship with other disciples are means whereby the weak increase their strength by having nourishment for and an opportunity to exercise Christian graces and virtues.—Mid-Continent.

First of all, he should be a manly man. He should have that within him that would lift him to the consciousness of a noble manhood. Allowing that God is that intelligent personality that we conceive him to be, we must admit that in seeking his preachers, he chooses men who, as a rule, are men of such reputation and character. The preacher must be a partaker of the life he offers to his people. God has a process in saving souls and all who would enter his kingdom must do so through the portal of his methods. This is accomplished through the intelligence of a man. God works by method.

A man to be a preacher must be more than a manly man. There are thousands of men who are as manly men as ever stood in the pulpit, and yet they have no right on the platform. God selects his preacher and makes known the fact to the person selected and to others, making the ministry a divine vocation. The prime essential is that the man should have a call. God's method in dealing with men is to deal with them as rational beings and to reach them through the intellect. Hence, the men who are called to do his work should be men who can present what they have to say in such form as to appeal to the intelligence of man. They must be able to understand the environment and circumstances of the people they address and to know the obstructions that lie in the way of truth. It is the duty of the pulpit to reach the mind through all possible paths of knowledge.

No man can look into the great questions of religion intelligently that does not think of God through his works and manifestations, and it is the function of the preacher to penetrate as far as any other man into the mysteries of God. It is the business of the preacher to remove doubts from the minds of others and to open up their minds to the reception of the truths of the gospel. The preacher must absorb all possible knowledge; so that touch him where you may, you will find him electric with knowledge. The preacher speaks to a new constituency every thirty years, but let him present the truth to a man and have it received and the man is conquered. They must be made to know themselves, but there is very little preaching in the pulpits that teaches them what they are. They are brought to see their sins, but not to know themselves.—Bishop R. S. Foster.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

THE MODERN SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT AND HIS WORK. By J. H. Pepper, chairman of the Sunday-school Board of the Memphis Conference.

Though a small book, it is a valuable contribution to our Sunday-school literature. Every superintendent should have this little volume, and read it carefully. It would do him good in his work.

ECHOES FROM FOREIGN SHORES—LETTERS FROM BIBLE LANDS FOR CHILDREN. By Rev. P. L. Stanton. Vol. I. Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Price, 50c.

Here is another book of travels in the form of letters to the children. We think the children who are fond of books of travel will like this one. The style is clear, and the descriptions of scenes and places are vivid. The book is full of good illustrations.

HAND-BOOK OF SOUTHERN METHODISM. By P. A. Peterson, of the Virginia Conference. Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Price, twenty-five cents.

Dr. Peterson has done a service in compiling this digest of the history and statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It is a little book of historic facts, and statistics up to 1891. If you want to know something of your church, you will find it crystallized in this digest.

THE LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL. By C. L. McCarthy, Atlanta State Normal College. J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia.

This subject has always fascinated people. The author seems to regard the dying utterances of Jacob as Moses as more than prophecies concerning the Tribes. They show much farther and embraced much more in their scope. Indeed, the Tribes of Israel were prophetic of the nations of Europe and America. Working on this idea, the author has produced a very ingenious and readable little book.

PERIODICALS.

—THE FORUM has been enlarged both in the size of the page and in the number of pages. The magazine is now published weekly, and is now the largest and handsomest of the review. The January number contains two articles on the Louisiana Lottery, one by Judge Frank McGloin, of the Court of Appeals in this city, and the other by J. C. Wickliffe, one of the editors of the New Delta. A new departure of the Forum is the publication of a column on "Christmas, and After," by Bishop Potter, of New York. Dr. Schaff discusses the "Bridge and Hereby Trials," and Dr. Briggs contributes an article on "Theological Education and Its Needs." Other papers of value also appear. Forum Publishing Company, New York. Price, 25c.

—ST. NICHOLAS gives the young folks enough good, pleasant and profitable reading to last them all the month of January. Century Company, New York. Price, 25c.

Mission Notes.

The following paragraphs we clip from the Monthly Concert of Missions in the January number of the Missionary Review:

The reports of the American Board give the following facts: The Board has under its care 21 central missions with 97 stations, 1,130 out-stations and 1,387 preaching places. A total of 538 missionaries are employed, with 2,648 native laborers. There are 410 churches with 28,226 church members. During the year the additions were 3,554. In schools the additions were 46,403; pupils are reported. Medical relief was given during the year to 100,000 patients.

As nearly as can be computed from the reports of various societies, the following summary of Protestant foreign missions is correct. From churches in United States, Canada, Great Britain, and Continental Europe, there are in foreign lands 8,048 stations and out-stations, with 5,584 missionaries, 35,843 native helpers, and 531,503 communicants. The amount of money given last year was $11,429,882. Of course this summary is incomplete, as there are unreported missions and missionaries.

After two missionary sermons in Melbourne recently a hard-working man sent in the title-deeds of 93½ acres of farm-land, worth about $2,500, to be divided between India and New Guinea. Being asked afterward about his gift, he said: "This is how I look at it. Supposing I were a boy and my father gave me $5, but afterward wanted part of the money back again to help him in some work he was doing, and he came to me to help him, and I gave him a five-cent piece, what sort of a son should I be?"

There is a view of the benefits of foreign missions which should appeal even to worldly men. General Armstrong says: "America, through the American Board, expended in fifty years a million and a quarter dollars to evangelize Hawaii, and during that time has received about $4,000,000 a year in trade. England's missions are said to bring back $10 in trade for every pound given to convert the heathen. Christianity means a demand for clothing and utensils. The first sign of grace in a penitent savage is a request for a shirt."

The following figures are full of interest. Seventy-five million dollars are contributed yearly in the United States to the sustenance of the church, $31,000,000 more being given for purposes purely religious. Within the century now drawing to a close 150,000,000 copies of the Bible have been printed in 226 different languages. Fifty years ago there were 502 mission stations in foreign parts; there are now 5,765. Fifty years ago there were 553 ordained missionaries; to-day there are 6,696 such servants of the Lord. Then there were but 1,260 other laborers and helpers abroad; now there are 50,552.

If we can do nothing else, or whatever else we may do, we can all pray for the blessing of God upon the work of Christian missions, and prayer has mighty power. The worship of Durga, the blood-goddess of the Hindus, is attended by the most terrible excesses of sin. Some native converts have agreed that every evening this worship goes on they also will meet to pray to God to put an end to the wicked practices. "Let us go on praying night after night and year after year," they say, "till we have prayed down the Durga Puja. Let us pray it down." Christians everywhere should join in all such prayers.

An artist was asked, "What is your best picture?" He replied, "My next." That was a good answer for an artist to make. When a man looks back for his life's best work in any line, his feeling should be that of the other artist, who wept when he saw his completed masterpiece, because his satisfaction with it marked the climax of his life-work. It should be the same with our years; we should always look to the next as our best. This is a good thought too, for every Christian and every church with regard to the work of missions—our next year should be our best. We should surpass our best past in praying, doing, and giving. We should make our monthly concerts for 1892 the best we have ever had. We should become more familiar with the needs of the mission-fields, and with the nature and extent of the work that the church is doing. We should seek to kindle missionary interest among our friends as in no former year. We should pray as never before for the cause of missions. We should give more than in any former year.

Some idea of the difficulties of city evangelization may be gotten from a statement by the president of the Methodist Church Extension Society, that within one square mile of New York City there are 20,000 people, nine-tenths of whom are foreigners born and speak 30 different languages. Yet no work is more important just now than that which needs to be done in our great cities if they are to be saved for Christ. The real heathenism that is found in many of them is appalling. One of the most hopeful movements is that which looks toward the regeneration of the slums. In London and now in New York there have been an arousing of the people who promise much. The work should go forward till all the cities have been cleansed. One of the saddest things about the slums is that they are fed from the churches and Sunday-schools and from Christian homes. The people there have fallen out and have drifted downward to where they now are. Many of them have memories of better days, even of holy things. In our prayers at the monthly concert, the effort to evangelize our cities should have a place.

One of the addresses of President Storrs at the recent meeting of the American Board closed with these strong words: "It is a sadly critical time in the progress of Christ's kingdom, with all the world uprising before us, with wealth enough and men enough to meet the need, with only the spirit to use them wanting. Let us settle it in our minds that the world is not to be converted to God by good people sitting in pews and listening to sermons, even the best, or sitting in rocking-chairs and reading good books. The work is vast, difficult, possible—a work that calls for the labor of enthusiasm, for prayer and tears, for sweat-drops, and, perhaps, for blood-drops. Contributions of money are not enough. Our very life must be in it, in the temper of the divine self-sacrifice. But what a privilege and joy thus to work in it, with God himself and all the saintly spirits of the earth, now and forever! Is it not the grandest testimony to the magnificence of human nature that God made us co-workers, not in the primary work of creation, but in the grander work of redeeming the world? In this work we can make our lives luminous in this world, and bright forever with a celestial glory in the next."

For a good while the burden of the prayers at monthly concerts was for the opening of doors, the breaking down of barriers. Now from all the fields comes the cry that the doors are open everywhere, and that the want is for men to go in and occupy them. Later the prayers were for men and women who would go to the opening fields. These prayers have been answered, too, in most wonderful manner, and to-day there are 6,000 young Christians in our country alone who have volunteered for mission work, and are ready to go wherever they are sent; and now the cry from all societies is for money. Thus the responsibility for the work is thrown back upon Christian people themselves. God has done his part in opening doors and inclining men and women to be willing to go as missionaries; he has answered our prayers. Are we going to fail him now? Said President Gates, in an address at the last meeting of the American Board: "Oh, my brothers, what answer can we give for ourselves before the judgment throne of God, if this glorious work of preaching the gospel of light to dying men is checked and dwarfed, and falls of its glorious possibility, because we who are God's stewards hold fast to God's money for our own selfish uses? There is a time when the Almighty Banker of the universe calls in his loans."

THE LOTTERY.

The Lottery Struggle.

The struggle in Louisiana to free the State from the clutches of the lottery goes on with increasing intensity. The Boston Traveller says that the anti-lottery people of Louisiana are more hopeful than heretofore of defeating the proposed constitutional amendment through which the friends of the great swindle hope to perpetuate their control of the State.

The forces massed by the lottery people are tremendous. All that money, corruption, and the combined powers of evil can do will be exerted in its favor. The bribes offered are such, perhaps, as never have been equalled in the civilized world. This lottery company offers to give to charities, to the support of Confederate soldiers, and to public objects for which the people are taxed, the large sum of one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year for twenty-five years, provided that its charter shall be renewed. Not only will this tremendous corruption fund be brought into service, but it is said that it has millions of money set aside for the purpose of being expended in any way that may be necessary to carry the measure through. The potency of its power is such that many of the official powers of the State are under its influence. It is even said the Supreme Court of the State has by this means been influenced to render a decision in its favor.

If the corrupting influence of this monstrous institution were confined to the State to which it appeals for a renewal of its charter, it would be so much to be thankful for. But it is not Louisiana alone that is compelled to suffer. Its ramifications reach into every city and hamlet in the Union. Thousands of youth, men, and women in every State succumb to its seductive attractions. As one of its arguments to the people of Louisiana in favor of the renewal of its charter, the Lottery Company asserts that ninety-three per cent of its receipts come from beyond the State. Its receipts being twenty-two millions a year, this would mean that twenty and one-half millions of dollars are poured into the treasury of this fraudulent concern from the hard earnings of people outside of the State of Louisiana, leaving one million and a half, or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars more than the Lottery Company proposes to pay back to the State; to come from the State of Louisiana itself.

This tremendous drain of the lottery upon the States outside of Louisiana, and its widespread corrupting influence, give to it the importance of a national question. If the people of Louisiana are so morally paralyzed that they fail to throttle this great monster, other States should come to the rescue by so effectually closing up the avenues through which the lottery works, and making penalties for violation of the laws so severe that the evil will be largely confined to the community that permits it to exist.—Methodist Recorder.

The fact that the vote upon the constitutional amendment in Louisiana, involving the continuance of the lottery, does not take place until next April, should not cause the press to postpone discussion of the matter. It is stated that agents of the lottery are actively at work among the negroes with the most wholesale corruption. It is expected that the Democrats and the Farmers' Alliance will vote on an anti-lottery programme. But even should this be carried out, it is not certain that the Lottery Company will not carry that day. The whole country has an interest in the matter. The action of the postoffice authorities has not only not killed the snake, but public sentiment throughout the land should be brought vigorously to bear on this demoralizing fraud.—Watchman.

The Lottery Condemned.

The people of Lincoln county, in mass meeting, denounce the gambling monopoly and express their sympathy with the patriotic people of Louisiana who are fighting it.

Whereas, Our sister State, Louisiana, has been plunged into an unparalleled state of excitement and struggle, by a proposition submitted by a combine of gamblers, to have re-chartered the Louisiana Lottery Company; and

Whereas, The moral and upright citizenship of that State are making a heroic effort to repulse the infamous proposition to sell their State, politically, socially, financially and morally, into the unclean hands of an infamous combine of gamblers; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the citizens of Lincoln county, in mass meeting assembled, that we most heartily sympathize with the true Democrats of Louisiana in their splendid struggle against the Lottery Company.

Resolved, That we most heartily and enthusiastically endorse the superb ticket, headed by the dauntless Murphy J. Foster, named by the State Democratic Convention, held at Baton Rouge, on the 18th ultimo.

Resolved, That we send sincere congratulations and hearty good cheer to every true son and daughter of Louisiana in their courageous fight for the honor and safety of our fair sister State.—Leader.

Presbytery of New Orleans.

The following paper, offered by Dr. Palmer, was unanimously adopted by a religious vote:

In view of the fact that, under the ruling of a point of law by the Supreme Court, the re-charter of the Louisiana Lottery—or rather the grant of a new lottery franchise for another term of twenty-five years—is now open and declared issue to be soon determined by the popular vote, the Presbytery of New Orleans, having its domicile in the same city with this huge iniquity, feels constrained to warn those under its jurisdiction of the danger of having it fastened upon the Commonwealth, perhaps forever. Fully persuaded that its own constituency is a unit in opposing the existence of an institution which saps the foundation of both private and public honesty; the Presbytery appeals with the greater confidence to them to relax neither their vigilance nor zeal until this corrupting influence shall be buried beneath the vote of the people beyond the possibility of a resurrection.

The magnitude of the lottery evil is shown incidentally in Postmaster General Wanamaker's statement in his annual report, that the revenue of his department suffered a loss of a million dollars last year from the suppression of lottery mail matter. It also shows that the law was a large success. But if a million dollars were paid to the postoffice alone, how vast an evil must the lottery have grown! Some one has estimated the total loss from this form of gambling at one hundred millions annually. The Louisiana Lottery Company was rapidly making us a nation of gamblers. The evil is only scotched, not killed. The work of reform at this point of public morals must not be relaxed. The lottery is one of the most successful devices to ruin. Fight it to the death.—Western Christian Advocate.

$100 Reward. $100. The readers of the ADVOCATE will be pleased to learn that there is, at least, one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address: F. J. "Strange cures cured by my Medical Discovery come to me every day. There is one of Paralysis—Hindness—and the Grip. Now how does my Medical Discovery cure all these? I don't know, unless it takes hold of the hidden poison that makes all this humor."

VIRGINIA CITY, NEVADA, Sept. 9th, 1891. Donald Kennedy—Dear Sir: I will state my case to you: About nine years ago I was paralyzed in my left side, and the best doctors gave me no hope for recovery, and I was advised to try your Discovery, which did it, and in a few months I was restored to health. About four years ago I became blind in my left eye by a spotted catarrh. Last March I was taken with La Grippe, and was confined to my bed for three months. At the end of that time, as in the shirt, then it struck me that your Discovery was the thing for me, so I got a bottle, and before it was half gone I was able to go to my work in the mines. Now in regard to my eyes, as I lost my left eye, and about six months ago my right eye became affected with black spots over the eyelids did the left eye—perhaps some twenty of them—but since I have been using your Discovery they all left my right eye but one, and thank God, the bright light of heaven is once more making its appearance in my left eye. I am wonderfully astonished at it, and thank God and your Medical Discovery. Yours truly, HANK WHITE.

Notice.

The Executive Committee appointed by the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is requested to meet in the ADVOCATE office, 112 Camp street, on Tuesday next, Jan. 12, at eleven A. M., to consider important business. The committee is composed of the following members: J. M. Board; S. S. Keener, J. B. A. Ahrens, W. C. Black and J. D. Cameron.

BRIEFS.

An esteemed and prominent brother in the North Mississippi Conference sends us an appreciated New Year greeting, and adds some watch-words which we and all other Christians hope to bring to success all along through the year. He says: "Down with lottery! Down with whisky! Down with Sunday desecration! Down with lying and fraud in high and low places! Up with the Cross, on every rampart—over every door—on every way-post—in every mart!" all of which we say, AMEN.

During seventy-five years the American Bible Society has received for its missionary and benevolent work $2,936,340.88, besides remittances for books and income from other sources amounting to $10,928,621.27, making a grand total of $20,864,962.15. The sources from which the benevolent income of the society has been derived are as follows: From churches, $735,649.70; from individuals, life memberships, etc., $1,682,225.85; gifts from auxiliary societies, $3,055,824.56; from legacies, $4,462,640.77.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Young Men's Christian Association, of this city, gave their annual lunch in the association rooms, Jan. 1. The friends of the Association attended in good force to participate in the New Year greetings and partake of the generous lunch that was spread. Everything passed off pleasantly, and many were the good wishes and not a few devout prayers for a more abundant success to crown the efforts and work of the Association in our midst. The editor and publisher and clerks were treated with distinguished attention. May God bless the Association, and make it a great power among the young men of our city!

Among the important educational movements of the day, we must give a foremost place to that which has just been inaugurated by a society known as the Patriotic League, incorporated at Washington, last month. The idea and general plan of the new organization originated with Mr. Wilson L. Gill, formerly of Columbus, Ohio, who is widely known in connection with the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and other patriotic organizations. The society will follow, in general, the lines of work which have proved so successful with the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, confining its educational efforts, however, to the promotion of the science of government in the widest and most popular sense of that term. It will proceed upon the conviction of the great need existing for a more specific and thorough course of training for the young in those studies having to do with the affairs of government and citizenship. Its specific aim will be to encourage and develop a spirit of rational, ennobled and practical patriotism in the youth of America on basis of right character.

Die and Be Something.

If we had written the caption, "Die and go to heaven," it would have been regarded as commonplace of the commonest kind, for every Christian expects to do that, and a great many who are not Christians expect to do the same. But having written the caption as it is, you have been attracted to read and see what it can mean. Well, we don't want you to die and go to heaven, because you are not ready for heaven, and heaven is not yet ready for you. Our Lord said, "I go to prepare a place for you," but it is not ready for you, because you are not ready for it. Hence we write not, "Die and go to heaven," but, "Die and be something."

This is what we mean. Take our Lord's illustration about the grain of wheat, and you will see a great truth proclaimed, and that truth is: "Die and be something." Jesus said: "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die it abideth alone, but if it die it beareth much fruit." If the grain stays as it is when planted—if it does not die—there is no reproduction. Perfectly sound grains of wheat have been found in the cemeteries of Egyptian mummies. They have lain in those cloths for centuries and have brought forth nothing. Those same grains have been planted and have died and reappeared in a luxuriant harvest.

Now, our Lord says in this same connection: "He that loveth his life shall lose it, and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal." In the spiritual kingdom life comes from death. A man must die unto sin before he can realize the faintest quiver of spiritual life. In the spiritual realm the vigor of Christian life is proportioned to the deadness of soul to earthly and carnal things. The growth of the Christian life in power and influence depends upon the largeness and continuousness of self-sacrifice. Spiritual life takes root in the dead self, and its continuous growth depends upon the continuous deadness of self. When self revives spiritual life dies. We die unto self in order to live unto God. Paul said, "I die daily." "What things were gain to me those I counted loss for Christ." He recognized the fact that in order to do something and be something he must die to self—give up everything—count all things loss. He nailed himself to the cross, and thus reached, through the death of the old man, the higher life of the new man in Christ. Having reached that life, he exclaims, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." That higher life was made possible only by the death of self, and when that occurred Paul rose up into all the exuberant life of the spiritual kingdom. Then he began that marvelous work which has been the wonder of all history. Then he began that wonderful life which expanded and grew and bore precious fruits in every part of the Roman Empire, and which is to-day still bringing forth fruits in every part of the globe. He died and became somebody. So let us die. So let us live.

Mississippi Educators in Council.

The Mississippi State Teachers' Association held an interesting annual meeting in Jackson last week. The attendance was large, the spirit of the occasion pleasant, the hospitality of the Capital City generous, the carefully prepared programme admirably carried out, and the discussions able and valuable. Dr. R. W. Jones, of the University of Mississippi, presided, and conducted the business with a skilled hand. The Hall of Representatives was filled with a fine audience on the evening of the twenty-eighth ultimo to hear the elegant address of welcome by Hon. C. H. Alexander, the felicitous response of Dr. Jones, his annual report as president of the association, and a much enjoyed speech by Col. Parker, of Illinois.

In his report as president, Dr. Jones made some practical suggestions looking to better administration and a broader educational policy. Among other interesting facts he gave the following:

He had come to Mississippi in 1876, and found one State institution of learning; now there are three, with 850 students. The number of white teachers in the State was 4,334, with 321,787 school-children in 1889. In 1891 the teachers number 7,564, children 327,762. In 1880 the amount of money appropriated for school purposes was $758,000; in 1890, $1,169,000; number of public schools, 6,671.

In his appropriate response to the address of welcome, Dr. Jones thus referred to the educational enterprises of Mississippi's capital:

To us as teachers, that which is of peculiar interest is the prominence the place has assumed as an educational center. In addition to those admirable State institutions for the deaf and dumb, for the blind, the commercial college, there are going up now two other enterprises of immeasurable importance. Millsaps College represents the enterprise, liberality and culture of Mississippi Methodists; into it are going not only the money gifts of Maj. R. W. Millsaps and scores of others, but the tact and talent, thought and toil of Bishop Galloway and his co-laborers; in with the very brick and mortar is laid consecration to sanctified learning, the aroma of which will be sweet to the generations to come. Jackson is truly blessed in securing such an institution; her own boys will find collegiate training at home, and boys from all parts of the State will seek the advantages it will afford.

The other of the two referred to, you will know at once is the Mary Holmes Seminary—a gift from the people of a distant State, attracted by the local advantages of this city. The location of both these schools is the testimony of wise people to the favorable outlook of this place. All friends of the colored race will earnestly desire to see this Holmes Seminary a marked success, not only in the intellectual, but industrial training of those for whom it is intended, that they be made pure and virtuous home-makers and home-keepers, as well as intelligent, skilled workers in the business of life. May the generosity of the donors not be misplaced nor mis-directed, and may it accomplish glorious things in the elevation of the negro race!

A number of excellent papers were read, several of them eliciting earnest, vigorous discussion. This was notable in connection with the paper on the "Importance of Making the Course of Study of the High School Preparatory to the University." The entire scope of the high school, its proper organization, equipment, mission, methods of instruction, etc., passed under review.

Another very practical interchange of views was on a paper by Prof. Kincannon on "The Examination of Candidates for License to Teach, so as to prevent abuses." This will, no doubt, stimulate public and professional sentiment to demand a higher standard of qualifications for teachers—one of the pressing educational needs of the day.

"How to Get the Best Educational Results Under our New Constitution," awakened special interest, and elicited from State Superintendent Preston a strong speech, in which he gave the legislative history and present status of education in the State. Other papers which commanded attention and received commendation were a scholarly and discriminating discussion by Dr. W. R. Sims, professor of English in the University of Mississippi, on Tennyson's "In Memoriam;"

"The Modern Woman," by Miss P. V. Orr, of the I. I. and C., and "Music in the Public Schools, and Why It Should Be Taught," by Miss Dyer, of Hillman College.

This is regarded as possibly the most profitable and satisfactory meeting of the association. After adjournment, at noon on Wednesday, most of the teachers, in private carriages tendered by the citizens, visited the Millsaps College grounds and other points of interest in the growing city of Jackson.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are: President, J. M. Barrow, Columbus; recording secretary, L. J. Corby, Water Valley; corresponding secretary, J. C. Hardy, Jackson; first vice-president, R. B. Fulton, University; second vice-president, C. K. Reagan; third vice-president, G. C. Creelman; fourth vice-president, Miss P. V. Orr; fifth vice-president, Miss Boydston.

Executive Committee—Supt. Henderson, Prof. J. R. Preston, Supt. Wright, Pres. T. F. McBeath, Supt. T. J. Woofler, Prof. Dabney Lipscomb, Miss Pauline Orr.

Ministerial Education.

To All to Whom This May Come.

Dear Brethren: We would hereby remind you of our needs and dependence upon you to aid us in the education of the young ministers who have applied to us for help. At our regular annual meeting, during the recent session of our Conference, there were reported three young men as having received aid during the term soon to end at Centenary. One of these is in the senior class and with good prospects of graduation at the next commencement. Dr. Hunnicutt's reports concerning these three were very encouraging indeed. Evidently our money has been well applied.

We are glad to report that so far we have had the means to meet all demands. In order that we may continue these young brethren to the end of the session, it is necessary to appeal to those who have given their notes that they pay the amounts promised. We trust that all who see this may give it attention and send amounts, in whole or part, to our treasurer, Dr. C. G. Andrews, Meridian, Miss., at once. No work should more concern the church than the education of her ministry, and no excuse should suffice to neglect this duty. In the name of the Master and his church, we appeal to all who may see this for aid, much and little.

T. B. HOLLOMAN, Pres.

A Commendable Example.

A writer in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, Rev. W. A. Huckabee, has method in his year's work. Hear him:

I am beginning this year with earnest prayer and fasting, and Bible reading, and church paper reading, and Discipline study, and Conference Minutes study, and study of our history, economy, doctrines and polity as never before, and am trying to profit by all. This year, God helping me, shall be more successful, as God counts success, than any before it.

The first month I propose to give prominence to the circulation of our periodicals—the Wesleyan and Christian Advocate, the Missionary Reporter, the Woman's Missionary Advocate and the Quarterly Review. The Wesleyan comes first. I do this to inform my people at the first of the year concerning our work. I will sell many copies of the Discipline and Conference Minutes also.

The second month I will give prominence to domestic missions, the third to education, the fourth to foreign missions. Then I will give four months to revival work. After this I will give two months to teaching concerning growth in grace.

In October I will bring the claims of our worn-out preachers, their widows and orphans prominently before my people, and in November I will take my church extension and Bishops' collection—still preaching on Christian development.

In September I will preach on the Bible and present the claims of the American Bible Society. I will also observe Children's Day and Advocate Day (I mean month). I have followed the above plan in a measure for two or three years, and by so much as I have been rigid in its observance I have been successful.

I will say this for the benefit of men younger than I: When I fast and pray earnestly on Friday, I preach with unction on Saturday and Sunday.

It seems to us that the foregoing plan might be followed with good success in these parts of the Lord's vineyard. There is nothing equal to regular systematic work.

Louisiana's Young Temperance Women.

Miss Belle Kearney, who last Fall made a tour through Louisiana in the interests of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, speaks in the Mississippi White Ribbon, on this wise of the young women of Louisiana who are engaged in that work:

I found the young women of Louisiana ready to enlist, gladly, in the White Ribbon army. We will have to look to our laurels that they do not surpass us in activity and advanced achievements. From Jackson to Baton Rouge; from Shreveport to Lake Charles and back to New Orleans; from the wide stretch of cotton plantations in the north to the dreamy loveliness of the Teche country in the south, with its magnificent extension of acres in sugar and rice, its orange groves and wealth of flowers and plants; from the picturesque bend of the Ouachita to the rhythmic flow of the Atchafalaya; from the poetic land of Evangeline to the blue waters of Berwick Bay, a new spirit has arisen and found expression in the quickened lives of the girls of that section of our South, that promises to materialize grandly for the uplift of humanity, the broadening and strengthening of the bonds of our Christian faith and of our blessed cause of temperance!

This hearty and beautiful and true tribute will, doubtless, encourage our young women to "double their diligence" in the great enterprise in which they have engaged, and may they be more and more successful as the months roll by!

The "Envious Casca."

"History repeats itself." Mon of the olden time are reproduced, especially the bad men. We reproduce from the Richmond Christian Advocate a couple of paragraphs, which we are ashamed to say are too true:

We marvel how Christian men grade sins. A word let fall on purpose at a dining in the ear of a Bishop at Conference—a crumb of dynamite to damage a minister of God—to smite between the ribs a brother; and if, moreover, it be not a true word, but a smiling slander—how devilish! Or to shrug the shoulders, or even be significantly silent when a man of God is mentioned in connection with some church—

"Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer, And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer."

Is it not the motion of a still-etto in the dark? Or, if he is passing you in honors and fame, pull out your lens and put it over a mole—a prefigurement by nature, and magnify it—what a cowardly stab of jealousy!

Have you not seen a noble fellow who had won victories against the Cimbric, the Gauls, Belgæ—rude enemies of the church—fall under the blade of "envious Casca," and his familiar, "honorable men;" there he lay (rather his reputation—they would not have confronted him) with wounds by the wit of one, by the wanton jibe of another, by the hearsay and whisper of a third.

In the name of the Lord, what can be done to stop this pernicious habit of innuendo among preachers? Will some one give a remedy?

If you want to do a good work this year, we can suggest nothing more profitable than persistent, continuous effort to master yourself. See Prov. xvi, 32.

NOTES.

There are a good many men in this country whose property is all in their "wives' names," and the same may be said about the religion of a good many men.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst says: "The question that confronts us all, is not how many men we can get out of this world into heaven, but how much heaven we can get into the men of this world, and into the entirety of the associate and civic life of this world."

The Central Christian Advocate has this, which we adopt and send forth in our readers and writers:

Any communication sent to the Central office written with a lead pencil, or sent in a roll, unless it be "Home Conference News," has no welcome. The carefully prepared manuscript has always the preference, but some persons do not believe it.

At the recent session of the Louisiana Conference $1,200 was raised for "special" mission work, and $565 for church extension, $100 to reimburse a brother who had been robbed, and $80 to move a brother to a new work. Louisiana preachers and people can suffer more and work harder and get less for it and then turn in and give more than most other people.

We believe that drunkenness is both a disease and a sin. We suspect that sin is the foundation of the disease, and that to effect a permanent cure both phases must be met. To cure the thirst for drink is good, but that the patient may be permanently restored and cured, the grace of God alone can do that. We have very little faith in reformed drunkards who do not become possessed and stay possessed with the Divine Spirit.

The comment of a hearer on a prolix and pretentious preacher was: "He tried to make himself immortal by making himself eternal." Let preachers and prayer-meeting talkers and Sunday-school superintendents not try to win immortality in that way. Condensation is preferable to elongation. Pitch into your subject right away, speak clearly and vigorously, and quit when you get through. The merit of saying too little much overbalances the demerit of a long-drawn-out talk.

In his lectures to students Mr. Spurgeon says: "I aver that no pure mind ought to be subjected to the slightest breath of infidelity from the pulpit. Christ's ministers must be without speck in their lives or stain in their speech." That suits us exactly. There are no words so beautiful and so powerful as "pure words." A preacher that uses any other in the holy place dishonors a pure Christ, puts to blush a pure religion, and ought to quit the practice or vacate the pulpit. We have had enough of this to last for all time to come.

One of the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church Congress, Prof. Grammer, has this to say of the historic episcopate. Speaking of the view that "it is an inherent part of the deposit of faith," he said:

Such a view of any form of church government finds no support in the Scriptures, and is clearly not Protestant. It is the product of the age of Cyprian, and is without catholicity. If such uniformity of organization is insisted upon, and particularly if it is urged in this spirit, the rest of Protestant Christendom will go on its way without us, consolidating more and more, and building up a vast cooperative federation and brotherhood.

The following note from the Sunday-School Times chimes in well with what we have often said on the same subject:

This question of the Bible in our colleges is a burning question. If it be true that any college proposes to take a young man for four of the most important years of his life, and direct his preparatory studies, without giving him an opportunity to know anything about the greatest of all classics and the foremost book in the world's literature, it may well be asked whether that college can fairly be called a well-furnished college, or whether a student has such advantages there as he is entitled to expect from a fairly well-furnished college.

What is called the "dead line" is a great bugaboo to some preachers and also to some congregations. Here is something from the Mid-Continent encouraging both to those ministers "beyond fifty" and to those congregations which "have to endure" such a preacher:

An exchange says: "John Quincy Adams was able to speak with superior intelligence and spirit on great national questions which came up for discussion in Congress when nearly eighty years of age. Hayden was seventy when he produced his masterpiece, 'The Creation,' and Michael Angelo, 'The Last Judgment' when he was sixty-seven. Gladstone is still eloquent at eighty. Bismarck is a mighty man at seventy-seven. Oliver Wendell Holmes is eighty-two, and his poetic genius has not forsaken him." A note of such facts should be made by those church people who think that a minister has crossed "the dead line" who has passed his fiftieth year. That may be true of a few—fact, such passed, "the dead line" long before they were fifty, but it is not true of the majority of ministers. A rule, a minister who has reached middle life is capable of far more usefulness than a young man.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The postoffice address of Rev. W. W. Cammack is Union, Newton county, Miss.

The postoffice address of Rev. J. W. Luter, the treasurer of the Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference, is Wloona, Miss.

The assessments for collections on the Louisiana Conference for the year 1892 amount to $20,252—about one dollar per member. There is no burden in that!

Rev. L. W. Wood, our pastor at Scranton, Miss., had quite a spell of sickness here, but has recovered and goes to his work. We wish him great success.

The postoffice address of the treasurer of Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference is W. B. Thomson, No. 68 South Rampart street, New Orleans, La.

Rev. R. A. Burroughs, P. E., of the Kosciusko district, North Mississippi Conference, will reside in Durant, the good people of that town having provided him with a home for the year.

The cards are out announcing the marriage of our young friend, Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker, of the Louisiana Conference, to Miss Ida Boring, of Homer, La., Jan. 26. We give the young couple our hearty good wishes.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Mary A. Davis, widow of Rev. John S. Davis, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference. She died at her home in Opelousas, La., Dec. 30. A good woman has gone to her reward.

We call special attention to Bro. T. B. Holloman's brief article on Ministerial Education on the fourth page of this number. There is no subject of more importance to the church. Let those who are specially addressed be prompt in this matter.

Rev. William Wimberly has been transferred from the Louisiana to the Indian Mission Conference, and stationed at Guibrie, O. T. Bro. Wimberly left last week for his new field, carrying with him the good wishes of a host of friends.

We clip the following from the Daily Clarion, of Jackson, Miss.:

The Rev. E. H. Mounger and family have reached the city and are comfortably domiciled in the district parsonage. Mr. Mounger is a scholarly gentleman, an able preacher, a son of the late Judge Mounger, and is a welcome citizen to Jackson.

Of Bishop Duncan, the Arkansas Methodist says:

"At our three Conferences in this State both preachers and laymen generally were clearly impressed that he is a wise, deeply pious and fearlessly faithful general superintendent, and he grew most in the admiration and esteem of those having longer and more intimate acquaintance with him."

The Western North Carolina Methodist speaks thus of a man well known to our readers:

"Bishop Galloway is making a wonderful impression upon the church and country at large. He bids fair to become the leading light in Southern Methodism. His ready wisdom, wit, point and good cheer" distinguish him as a great man."

At the late session of the Mississippi Conference Rev. H. Bradford was transferred to the Northwest Texas Conference, and appointed to Wortham circuit. His address is Wortham, Texas. We are sorry to lose Bro. Bradford, and trust that in the Empire State he will find plenty of work for his willing hands.

We are much pained to learn of the death of Mrs. W. A. Gunning, of Natchez, Miss., which occurred on the 31st ultimo. Mrs. Gunning was the daughter of the late Captain Reynor, who during his lifetime was a well-known citizen of Natchez. Bro. Gunning has been a prominent member of the Joint Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference for several years; and in that capacity won the hearts of all the brethren, who will sympathize with him in his sore bereavement. A suitable tribute will be given at an early date.

The Brookhaven Leader has these two personals in regard to two prominent Mississippi Methodist preachers:

Rev. J. M. Weems and his estimable wife, for the past three years missionaries to Mexico, arrived in Brookhaven last Monday. Dr. Weems to assume charge of the pastorate of the Methodist Church, to which he was appointed at the late meeting of Conference. Rev. J. M. Weems is a native of Mississippi, and was appointed to the position of presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, and was an honored and esteemed citizen of Brookhaven, and we doubt if anyone who could have been selected as Pastor-Huntley's successor would have been more warmly welcomed by our people generally than he.

Rev. W. H. Huntley, who was appointed at the recent Conference to the pastorate of the Methodist Church in Brandon, will leave with his family next week for his new charge. Mr. Huntley has served as pastor of the Brookhaven Church for two years, and by his culture, affability and genial manners has greatly endeared himself to our people, who see him depart with sincere regret. By the departure of Mrs. Huntley, Brookhaven, her home since childhood, loses one of her dearest, purest and most lovable daughters, whose place in the esteem of all who know her can not be filled.

For the coming three months Rev. B. M. Palmer, D.D., will teach the International Sabbath-school Lessons, every Friday, at 7:30 p. m., in the lecture-room of the First Presbyterian Church, Lafayette Square, under the auspices of the Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers' Union of the city. All are invited to be present.

At the Christmas celebration in Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., Bishop Galloway, in his usual felicitous manner, presented a handsome gold watch to Rev. D. A. Little, who had served the Jackson district four years. This watch was the gift of the district, and shows the high esteem in which Bro. Little was held. While the General Conference was in session in St. Louis, May, 1890, the district presented him with a purse, and the two Methodist Churches in Jackson presented his wife with one, and they were requested to visit that august body.

Do not fail to go to P. Werlein's music store and examine his choice stock of Pianos, Organs, Violins, Guitars, brass and other musical instruments.

From personal knowledge we recommend our readers needing photographs to go to the artist, E. Simon, No. 123 Canal street. None better in this city.

The African savage considers an English or American woman hideous because her front teeth are white and not extruded, and her lips colored by a copper ring. Similarly the average American or Englishman can see no beauty in the Nubian belle, whose smile brings her lips on a level with her eyebrows, and draws her nose back of her ears.

Much depends upon the theory and the point of view, but there is one thing that all men, the most civilized as well as savage, admire in a woman, and that is the possession of a wealth of hair.

It is a duty that every woman owes to herself, as well as those around her, to take the best possible care of what hair she has, and recover whatever she may have lost. That this is what has been done in hundreds of cases by the use of the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer can be substantiated by letters from every part of the country.

Ladies have used it, and it at once stopped their hair from falling out; the scalp was refreshed so that in some cases headaches ceased; hair began to grow where it was thin, or where there was none at all; and finally they rejoiced in full and luxurious suits of hair. This is what the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer does, and it needs but a single bottle to prove its virtues. Apply to your druggist, or send to the Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

The Brookhaven Leader has removed to Jackson, Miss. It will champion the Alliance and Prohibition.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption. When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address: Oradock & Co., 1023 North Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A year has passed by since an invitation was given through me by a friend, who is a layman and a responsible business man, to nine others to join him in paying yearly $100 each for the purpose of sending a missionary to Japan and supporting him while there. Four men have responded—only four out of the scores and hundreds who are able to join in this good work.

The invitation remains open, although one of the four will not expect to be one of the ten unless the other five make themselves known to me by Feb. 1. Will they do it? Where are our men of means? Where are our women of wealth? Why do they not avail themselves of this opportunity for direct, personal missionary effort and enterprise? What an opportunity such combined, concentrated effort presents for communicating with the workers in the foreign fields, for ascertaining the needs and learning the results!

Bishop Haygood and His Missioners.

Bishop Haygood passed through New Orleans, on the second instant, en route for California from Georgia, with reinforcements for our work on the Pacific Slope. Revs. D. M. Edwards, Fletcher Gilbreath, J. F. Tyson, John J. Kenney, Henry Branham, J. O. Davis, B. H. Greene, A. A. Tilley and L. W. Green composed the band of missionaries, several of these brethren having families who go with them to share the toils and triumphs of the work. Miss Pauline Dunlap, daughter of Rev. W. C. Dunlap, of the North Georgia Conference, went with the party to Laredo, Texas, where she will teach under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions. The entire party numbered twenty-nine.

This is the second band carried by Bishop Haygood to the Pacific and Los Angeles Conferences, the former having gone out in October—Revs. S. H. Dimon, H. T. Ethridge, W. T. McDowell, Wiles L. Pierce, John S. Jenkins and W. E. Vaughn—all from Georgia.

To Pastors and Stewards.

Are you troubled about the finances of your church? I have a system which solves the financial problem. It is scriptural; in thorough accord with the requirements of our Discipline, and perfect in all its details. The plan is endorsed by our Bishops, and highly commended by all who have tried it. It differs in essential features from any other plan yet devised, and these very points of difference make the system a success. This plan can be introduced to advantage any time during the year. Send two-cent stamp for full description and samples of supplies to:

Information.

MR. EDITOR: I notice that at your Conference, which met at Brookhaven, a few weeks ago, there was a committee appointed whose duty it is to learn where the last resting-place of Lorenzo Dow is.

I would say for the benefit of said committee that the traditional place is under a large elm tree on the bank of Amite river, near the little town of Grandville, La.

Work for God.

Having just received a copy of the ADVOCATE, in which I find an article on Bro. T. W. Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference, under the cap-ion of "Friendship Sunday School," I am inclined to write a few suggestive sentences with reference to working for God.

God never created anything in the world of angels, worlds or men, that he did not place under specific government, the obedience of which demanded activity. He made the angels, and gave them their mission or work in heaven, which was to love, honor and obey him in eternal fields of felicity.
He created the visible worlds that look so temptingly in space above us, around us, the revolutions of which were unrecognized by those who lived in the dark ages of the world; but, as mankind began recovering from the damaging effects of the fall, in that the race was traveling in the direction of the Cross—the great light of all worlds and all heavens—and when that light began penetrating the minds and hearts of men, poor perverts were enabled to push back the darkness that had intervened between man and God so long, and announce to the world, by the aid of telegraphic inventions, that those shining stars were moving worlds. Now, it is universally known by all intelligent persons that numberless bodies are constantly engaged filling the purpose for which the all-wise Creator designed them. Roll on, ye mighty worlds, with your lamps trimmed and burning!
Also, when our heavenly Father made man, he placed him in a delicious garden, and told him to dress it and keep it; and when man failed to do the work God told him to do, he got himself and posterity into a gulf of misery, out of which there is no possible way of escape, save in and through Christ. And to come on down to the history of the Word made flesh, and dwelling among us, and learn the truth as presented to us by the great Teacher in the New Testament Scriptures, we can not find where he ever performed the sins of a person but that he commanded that some kind of work be done. Hence the injunction, "Son, work to-day in my vineyard," means as much to-day—if not more—as it did when it was first spoken.

So, dear brethren of the ministry, this be up and doing while the lamp of life holds out to burn, for the night of death is coming, when no man can work. Let us preach a working, as well as a believing, salvation; and in proportion as our number of workers increase, in like ratio we shall increase our velocity of leading this world to God.

I had the pleasure of serving the Friendship Sunday-school, Bro. Lewis working as, as pastor for three years, during which time I—with their faithful superintendent, Bro. J. A. Lewis—taught the doctrine of working for God.
It did my heart good to see in the columns of your last issue the names of forty little workers, about three-fourths of whom I took into the church during my pastorate. May Heaven bless them and give us more such Sunday-schools! Give the children something to do, that they may feel their personal obligations to the church, and identify themselves as workers together for God!

Please allow me hereby to announce to the children of Friendship that I am now at work for God in the Northwest Texas Conference, having been transferred here by Bishop Hendrix from the North Mississippi Conference, at its last session.

Well, I have wound about with my working proposition until I have struck
Texas; and, as I am such a new-comer,
I shall not attempt to tell the dear brethren anything of our wonderful Methodism in this great State, as they requested, and as I promised to do, but will await a more convenient time, when my thoughts will be more matured. It will suffice for the present to say that there is plenty of work here to do, and it is being done in Texas style—on galloping ponies.

Mr. Editor, if your editorship and district do not give you all the work you can do, come to Texas and spread yourself. Pray for us.

The Adornment of W. C. T. U. Women.

In a recent issue of The Church Union there appeared an editorial containing kindly criticisms of some people who figured extensively at the National Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, lately held in Boston. Among many observations made were the following:

"This was the first time that we had heard Mrs. Harris, who had charge of the music during the entire convention. . . Mrs. Harris' personality is pleasing to those who can forget or fail to see her prominent ear-rings and the everlasting curls of hair which cover her forehead, destroying the contour of an otherwise pleasing face.
We have no special mission respecting the adornment of W. C. T. U. women, and it is not pleasant to hear complimentary—or the opposite, remarks respecting how the outer man shall be clothed; but the little things always add more or less weight to real, genuine talent and ability."

Unlike Mrs. Grannis, I feel that I have "a mission respecting the adornment of W. C. T. U. women," and it has been in my heart for months to write an article on this very theme.
Now, it seems, is the accepted time.
As long as there is a frivolous, fashionable world, and vain, self-centered feminine characters wedded to the pompe and show of a material existence, just so long will there be jeweled, bedecked human beings; but, when a woman steps out upon the high ground of a strong and pronounced individuality, and catches the spirit of this matchless age, with its constantly evolving and uplifting tendencies;
when she has declared her acceptance of the principles of a philanthropy, broad as humanity and deep as the love of God; when she has gained an insight into the pain and sin and need of the world, and consecrated herself to the Master's service for the help of such as this, then it is that the wonder comes: How can she reconcile it with her better self to appear as her weaker sisters, who have not "come into the kingdom" of a broadened, deepened, heightened, glorified "life hid with Christ in God?"

Note the inconsistency of a W. C. T. U. woman appearing upon a public platform, representing, ostensibly, an advanced constituency, "professing godliness," and undertaking to discuss such subjects as, "The Traffic in Law-—Human and Divine," "The Emancipa-tion of Woman," "The Holiness of a Christ-Life Necessary to a Successful W. C. T. U. Worker," etc., and all the while blinding her audience at every turn of her head by the glitter of "solitaires" in her ears, or the diamond pin at her throat, or making them nervous by the glare of the rings on her fingers, and the all and slide of bracelets on her moving wrists.

It is impossible to repress the dawn of a slow smile—one-third of pity, two-thirds of cynicism—when one of these good sisters, robed in "gowns" of the latest cut and finest texture, and blazing with costly jewels, rises at a private business meeting of the W. C. T. U., or in open convention, and says, with a delightful intonation of the voice and a mournful jerk of the oranium:
"Dearly Beloved: Our treasury is almost, if not quite, empty, and the needs of the work numerous and pressing. The Lord only knows what we are to do to relieve the situation. Let me urge upon each of you the neces-

Louisiana Avenue M. E. Church, South.

The beginning of the Louisiana Avenue Church dates back into ante-bellum times. It was originally the Laurel Street Church, and was built by Richard Keen, of blessed memory. In April, of 1853, its first charter was had. During the war it was moved from Laurel street to the corner of Magazine street and Louisiana avenue, and in 1866 was chartered as the Louisiana Avenue M. E. Church, South. It has had a very remarkable and honorable career, and very many precious souls have been born unto God at its altars. It has had among its pastors men eminent in Methodism. Of one of them, the sainted Bishop Linus Parker, it is remembered that it was always with real delight he preached from its pulpit to the faithful and intelligent people who, through the years, have made up its congregations. It is hoped that by the first of June the new building, as set forth in the cut above, will be ready for dedication. The auditorium of the new church is to be about 60x50, the inside finish of high order, and the entire structure, inside and outside, of such a character as to reflect credit upon the growing congregation who are to occupy it. The late pastor, Rev. Wm. Wimberly, has been transferred to Gutrie, O. T., and Bishop Keener has put the church for this year in charge of Rev. Jno. T. Sawyer, who thus returns, after fifteen years, to his first charge. Mr. W. B. Thomson, superintends at Louisiana Avenue one of the largest and liveliest Sabbath-schools to be found in Louisiana Methodism.

ality for greater personal sacrifice and increased activity in raising funds to meet the growing demands of our sac-cred cause; but, if we have patience, and trust in God, he will make the way clear for us. Let us pray.
When, if one of the "solitary" small fortunes from one car-dependent were given to "our sacred cause," it would pay it out of debt forever and a day; or support a room in a hospital for the physical comfort of some of God's poor, or carry the bread of life to many a starving and famishing soul.

Frances E. Willard is certainly a paragon among women. She has sounded the depths of things human and spiritual, and from the serene mountain-tops of a perfected life stands fair and shining—untrammeled. In some of her writings she says she discovered that a little trinket—a ring, perhaps—stood as a barrier between her and Christ, and she had to discard it, along with the remainder of her jewelry, save a needle pin, before she could hold unobstructed communion with him, and reflect his image in her daily walk and conversation.

Oh, friends and comrades, let us "lay aside every weight that doth so easily beset us, and let us run, with unhindered feet, "swift and beautiful,"
"the race that is set before us!"

"The world judges the work by us.
Let us build up, not tear down; let us advance, not stand still! In all things, and at all times, "study to show thyself approved unto God."

MARION OWENS.

Leaders of Men.

President Yates, of Amherst College, delivered before the alumni of that institution, Dec. 29, 1891, an address which we find in the Christian at Work, and from which we make some apposite extracts. Having said, "Where-ever you work, and as long as you live, you are bound to be dispensers of ignorance, hearers of light and help to men," he continues:

To do this we must live strong lives ourselves.
It is not because scholars have ideas, that self-styled "practical men" now and then venture to sneer at scholars as "visionaries." It is because scholars do not live by those ideas! We must hold to ideas and enforce them in our own living, if we would win respect both for the truth and for ourselves!

The world looks to us to live by those ideas which are the life of the soul!

A CLEAN LIFE IN POLITICS.

Let us live up to the level of our own best thinking, in our social and political relations as well as in our private life. Since our conviction is clear that there is no reason why public office should be regarded as "the spoils" of a successful campaign, let us stand for civil service reform. Let us speak out clearly on all occasions, in favor of clean, honest administration of city and State government, and against jobbery and trickery of all kinds in elections and in administration. Let us not allow our standard of morality to become lower in political affairs than in business affairs. Since we know well that buying a vote is a sin and a disgrace, a wrong to the manhood of both buyer and seller, and the greatest danger that threatens our free government, let us speak out against it, whoever does it!
Whatever the social position, the wealth or the influence of the man who is guilty of buying votes, or attempting to gerrymander a district, whether he belongs to our party or not, let him know, and let the community know, that you hold him criminally guilty!
The quiet toleration of what we know to be immoral will undermine our own principles and relax our own moral tone.

BE HELPERS OF MEN.

To do this we must be leaders and masters of men in the highest and best sense. We must lead by first climbing the hard places ourselves that we may help others up. We must do more work and better work than other men.
We must study most assiduously to be useful, for all men who succeed in life are life long students of that in which they succeed. We must put into our life more of self-sacrifice; for it is only by serving others that we can truly be leaders. Our highest wish is that each man of us may attain to what Ruskin has well called "the one pure kingship," that which consists in a stronger moral state and a truer thoughtful state than that of others, enabling you, therefore, to guide them and to raise them toward a better life.

How can we attain to this state, and by noble service keep ourselves "true kings of men?"

Be helpful! Communicate ideas!

Give out moral energy! Let the light we have shine! We do not lose moral or intellectual power by giving an impulse to our neighbor. There is the difference between mechanical forces and intellectual, moral, social forces. If you give your neighbor a "cut-off" with half the electric current that lights your house or runs your factory, your own house must go half-lighted, your own factory can do but half its work.
But when you give him your best thought and your heartiest, friendliest sympathy, there is more light, more warmth, more power for you both. By giving, you gain! Your own thoughts become clearer. Your own conviction is more intense. Your own power of right feeling and right willing is strengthened. By such unselfish efforts for others, we keep the horizon broader, and the heart fresher.

HOW GAIN SUCH POWER TO HELP.

To do such service we shall need a steady fire of love in the heart. To overcome inertia in ourselves and in others, not to be overawed and silenced by the numbers of the quill, the timid, and the vicious who oppose all changes for the better; to make our way up steep grades of moral progress; to draw our load steadily every day, and with our own burdens to bear also the burdens of others less strong than we—this calls for an impelling power constantly renewed and unfailing.

THE SECRET OF A STRONG LIFE.

The early invented locomotives all failed of practical usefulness, because they could not generate a sufficient power of steam. Then came the Ste-vensons, and by their invention of the steam-hast took the very breath of heaven into league with the fires within the engine. The steam that did the first few pounds of work was used to make a vacuum by which the pure air of heaven was hungrily sucked in to feed the fires and make more heat.
This was giving to the world the secret of the power of all our modern locomotives. In this feeding of the fires within by the very winds of heaven, the great possibilities of our modern civil-izing forces stood revealed.

To enable us to do the heavy upgrade work of helpers of the weak and ignorant, to uplift society and raise our fellow-men to higher planes of thought and action, we shall need to have a breath from heaven itself feed the fires of love and life in our hearts.

"This life whereof our nerves are sear,
More life and fuller than we want."

Such life and power as we need in our life-work comes only from God, who feeds our souls with thoughts of himself, with his Truth, which is Life.

We believe, then, that there is an essential fitness in our meeting a body of college alumni in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. As men come to understand the solidarity of interest that binds the entire race, everywhere, the world round, there goes up a yearning cry for that true brotherhood among men which is possible only as men understand the Fatherhood of God. And if college-men are to undertake, with deeper earnestness each year, the duties and responsibilities that belong to "men of light and leading," dispellers of gloom, how can they more hopefully and happily do this than by putting themselves under the leadership of him whom we know as the Eternal God, Giver of Light and Wisdom, and whose glorious, inspiring power for service the Greeks dimly discerned, when they spoke of their Sun-god Apollo as the radiant one "whose bright eye lends brightness and never yet saw a shadow?"

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. M. L. White, Mt. Carmel, Miss.,
Jan. 1: "Just arrived at Mt. Carmel, after four days' travel, through the country from Vancleave. People here gave us a nice reception. On Thursday they brought eleven quilts, nine sheets, nine pairs pillow cases, four pillows, knives, forks, dishes, spoons, towels, corn fodder, and something for us to eat. I believe I am to serve an appreciative people, and believe that the Lord will bless us abundantly this year. Am perfectly satisfied with my work. Brethren are making arrangements to repair the parsonage yard and garden. May the Lord bless these good people!"

DOTTINGS FROM THE DELTA.

"Rolling Fork and Anguilla—F. M.
Keen, Ira F. Hawkins," was the announcement which, on Dec. 14, last, was received with rapt attention by, at least, one of the aforementioned brothers. Rolling Fork and Anguilla are situated on Deer Creek, in Sharkey county, within five miles of each other.
The L., N. O. and T. R. R. passes through both places. At Rolling Fork the road divides, and what is called the Riverside division branches out from the main line, runs via Greenville, and comes back to the main line between this place and Memphis. The soil of this county is of a black loam, deep and inexhaustible in every portion of the county; and it is said that it bids fair to be one of the richest agricultural counties in the State. It is drained by the Sunflower river and the Deer Creek, which flow through the entire length, from north to south, nearly parallel; and at Rolling Fork, Deer Creek divides, the largest prong making almost a right angle with Deer Creek, and flows almost east for nearly five miles, emptying into the Sunflower river. This is known as Rolling Fork, and was so named by an early settler on account of the swiftness of the current immediately preceding its emptying into the Sunflower. The principal products of this county are cotton and corn; and owing to the fact that the cotton crop in this section is about twenty per cent. below what it was last season, and owing to the low price of cotton, our people are somewhat financially depressed, and, as a natural consequence, several small farms, and some larger ones, in the Delta have failed, and the end is not yet. It looks strange to one coming from the hills to see so much cotton in the fields this late in the season. One man informs me that he has one hundred bales yet to pick. The mound builders were quite active in this section, there being probably seventy-five or a hundred mounds in all in this county alone. Some of them are quite tall, towering above the tree-tops.

Nearly all of them in this county are found in groups; most of them are almost round and very regular in form.
Near the town of Rolling Fork one of them has been graded down about half, and a neat residence erected thereupon, which presents a beautiful appearance in this level country.

Methodism seems to have full sway in all this great Delta. Oh, what a responsibility resting upon us! May the Lord help us to measure up to our privilege! The band of this Delta country is the open saloon. This is as noble and warm-hearted a people as you will find anywhere. Some of the most liberal supporters of the church here are those who are not members of any church. Some of these are Hebrews.

Quite a number of Chinamen reside in the bounds of the work. One of these was asked to attend church one Sabbath. He consented to go, started, but on the way he stopped, and said,
"Me got no mon," whereupon he was told that it was not necessary to have money in order to attend church; but he ran back, got fifty cents, and when the basket was passed around, he put it in, and did not take any change back; either. When our people stood up to sing, the Chinaman stood up also, and when the preacher knelt to pray, the Chinaman knelt, and at the same time a member of the church, who occupied the same pew with him, sat upright during the whole prayer. This was related to me by a former pastor of one of these churches; and if he was not so modest, and if he did not belong to that family which requires considerable explanation in order for one to understand just which one is referred to, I would tell his name. At any rate, the story referred to is a true one;
therein lies its beauty.

Bro. Hawkins arrived last week, preached at one of his appointments, Carrey—yesterday, and appears to be very much encouraged by the outlook on his portion of the work. He has four appointments. All of them, save one, is near this place. I preached at Anguilla on the third Sabbath in December, at Rolling Fork on the fourth Sabbath, and at Anguilla again yesterday. Each of these services was attended by large and apparently interested congregations. I have visited about seventy-five per cent. of all the families, both in the church and out of it, who reside in the immediate vicinity of my "doubled-barrel" station.

Our people have taken hold of church work with an enthusiasm that portends good things for this pastoral charge. They have already taken steps to thoroughly repair and refernish the parsonage. When the work they have begun is completed, we will have a very comfortable parsonage.
While this repairing is being done, we are the guests of Col. W. T. Baggard and his most excellent wife. Only those who have been their guests know what it means.

We regret very much to give up our old resident elder; but we receive new one with willing hands and open hearts. We are expecting great things of the Lord for this people. Brethren, pray for us.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY"

BY EMMA BROWN POWELL.

Three women stood together in the chime of old bells, and in the Christmas time. And for a vision, radiant and fair, A heavenly presence, shone before them there! The dear Lord stood revealed, he asked each one.

"In this bright year, for me what hast thou done?"

The first said: "Lord, thy voice seemed calling me."

To distant lands, the messenger to be.

In danger often, yet I have not failed;

Among the heathen I have cast my lot

To teach the faith to those who know thee not."

The second said: "Lord, I have tried to be

A faithful steward, with full hands and feet

I've given of my wealth to feed the poor;

On I've brought hope to those who hoped no more."

Of pain and suffering I have eased the smart,

And taught to thank thee, many a grateful heart."

The third stood humbly there with downcast eyes.

"I have no wealth to give, I am not wise,

Dear Lord, 'tis little I have done for thee;

But I have walked with all in charity,

At others' sins, I, conscious of my own,

Point no accusing finger, cast no stone."

The Master smiled down on the drooping head.

"Whoe'er loves mine loves also me," he said,

"Whoe'er shows mercy shows it unto me;

She hath all graces who hath charity."

Report on Temperance, Louisiana Conference.

Your committee beg leave to introduce their report with the observation that temperance in the use of strong drink is, among civilized subjects, the great evil of our age and country. It destroys more property than flood, fire and earthquake. It destroys more bodies than war, pestilence and famine. It destroys more souls than theft, adultery, and bearing false witness.

But this monster evil, however destructive as a mere machine or missile of death, does more damage by indirect than by first intention. It is the enemy of government: national, state and domestic. It destroys first the happiness, and then the life of peoples, communities and families. It sits on thrones and inhabits legislative halls, and gathers about its bloated form the purple and ermine of sacred justice, and wields ballots more deadly to the prosperity of free communities than bullets. It enters into a league with red-handed crime of every description, and guarantees it life and liberty in exchange for the privilege of reigning and administering poison, pestilence and poverty in a realm of anarchy. In monarchies it is the hand-maid of sedition; in republics and infant communities it is the mammoth disorganizer. Its cost is not so many billions of dollars in excess of material supplies—food, drink and clothing and luxuries—it is the price of a nation's liberties; it is the cost of that which is an estimationless in a realm of morals as star-dust in the gravity of the firmament.

But it not only destroys nations like the decayed States of Europe and the waste lands of the Orient; it strangles mighty civilizations like Africa that have with difficulty come to the birth, and like opium-cursed China, which for five hundred years with benumbed sensibilities, but with infinite yearning of soul, has been groping towards the light. Rum, rape and rebellion—mother and children; the three disgraces—are responsible for the ruin of more men and empires born for greatness, and for more "howling wildernesses" on the map of the world's civilizations, than any other baleful combination of cause and effect than were ever born out of Satan's quiver-full, or selected by him as test weapons from magazines of death. Therefore, when we mention the subject of temperance, let it be with incentive; when we apostrophize it, let it be with double and twisted anathemas.

But not only does temperance smother the living and put down the spring; not only does it destroy cities of men and reap down communities as a scythe-bearing; it kills the immortal spirit of man and stands watch, like Pilate's minions at the sepulchre of the world's Redeemer, over the fair corpse. It says with a tone as loud as Revelation, and an emphasis as broad as the second death, that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven." It says and proves its proposition upon the souls of its victims, that the gospel of glad tidings shall not enter into competition with the gospel of gloom. It drugs the souls that are candidates for heaven with a poison as deadly as the bite of an Egyptian asp, so that for long decades before reigns are said over their names, they "sleep the sleep that knows no waking." If it is the enemy of states and compact, it is the deadly foe of Christianity. If it is opposed to human governments, it assails with savage might and implacable rage the divine. It has said that Christ shall not reign in the earth, and it has entered into a league with all crime to forbid it. It will make desolations to spring up before his advancing armies, and to this end will beat plowshares into spears, and pruning-hooks into Damascus blades. To ignore it as a moral issue, is to invite destruction upon its own terms. To parley with it or to attempt exorcism upon it is worse than serpent taming or exorcism; it is the shortest and most effective method known to our age, and calling of entering into a "covenant with death and a league with hell;" therefore, be it.

Resolved, That, as a body of Christian ministers, we are the uncompromising enemies of the manufacture, traffic and use of intoxicants of all descriptions.

Resolved, That we will preach, teach, and write against the evil of intemperance in all its forms with all the might and constancy of our office as Christian heralds.

Resolved, That we are the allies of all its foes, and the foes of all its allies, and that we will never cease to be the former and the latter, both in word and deed.

J. M. BEARD, Chairman.

Mrs. Carrie Waterhouse.

The subject of this sketch was born in Copiah county, Miss., Oct. 31, 1863, and died in Radford, Va., Sept. 11, 1891. Her maiden name was Steele, and she was a niece of the sainted Elijah Steele, of precious memory. Her parents were thoroughly religious, and she was carefully brought up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord;" hence from childhood she was the subject of deep religious impressions. She yielded to these and gave her heart to the Lord so early in life that she had no recollection of the time and place of her conversion. It seemed that from her earliest childhood she loved and trusted the Savior. But the fact of her conversion was a matter of daily consciousness with her, and she gave to the world the best of all proofs of her loyalty to Christ in a life of exceptional purity. It is not often that we meet with one so faultless as was Miss Carrie Steele, when I knew her and was her pastor in Crystal Springs, Miss. She joined the church at the Henington Camp Meeting, near Crystal Springs, when about ten years of age. She was educated at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., and at Abington, Va. She taught school several years after her education was finished, and excelled in this department of Christian work. At one time she felt moved by the Holy Ghost to give herself to the missionary work, and after much thought and prayer offered herself to the Woman's Board of Missions, and was accepted. But circumstances that seemed providential first delayed and finally diverted her from this field of labor to which she seemed eminently fitted in every way, except in her physical strength.

On Feb. 3, 1887, she was married to Rev. R. G. Waterhouse, of the Holston Conference. She was well adapted to this new position, and while she lived was an abiding inspiration and blessing to her husband. But soon her work was finished on earth and the Master called her to rest. In her last illness her sufferings were great, but she was patient and submissive to the will of God. She said she somehow could not pray to get well, but was always thankful when temporarily relieved from suffering. She was consoling to the last, but did not know she was dying; neither did her friends who attended her. She said, "I am going to faint," and was gone in a few moments.

But we know where she went. And we all know where to find her. Her grief-stricken mother, husband and sister are in no doubt about her translation to heaven. Though she said not a word at the last, her whole life, so pure, so beautiful, so useful, speaks volumes for itself. May the blessing of God attend her little daughter, Edith, who does not know the loss she has sustained in this dispensation!

W. B. LEWIS.

Emory College.

I don't think it would be an exaggeration for me to say that this stands in the lead of Southern Methodist colleges. Its history is of profound interest, and since its establishment in 1837, has been so closely allied to the history of Georgia Methodism, that it is almost impossible to think of the one without the other being suggested.

Among the alumni of Emory College may be found many who stand at the head of Church and State, and a host of others who are doing valiant service for the cause of education in the high schools and colleges of our land. This is the alma mater of Bishops Haygood and Key, of L. Q. C. Lamar; of Dr. Young J. Allen, of China; of our own Dr. W. L. C. Hunt, and last, but not least, of its distinguished president, Dr. W. A. Candler, who, with a corps of fifteen experienced professors, is doing more than has hitherto been done in Georgia for Christian education.

Emory is the property of the North Georgia, South Georgia and Florida Conferences, and its facility for doing more thorough collegiate work has lately been increased by the addition of a chair of applied mathematics and an endowment of $100,000.

Here the greater per cent. of the students are moral and religious, and work to make the others so. Those who feel called to preach the gospel, and hardly think they can spare the time to take a full college course before joining the Conference or going into the missionary work, are impressed with the fact when they come to Emory, that this is the best place for them to work, that here are boys who are not religious and ought to be saved, and that preparation for work is work itself.

The consequence is, that every class in college has a prayer meeting of its own once a week, and a general prayer meeting every Friday evening; the unconverted are brought to Christ, the Christians are built up in faith and the power of God made manifest.

Another fact which gives success to the college, and which should be inseparably connected with all church colleges, is the education of missionaries. Emory has certainly done a great work in this line; she is represented in nearly every mission field. We have now among the students a heathen convert from Corea who expects to return as a missionary to his people, and one from China, whom Dr. Allen sent to be educated here.

Those among the students who expect to be foreign missionaries meet once a week in what they call the "Missionary Band," and pray and talk over the work before them. This missionary spirit at Emory is one of the secrets of its success as a church college, and we can not wonder at the proposition made by Bishop Galloway to establish a scholarship at Millsaps College, to be named in honor of Miss Clara Christman, for educating one young man free of charge for the foreign mission field. No better scholarship could be established at Millsaps, for everyone may be sure that a Christian college to be successful must, like a Christian church, be missionary.

The Third Annual Convention of the American Sabbath Union.

The third Annual Convention of the American Sabbath Union was held in Des Moines, Ia., December 16 and 17. Ample preparations had been made by the local Committee of Arrangements, of which Rev. Dr. Howard A. Johnston, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, Des Moines, was chairman. The audiences were large and deeply interested. From the beginning to the close the utmost harmony prevailed in the deliberations of the convention.

Everyone present seemed to realize the important issues involved in the one great question: How shall the American Sabbath be upheld at this critical period? The papers and addresses, embracing nearly every aspect of the subject, are hereafter to be printed in complete form. The stirring address by Dr. Harriett Johnson, of Chicago, on "Sunday Closing at the World's Fair," the papers read by Mrs. E. H. Slocum, of Iowa; Hon. F. J. Lamb, of Wisconsin; Hon. A. G. Scott, of Kentucky; Rev. Dr. Helwig, of Ohio, and Hon. L. S. Coffin, of Iowa, were all worthy the occasion.

Appropriate memorial tributes were made in reference to the late Rev. Dr. J. R. Taylor, corresponding secretary of the Union, and Samuel C. Brown, Esq., of Philadelphia, an influential manager. The convention closed with impressive religious services at a late hour, December 17, after accepting a cordial invitation to hold the next Annual Convention in Chicago, December, 1892.

At a subsequent meeting of the managers of the Union, the offices of general and corresponding secretary were united, and Rev. J. H. Knowles, D. D., 23 Park Row, N. Y., was elected to fill that position. Rev. H. I. George, D. D., was elected general field secretary. It is understood that Dr. George will spend the month of January in Washington, D. C., in the interest of the cause.

Letter from Mrs. Weems.

MR. EDITOR: We are now in the home-land, and located in Brookhaven. We are among a kind and thoughtful people, and in a healthy place, where we hope, through the blessing of God, to gather some sheaves for our Lord, while Mr. Weems regains health and strength. He has had quite a siege of illness since our arrival. At Troupe, Texas, we had an accident: our train running into a freight. Mr. Weems was standing, and got a severe fall, and a general shaking up, that, with a severe cold contracted on our journey, still keeps him a prisoner in doors.

I hope all our Christian friends in this land will unite with me and our Mexican Christians in praying for the speedy restoration to health of my husband. I reported just before I left Mexico for the church in Mexico ten dollars from Bishop Haygood, and eighteen dollars from Miss M. Lilly Johnston, and now I wish you to credit twenty-five dollars in Mexican currency given me by Dr. West, of Weason, with permission to use as I please, and I gladly place it in this much-needed church. I will send the money to our Missionary Secretary, Dr. John. I hope other friends will send in their names and money, and let our church in Mexico be built, where our poor, suffering friends may hear the sweet words of life and hope that will fit them to live and prepare them for death. Our Lord has seen best to take us from among these people who love us so much; but we will labor for them here, and love them and pray for them and the prosperity of our church in Mexico. May the Lord bless the dear old ADVOCATE during this new year, and make us all active, loving workers in his harvest fields. Pray for us and for our work.

S. G. WEEMS.

Brookhaven, Miss.

Attention, Everybody.

Our little debt is troubling me somewhat, and, with your permission, I propose to start a subscription on the following plan, to wit: Let as many as will send to you what they are willing to pay—Independent of what they have already paid—for those who are either unable or unwilling to contribute toward the payment of the little debt we owe, (Missionary debt.) Just think of it! Less than ten cents per capita. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves, and I feel that I am willing, able and do pay for fifty, at least, of those above mentioned. Please give space for names and amounts for this purpose in the ADVOCATE, with such heading as you see fit. Enclosed please find draft for five dollars, my contribution. Please withhold my name. The Lord has heard our prayers, "opened the doors;" but it will cost us ten cents to go in.

The foregoing is from a brother in Mississippi, and we hereby invite others to join him in filling out the list to help pay the missionary debt.

Religion and Politics.

We call especial attention to the following clipping from an English paper. It is a part of a sermon, and we think it applies to this country, and especially to Louisiana. We beg everyone to read it carefully.

Many of you take an intelligent interest in politics. That religion and politics are incompatible is too transparent a fallacy to need refutation. The day is not far distant when Christians generally will take a more active and conspicuous part in controlling the legislation of the British Empire. And if a healthy Christian sentiment is needed anywhere, it is needed in the sphere of English politics. The politics of this country are dirty, and it will take you all your time to scrub them clean. They would have been dirtier still but for the purifying influence of religion. Christianity is the sweetening salt that is keeping the politics of this realm from decomposing into moral putrefaction. Christians will have to vigorously repudiate the flagrant falsehood that the character of a man's private life does in no way affect his qualifications for public office. Such a shameless avowal is an outrage on the moral sense of the community. That such a vicious doctrine is so strenuously upheld by many of the leaders of the people is a sad comment on the moral state of public politics in England. Our country should blush for the unscrupulous partisanship that is ready to make use of such iniquitous theories to further its unrighteous ends. It is a disgrace to our constituency to choose a titled profligate or a convicted adulterer as its parliamentary representative. It is deplorable that politicians of position and influence should be found ready to sacrifice principles to the exigencies of party, and to resent any interference with their false-called rights as imperious. It will be a sorry day for England when the public conscience will cease to thunder its condemnation of the policy that sets aside great moral principles for party ends. I verily believe that there are men who would vote for the devil if they could secure a majority for their blessed party in the House of Commons. They will move heaven and earth to further the interests of a party candidate, though his honor be stained and his morals worm-eaten and gangrened. They forget that whatever service these leprous politicians render to the State is more than neutralized by the injury they inflict on the moral sense of the community. What a mighty instrument of evil is the vicious supposition that, however notoriously bad his life may be, he has an unquestionable right to a seat in Parliament if legally elected by his constituency! If a man is too loose in his morals to mix up with your sons and daughters in your drawing-rooms at home, he has no right to a place in our Legislative Assembly. Should men whose very breath is a spiritual empoisonment be the chosen law-makers of the people? Are we justified in aiding and abetting men who live in open violation of the sacredness of home life to hold responsible positions in a Christian State? Are we blind to the importance of maintaining the purity of social life? He is a very short-sighted politician who does not see that the loss of home purity and conjugal fidelity would mean the collapse of the British Empire. Every time you vote for these flagitious subverters of morals, you aim a blow at a vital part of the nation's life—home. Remember that clean hands are of more importance to England than clever legislation, and that the House of Commons needs purification, not further contamination. Lift your voices against those unscrupulous journals who are seeking to thwart the national righteousness by howling down the Social Purity crusade, and by injecting subtle poison into the political mind. Denounce the iniquity that would sacrifice the highest interests of the nation in order to further the purposes of a faction. Do not allow the English democracy to be identified with loose morals. Set your faces against the silent forces that are attacking the sacredness of our British homes. Repudiate the unreal distinction between public and private morality. See that your candidates for municipal honors are pure men.

If you vote for an unclean man is a traitor to mankind. It is sad to know that some of the leading lights of the churches are guilty of aiding to elect men whose private life will not bear investigation. Such Christians are unwittingly fighting against God. The churches of this town should be strong enough to make it impossible for a man of known impure life to have a seat in the Town Council, or to hold any responsible public office. How utterly inconsistent it is for Christians to loudly lament the drunkenness and uncleanness of the people, and at the same time lend their aid to secure influential positions for demoralized men! The conduct of Christian people in connection with civic affairs is not only a disgrace to themselves, but a crime against the religion which they profess. A private vote given in the secrecy of the ballot for a bad man will do more harm than all our public protestations against evil will do good. A Christian man should be on the side of morality and Christ in the Council Chamber, and at the polling booth as well as in the church pew. I don't believe in those professors of religion who sing the praises of Christ in public, and who stab him to the heart in private. My dear young friends, I pray that you may have grace to perform your duties as Christian citizens in the fear of the Lord. "Stand four square to every wind that blows," and hold fast your sacred convictions. Fight the battles of morality and religion with a passion that never cools, with a courage that never flags, though by so doing you strike a blow at your temporal interests, and lose the friendships that are dear to you. If ever we needed Christian men to do the right in the teeth of unpopularity, it is today. Whether the tide of public favor ebb or flow, dare to do that which is in harmony with your Christian principles.

Introduction of Religion in Vicksburg, Miss.

The following article on this subject we clip from the Vicksburg Commercial Herald. It was written by Rev. E. G. Cook, who has often furnished interesting historical and biographical articles for the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

This topic may not suit your paper, because its readers are not, I fear, generally religious. Of this you will judge. My statements are made from memory. I am the last man whose recollections reach to the beginning of our city. I lived in the Open Woods, seven miles east of the town, and on Saturday, off days from school, when the other boys would go fishing, I had curiosity to see the town of which there is so much talk at our house. From 1835 to 1835, buying and selling lots and erecting houses for all purposes, were to such an extent as would be called a boom in 1890. The immigrants were largely from Virginia, Kentucky, and the British Isles. They were enterprising, we may infer, from their leaving civilized communities to seek their fortunes in a wild country.

By a common impulse they thought of churches and preachers, to which they had been accustomed, even if not religious. Many of them were educated. To improve their surroundings and the appearance of the town, with the expectation of increasing the value of their property, without primary meetings, they easily resolved themselves into committees of five for each denomination, to provide places to preach in, and to correspond for preachers. For the Methodists, Rev. John Lane, with several others, were trustees. The first services were preaching by the said Rev. Lane in his own blacksmith shop, southwest corner of Jackson and Adams streets, the Bible and hymn book resting on the anvil, the seats made of plank intended for the Methodists arranged to have a local preacher as keeper of a hotel, called Steamboat Hotel, southwest corner of Jackson and Walnut streets. He allowed the circuit rider to preach in the dining-room, service to commence early and close in time to arrange tables and chairs for dinner. The Methodists occupied the court-room from its completion until their church was ready. The Methodist trustees were incorporated by the Legislature. Their successors are W. G. Paxton and others by church and State law.

For the Episcopalians, Dr. W. R. Ray, with others selected by him, procured the visits of a minister of that denomination, Rev. Muhler (pronounced Miller), in the rented court-house, quarterly several times. He was the guest of my brother-in-law, Dr. Ray, at whose house I saw this visitor. I heard this preacher. He was the first preacher I ever heard not a Methodist. I have not forgotten some things, new to me then—strange dress when preaching, or, rather, reading—and then it annoyed me to hear men talking out in service. I found out afterwards that it was a good way for many, who preferred it.

For the Presbyterians, D. L. McCord, a lawyer, with four others, by correspondence, secured the services of a missionary to Vicksburg, the Rev. Z. Butler. He visited Port Gibson also, preferring the latter place. He withdrew from Vicksburg, and lived long in Port Gibson, where he was useful and distinguished in his church. His successor in Vicksburg was Rev. S. B. McRoberts, who preached in the court-house after the Methodist. I was the incumbent of one of the offices in the court-house, and attended the services of the preacher, to whom I became attached.

For the Baptists, B. Springer and others interested themselves to have a preaching place for the denomination. Two Kentucky farmers, by the name of Fisher, brought horses to Vicksburg for sale annually. One of them being a Baptist preacher, was prevailed upon to preach in Vicksburg several times. I have heard him, and recollect his sermon.

For the Catholics, a committee of five interested themselves to make arrangements for a place to preach; a priest should come. Not one of the committee was a member of the church. Dr. Thomas Anderson (who was then a Methodist) was chairman. They were very successful, and raised more than $2,000. They bargained a house on Walnut street, opposite the south end of the United States post building. When the Catholic Bishop came, the first act was to remove the committee, and take possession of the house, money and notes.

Some subscriber who had been a trustee, as among the Methodist did not approve of the new managing church property. He complained through the paper, and the Bishop made reply through the paper, stating the Catholic law in such cases. Dr. Anderson made a communication in the same paper. The effect was that the Catholics took their property in their own way, was too young to take any part in matters, but I saw and heard and read that there should be no immediate preference nor little desire for religion in its true sense. One Methodist trustee framed in the act of insurrection was John L. Gulon, afterwards known as a member of no church. There was no Catholic on the committee of the church. Dr. Anderson was a Methodist, but his second wife being a Catholic, he died in that faith. I don't think there was a Baptist on the committee with B. Springer.

I heard sermons by all of the preachers. As their teaching did agree with my Methodist raising, I came the more established in what I did believe, and still think that the last-named church he not the best, is, at least, a church in which one may be saved.

GEN. BOOTH'S SCHEME.—The report of the first year's working of General Booth's "In Darkest England" scheme shows that during that time sum of £25,000 has been expended, the over-sea colony. Nearly £400 has been absorbed in the purchase and leasing of land for city refuge and workshops. The sum of £111 has been expended on the farm colony. The food and shelter depots have been self-supporting. There has been small deficiency in the anti-sweat workshops. The match factory has given profits of £475 in four months. The knitting factory and book-binding have each earned profits. The operations of the farm show a loss of £11. To establish the labor bureau cost £1, but the bureau has been a great success. There have been 15,000 applicants during the year. There have been supplied 2,381,148 cheap meals, of which 1,097,868 were half-penny dinners, 555 were farthing dinners, and 728 were free meals. Three hundred and seven thousand cheap lodgings were furnished, at fourpence and twopenny per night. The articles produced by the refugees and labor factories realized £15,191. Two hundred ex-convicts were reformed, and 445,170 visits were made to families in the slums. The number of the ill who were attended by the officers working in the time amounted to 10,904.—Christian at Work.

THE ADVERSARY: HIS PERSON, POWER AND PURPOSE. A study in Satanology. By William A. Matson, D. D. 12mo. Cloth. 328 pages. Price, $1.25, postpaid. Wilket, Ketchum, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

Universal attention will be attracted by so able and so sensible a discussion of the great foe to human good. The learned doctor who presents this volume gives with terse and pungent English the fruitage of mature research and study. No work of modern times, if indeed of any age, gives so clear, crisp and compact a picture of the person, power and purpose of the great adversary. He shows the wreck and ruin fallen angels have wrought, and surveys the wide-reaching desolations which have ensued. It is a very encyclopedia of fact and argument relating to diabolical art and influence. Diviners, necromancers, demoniacal possessions, modern diabolism, spiritualism and supernatural forces, occult arts, magic and sorcery are treated, and much is to be acquired for argumentation and teaching by a careful survey of this timely book.

TEMPERANCE.

LICENSED.

BY REV. ADDISON BRADMAN.

1.—FOR THE PEOPLE
 licensed by statute, as wisdom forbade, licensed to ruin, and licensed by law, licensed to destruction, unholy to sell, licensed, the receipt of horrors to swell, licensed, a joint and unhallowed, and tears, licensed, a deluge of terrors and fears, licensed, a torrent of passion and shame, licensed to money, in equity's name.

licensed, a mother's deplorable to efface, licensed to compass a father's disgrace;
 licensed, the infant to rob of its bread, licensed, the mother's pure name, be it said.

licensed to plunder, aye, licensed to kill, licensed, the almshouse and prison to fill;
 licensed, an evil, for Satan's delight, licensed, all it is said for the right—

11.—FOR THE RUMSELLER.
 licensed for money, yes, licensed to sell, licensed by statute, 'tis legal as well, licensed yet may be if only you know, licensed has, also, a message for you.

licensed, the danger of folly to know, licensed, no pitying thought to bestow;
 licensed, to listen to sorrow's appeal, licensed, no thrill of compassion to feel.

licensed from justice and truth to refrain, licensed to harter thy conscience for gain;
 licensed thy noble and good to conceal, licensed, thy sordid and base to reveal.

licensed, to fit your own spirit for hell;
 licensed, the sale of its ruin to sell;
 licensed to be unlamented, and then licensed to wall. Lost forever. Amen.

Alcohol and Death.

LONGEVITY OF ABSTAINERS AND DRINKERS.

Mr. Nelson, the most distinguished English life insurance actuary, after long and careful investigations and comparisons, ascertains by actual experience the following astounding facts:

Between the ages of fifteen and twenty, where 10 total abstainers die, moderate drinkers die.

Between the ages of twenty-five and thirty, where 10 total abstainers die, moderate drinkers die.

Between the ages of thirty and forty, where 10 total abstainers die, 40 moderate drinkers die.

Or, expressing the fact in another way, he says:

A total abstainer 20 years old has the chance of living 44 years longer, or till 64 years old.

A moderate drinker has the chance of living 15 years, or until 35 years old.

A total abstainer 30 years old has the chance of living 30 years longer, or till 60 years old.

A moderate drinker 30 years old has the chance of living 13 years longer, or till 43 years old.

A total abstainer 40 years old has the chance of living 23 years longer, or till 63 years old.

A moderate drinker 40 years old has the chance of living 11 years longer, or till 51 years old.

A Temperance Problem.

The temperance problem is no longer a question of how much restraint can be placed upon a most hurtful and pernicious traffic. The point now to be decided is: Shall the government be named and administered in the interest of the saloons and their patrons?
 Shall the government be directed for the protection, the benefit of the sober, honest, intelligent, law-abiding, industrious and upright citizen, or shall it be controlled by a business that can be dispensed with with less injury than any other authorized by law—a business that makes drunkards and paupers, criminals and lunatics, that converts men into brutes and devils, that is a notorious violator of the law and desecrator of homes? Matters have come just to this pass. The saloon has been active in every election throughout these Northern States, especially during the past two years. The number of liquor dealers and their adversates in public offices has been largely increased during twenty-four months.
 The saloons have been taking governments. They have obtained the control of many. There seems to be no organized movement throughout the North to seize the local governments, and it has attained an alarming success. The saloon has never given any community, and is now incapable of giving, a wise, economical, honest and just government. It is essentially and necessarily corrupt, understanding, unrighteous and vile. The question to be settled is rapidly becoming, shall we have license, or high license, or have no license, but shall we have decent local governments?
 Christian Intelligencer.

Woman is most beautiful when she is most herself and least conscious of it.
 This is well exemplified in the growing girl who, with hair loose and graceful even when blown wildly about, is utterly unconscious that it is her chiefest charm.

How often is this unconsciousness lost in later life, and however successful a young lady may be in arranging false hair, no matter how well it matches, it is difficult to overcome that consciousness of things being "not all they seem," which is often so apparent.

There is absolutely no excuse for anyone depending upon artificial hair, when nature's own restorative powers can be at once aroused and seconded by Louisiana's Creole Hair Restorer, a preparation of which one of the most distinguished women in the country has said that it could "save any woman from being wholly ugly," for no woman is ugly who has fine hair.

It is a purely vegetable compound and at the same time combines a shampoo with a tonic while communicating to the hair and scalp just the stimulus and nutrition required. It has no oil or grease or pomatum, but is nevertheless the most elegant dressing yet devised, softening the hair of its harshness and restoring and regenerating the scalp. Ask your druggist for it or send to Massfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

THE LOTTERY.

National Evil.

The gambling mania has fastened its fangs upon the American people. The Louisiana Lottery is one of the most destructive cancers that our civilization has ever been cursed with.
 It now seems that the anti-lottery voters of that State are in the hopeless minority. It is better to fight the gambling curse and try to abolish it late than never. But vigorous efforts should have been made to thwart the ravages of the enemy long ere this. In some things Americans are, perhaps, too fast, but in many other things we are too slow.

The gambling dens of our cities, betting on horse races, "dealing" in futures, and other forms of gambling have been tolerated by the laws of our land, and now the many-headed monster (gambling) has grown to such immense proportions that he now begins to swoop down upon our land in such a manner as to awaken a sleeping nation from Maine to California.
 The Louisiana Lottery is not a local evil, simply. The citizens of that State invest but little money in the lottery tickets. It seems that a majority of them are for sale, however, and are being bought (their votes) by the lottery company. Unless Congress comes to the rescue our nation will suffer untold injuries from this destructive leech.

The whisky evil has been allowed to curse our country so long, that it now holds the balance of power. The two leading political parties are now dumb on the whisky question. Just as we finished this last sentence the Richmond Christian Advocate came into our hands, and in glancing over the editorial page the following paragraph met our eyes:

"One hoghead of whisky, in the city of New York, judiciously placed, can make or unmake a President."

The influence of the saloon in politics is great. It, however, hurls the cause of temperance to circulate such improbable and impossible things as quoted above. "One hoghead of whisky" can't control sixty millions of citizens so as to settle the choice of the Chief Magistracy of America.

Exaggeration weakens a good cause.
 The statement referred to by Bro.
 Lafferty may not be "nothing but the truth," but there is some shadow of truth about it. A few "hogheads of whisky, in the city of New York, judiciously placed," would doubtless "make or unmake" a President.

The great inflow of foreign emigration is another public evil. We should welcome those to our shores who are respectable at home, but our country should not resolve herself into a scavenger's tub.

There are many other growing evils that need to be looked after by our law-making bodies. Until this be done, we may expect an increase of bloody crimes.—Western North Carolina Methodist.

The Lottery in Louisiana.

The obnoxiousness of the week was not enacted in Washington, but in Louisiana. The great moral struggle to which every decent man's eye must be directed, is that which broke out into open division and conflict in Baton Rouge, where the Democratic Convention was called to meet.

The selfish political interests involved, whether Democratic or Republican, we care nothing for. It is for us and all our readers a tremendously important question whether Louisiana shall be the purchased bondslave of the lottery, and shall corrupt not only herself, but the country as well, or whether the decent men of that beautiful State shall rise in their virtue and hurl the corrupt conspirators from power. The facts in the case are these:

The Democratic party rules Louisiana, because white men rule Louisiana. Therefore the real responsibility of deciding this matter rests upon the ruling Democratic party. The Christian men in the State, the churches have spoken with an overwhelming voice against the lottery. But the lottery controls the vicious, as it controls the political rings in the cities. It bought, or held, the most of those who led the Democratic party. It offered to give the State a million and a quarter annually if its charter might be extended for twenty-five years; that is, it offered to pay the large part of the taxes for schools, asylums, levees, etc. This was a bribe to buy the State. Then it went into the field to buy the delegates to the Democratic Convention, which this year nominates governor and other State officers. The Christian people opposed it, and set up anti-lottery tickets everywhere. In New Orleans the lottery was successful, while in the country the Christian ticket was generally successful. Which had the majority it was difficult for us here at the North to tell; for the dispatches all came from advocates of the lottery.
 It has been very evident that with the pretense of being fair these correspondents colored their reports to the injury of the anti-lottery campaign.
 Every daily paper in New Orleans was bought up by the lottery, and it became necessary for its opponents to start a new paper, The New Delta, to have a mouthpiece. While the Associated Press was telegraphing North that the lottery had a majority of the delegates, The New Delta was constantly reporting that the anti-lottery delegates were in the majority. The explanation is that wherever the lottery was defeated it sent a contesting delegate. The lottery had the advantage that it had the main direction of the machinery, and could control, through the State committee, the admission of delegates.

Hence the split in the convention, or, rather, the two conventions. The delegates never met together, but headed by those members of the State committee who favored either side, they were called in two different halls, each claiming to be the regular convention. The anti-lottery men met first, and drew up a platform in opposition to the lottery. Their difficulty was in selecting a candidate for governor, for there had been an agreement between the anti-lottery forces and the Farmers' Alliance that the latter, which was also bitterly opposed to the lottery, should name the candidate, who was the president of their organization. But he was not a strong man, and was without political experience, and he would be a weak candidate at the polls. In a very generous way he withdrew, although formally nominated, and made place for a stronger candidate, one of the ablest and most popular men in the State.

Meanwhile the Lottery Convention was opened, with the help of some men who pretended to be against the lottery, but who were really pretenders on whom the lottery knew it could count when necessary. This convention heralded all over the country, as the regular convention, or the majority attempted still further to hoodwink the people by nominating as its candidate a man who calls himself anti-lottery, but who, during his four years' term as governor, was always its willing servant and who could be depended on to do its will. With many attempts to deceive the people, the lines are yet drawn sharp and clear for all who want to see. It is no longer a question of Democrat or Republican; it is simply lottery and anti-lottery, and no man has an excuse for voting wrong.

We are thankful to say that all, or nearly all, the churches have spoken very clearly in their Conferences or through their papers. They are in this fight earnestly, which they do not recognize as a political fight, but as a fight for decent morals, and for the good name of the State. We earnestly support them and rejoice in their faithfulness. We can not believe that they will fail.

It is a matter now of immense importance what will the Republican party do. It has been the policy of the lottery to represent that their opponents are playing into the hands of the Republicans, and giving the State over to negro rule. This is not true. We see no evidence that the Republicans are willing to sell the State to the lottery.

The lottery evidently has no hope from them. President Harrison and the last Republican Congress, which passed the Anti-Lottery Postal Law, hold the Republicans of Louisiana pledge against the lottery. Even were the Republicans to work simply for their party advantage, and not for the suppression of the lottery, there is a great deal of sense in what one of the Democratic anti-lottery leaders said, that they would rather have Republicans in power for four years in Louisiana than the lottery for twenty-five years. But we believe that the Republicans of that State will have first in view the honor of the State, and will do what will be of best service to destroy this destroyer of morals and homes. So we would give our earnest voice to all whom it may reach that they overthrow this corrupt organization. Let every Christian of Louisiana and every patriot give his vote where it will tell strongest against the lottery. Let the administration enforce the laws in the strictest way.
 Let Congress make them stronger, if it may. Let us in the North give our sympathy and aid to those who are fighting against this wealthy and unscrupulous iniquity, that the people may be crushed in its last fair.—Independent.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get Strange cases cured by my Medical Discovery.

 I have come to me every day. Here is one of Paralysis—Blindness—and the Grip. Now how does my Medical Discovery cure all these? I don't know, unless it takes hold of the hidden poison that makes all this.

VIRGINIA CITY, NEVADA, Sept. 9th, 1891.
 Donald Kennedy—Dear Sir: I will state my case to you: About nine years ago I was paralyzed in my left side, and the best doctors gave me no relief for two years, and I was advised to try your Discovery, which did it, and in a few months I was restored to health. About four years ago I became blind in my left eye by a spotted catarrh. Last March was taken with La Grippe, and was confined to my bed for three months. At the end of that time, as in the start, then it struck me, and I got a bottle, and before it was half gone
 I was able to go to work in the mines. Now in regard to my eyes, as I lost my left eye, and about six months ago my right eye became affected with black spots over the sight, and I left my eye—perhaps some twenty of them—but since I have been using your Discovery they have all left my eye, and I can see, and thank God, the bright light of heaven is once more making its appearance in my left eye. I am wonderfully astonished at it, and thank God and your Medical Discovery. Yours truly,

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. Lewis, Ass't Editor.

Thursday, Jan. 14, 1892.

BRIEFS.

We call especial attention to the article by Dr. Hunicutt, "A Letter and a Call." Surely there can be found enough persons to assist in this matter. What a cry the young man makes, for work to enable him to prepare himself for the ministry! He is not asking alms! Who will be the first to help?

The Louisiana State Agricultural Society will hold its sixth annual meeting in Lake Charles, Jan. 27-29. Secretary Woodside has favored us with the programme. Essays and discussions of important topics will fully occupy the three days of the session.

For the benefit of our people who feel a little ticklish about money-matters, we take pleasure in referring to the sound and healthy condition of our New Orleans banks, as shown by the report of the Clearing House, Jan. 5. The following figures from that report show the real status: Resources—Loans, $22,296,875; bonds, $2,772,276; exchange and cash on hand, $10,402,151. All this taken together makes a neat little sum of resources.

For the information of our readers we give the following from an exchange. Whether it is all correct we can not tell:

Various governments pay their chiefs as follows: The United States, $50,000 a year; Persia, $30,000,000; Russia, $10,000,000; Siam, $10,000,000; Spain, $3,900,000; Italy, $3,000,000; Great Britain, $3,000,000; Morocco, $2,500,000; Japan, $2,300,000; Egypt, $1,575,000; Germany, $1,000,000; Saxony, $700,000; Portugal, Sweden and Brazil each, $600,000; France, $200,000; Hayti, $240,000; Switzerland, $3,000.

The Moravians are alive to their individual responsibility concerning the unevangelized nations of the world, and they hold themselves in readiness to go out as missionaries when called upon to do so. This is true of the most scholarly and distinguished among them as well as of others. Henry Augustus Jaeschke, late Moravian missionary in Northern India and Tibet, besides German, was master of Polish, Danish and Swedish; and was acquainted with English, Hungarian, Bohemian, Latin and Greek, and, after going to the East, already knowing Sanskrit, Persian and Arabic, and, no doubt, Hebrew, he learned Hindustani and Urdu, and lastly Tibetan. He was likewise versed in mathematics and natural science, especially botany. He obeyed the call of his church to go to the Himalayan regions unquestioningly and cheerfully, and he lived there in the most frugal and primitive fashion. He had no notion of being too valuable in Europe to be hidden away in the almost inaccessible uplands of Asia. He was a true Moravian.

"Isn't That a Coming Down?"

If a minister should be taken from a city station, and placed in charge of a village church or circuit, the people, and sometimes the young preachers, ask the above question. We answer, No. Under our economy men are sometimes, and ought to be, sent to the weak appointments, if for no other reason, that by talent and experience these charges may be built up. Methodist preachers are soldiers and belong to an army whose mission is to save the world. If this object be kept in view, then every place is a post of honor. It is not the work that degrades a soldier, but it is the failure to do the work well, to which he has been assigned. It is not the place in a play that gives the actor renown, but the manner in which he performs his part. Let us hear the question no more.

—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

The Fiercest Foe of the Church.

To the Bible reader it seems very strange that the church has not yet accomplished the salvation of our race. The church has a heaven-given mission, and the continual presence of an omnipotent Lord is promised. Having, then, access to infinite resources of every kind needed, the question is, Why has the church accomplished so small a part of her work in such a long time? After the passage of 1,800 years, why is so large a part of her mission yet unfulfilled? She is aided in every direction by the blessing of God and by the co-operating power of the Holy Spirit and by the inspiring presence of her glorified Lord, and yet her progress is painfully slow. When she should be running the race she creeps like a snail. When she should be mowing down her enemies by wide sweeps of her glittering sword, she is too often "beating the air." When she should be marching forward with firm tread, chanting her stern and awful battle cry, too often she luxuriates in the tents of worldliness, and becomes enervated by lolling in the lap of self-indulgence.

It does seem to us that the church has not yet a clear conception of her enemy. In a general way she knows that she is fighting evil, or, rather, that it is her business to fight evil. But there are thousands upon thousands who look upon evil as an abstract thing, and the consequence is their battle is not delivered against anything specific. In this practical warfare, fighting abstractions is a delusion. Christ has taught the church a lesson at this point which she seems very slow to learn and practice. He began his ministry by meeting in open battle the biggest of all his foes. It was no abstraction that Christ contended against. At the very beginning of the fight he encountered the prince of all evil—the head and front of that army—the very tallest evil in the universe. By a dexterous use of the "sword of the Spirit," he drove the arch-fiend from the field. That was a victory, not only over the prince of devils, but over all the devils, for whenever Christ appeared in their midst they cried out: "We know thee." In conquering the great enemy, all the lesser enemies went down in his fall. In overcoming the head the whole body of evil succumbed.

The lesson is, fight and conquer the largest evil, and there will be little trouble with the lesser ones. There are too many people in the church who seem to think that the biggest devil is inside of a man. That may be true in special cases, but it is not true of the general church. It would be awful indeed if the fiercest foe of God's church was inside the church. No! We solemnly declare, after looking as carefully as we are able over the field of conflict, we believe that the fiercest and most inveterate and most determined foe of the church to-day in all civilized countries is the liquor traffic! An observing and painstaking philanthropist has uttered this awful sentence, which every other observer of the times is compelled to admit as truth: "In whatever direction you go, into whatever path you turn, with a desire to do some good to your fellow-creatures, there the drink demon starts up and blocks the way." There is one alarming fact which seems to have escaped the notice of very many people. It is that by the transformation of private distilleries and breweries into public companies, with almost boundless resources and capital, the number and influence of the opponents of temperance have been vastly multiplied. So vast has this influence become that it controls the municipal elections in every large city and in very many smaller ones. Through this one channel the liquor traffic has its grip upon nearly every Legislature in this land, and dominates the English House of Commons. This hydra-headed monster is continually appearing in new forms. The social clubs and workmen's clubs, with their brilliantly illuminated parlors and social companions, and drink, are destroying the happiness of the home and the pure pleasures of society to an extent that makes the heart sick to contemplate. Lunch houses and hotels, with their drink attachments, contribute to spread the awful plague in every direction and to every grade of social life. Stamp it out in one place, and soon it raises its horrid front in another place and plies its infernal temptations with a seductiveness made more alluring by experience. To show how widespread is this great evil, a Southern paper puts the case in a very unique way, and yet in a nutshell.

Here it is: "What goes when the saloon goes?" inquires an exchange. Well, that is not hard to answer—the brothel, the gambling hell, the tramp, the criminal, the drunkard, political corruption, pauperism, ignorance, bad debts and hard times; while the saloon keepsers go to work.

That sentence catalogues the extent of the evil.

Here, then, is the biggest foe of all, the tallest son of Anak, the very Goliath of evil. In the face of such a foe, threatening the social and civil and religious fabric, it is a delusion to think about fighting the little devils and overcoming them in detail. Such battling is worse than "beating the air." Every blow should be aimed at this giant. Kill him and the little devils will take to their heels. Now, when we look at what the great army of God is doing in this campaign, we are forced to the conclusion that the church has not yet a clear conception of the greatness and power of her enemy. She is actually asleep. WAKE UP, BRETHREN! FALL INTO LINE! MINISTERS TO THE FRONT!

Missionary Work and Individual Churches.

We believe most heartily that mission work should be enterprised and carried forward by congregations. We mean that every organization of Christians, that is able to maintain its separate existence, should have its special mission field to cultivate. Such a field is necessary to the development and growth of the spiritual life of that church as a corporate body. Corporate life can be maintained only in that way, and corporate spiritual life is as much a necessity to the church as personal spiritual life is to the individual. Just as mission work of some kind is needful to promote the growth and strength of personal religion, so it is needful to promote the growth and strength of church religion. The lack of missionary work by the whole body of the church is the cause of so many dead churches. If we imagine that because the membership is spiritual, therefore there is spiritual life and power in the whole body, there is a mistake. As in the individual, "faith without works is dead," so it is in the church as a body. It may be, and is, an organization, but it is a dead organization. A dead man, in one sense, a perfect man, but he is useless, and soon becomes so offensive that it is necessary to put him out of sight. The only thing that we can see that is capable of maintaining and enlarging the life of a church as a body is for it to engage in and carry forward some form of missionary work. St. James is plain on the point, that works bear the same relation to faith that the spirit does to the body.

"As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

We supplement these thoughts by some fine observations on the same point taken from the Christian at Work:

It should be noticed that to foster the missionary spirit in a congregation is to stimulate and deepen those very motives which are the true factors of prosperity. For the whole idea and history of the missionary enterprise lead the soul in the direction of glorying in Christ. The Christian who keeps himself acquainted with the progress and facts of modern missions is always in thought face to face with the fearful degradation and misery wrought by sin; he is at the same time always witnessing the wonderful transformation wrought by faith in Christ; and so there is confirmed within him an enthusiasm for the gospel and reign of Christ as the sovereign remedy for the evil that afflicts mankind. Where there is a missionary spirit, Calvary, Olivet and the throne at the right hand of the Father, with its pentecostal gift and millennial promise, are ever in the foreground, dominating the whole movement of thought and hope. And whilst the religious life is thus drawn up into closer dependence on its supreme sources, it is at the same time enlarged and ennobled by the widening both of its sympathies and of its outlook. Is it conceivable that such a religious life as this can in any wise restrict or endanger the promotion of congregational prosperity? What are the motives which imbue this life with its missionary character? Love and loyalty to Christ; humble gratitude for our distinguishing privileges; an enlightened compassion towards our unsaved fellow-men; an honest recognition of the debt we owe them; implicit obedience to Christ's commandments; an earnest entering into Christ's own purposes. And are not these the very motives which are needed to breathe fresh interest and zeal into the worship of Christ, and all the work that is being done for him in and by our congregations? The Christians who have learned the primary claim upon them of Christ's command to evangelize the world are not those who manifest indifference to congregational interests; it is not they who neglect the prayer-meeting or fail in liberality for congregational purposes. The very opposite.

A Letter and a Call.

MR. EDITOR: I have just received the following in a letter from a young man living within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference. I send it for publication, leaving out the names.

Rev. W. L. C. Hunicutt, D. D.—

Dear Sir: I take the privilege of addressing these lines to you, in order to lay my case before you, which I trust may receive your careful consideration. I am a young man, nineteen years of age, a member of — M. E. Church, South, and have felt for years a call to enter the ministry. My education is very limited indeed, as I have had to work the last six or seven years to help support my smaller brothers and sisters and myself, as my father's salary is not sufficiently large to do so.

This I have done with pleasure up to date, but now feel it is time, if ever, to begin to prepare for the work I believe the Lord has for me to do. Of course, my parents will be unable to support me at school, nor would I have them; but I thought that if you could so arrange it that I might work for my board and tuition, I would most gladly do so. I have no money and would be willing to do any kind of work for my education. I would have to enter the preparatory department at first, and would do all in my power to be serviceable to you in any way you may assign. I have thought of writing you many times before, but now seems to me (somehow or other) to be the right time. I have not been licensed yet; but as to my good character and religious life you may address Bro. —, under whose ministry I was converted. Please consider my petition, I pray, and let me know as soon as possible your conclusion. Your interest and attention will be most gratefully appreciated by

Yours truly,

Now, if this young man is called of God to preach the gospel, is not this letter a call from God to the church to educate him? It may be hard to account for the fact that most of those called to preach are poor, but it is not a new nor a surprising thing. In the apostolic days "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble were called."

We can not give this young man any work here at the college. Several with us now are trying to help themselves along by doing some outside work. But it is almost impossible for a young man to work enough to pay for his board and tuition, or either of them, and at the same time carry on his college course of study. That this young man is willing to undertake to do this shows the admirable spirit that is in him. Does he not deserve help?

Having tried, with only partial success, to organize a Preachers' Educational Society at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, I venture to request all who will aid this young man, or others in similar need, to pay board at Centenary College (their tuition being already provided for), to send their contributions to me or to the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. All such contributions will be faithfully applied.

Bishop Brooks' Preaching.

Mr. Newell Dunbar, in his fascinating "Estimate" of Phillips Brooks, Bishop of Massachusetts (recently published by J. G. Cupples, of Boston), thus sums up his characteristics as a preacher. The first quality which he thinks strikes his hearers "is what may, perhaps, be termed, for lack of a better word, his copiousness. He is like a colossal reservoir, that seems full almost to bursting and well-nigh unable to restrain what it contains."

The parting of his lips seems like the bursting open of a safety-valve by the seething thoughts and words behind, and out they rush so hot in their chase the one of the other, that at times they appear to be almost side by side; and from then till the moment when he stops, with equal abruptness, he simply pours—pours—pours! out—out—out! It seems as if he could not possibly say enough, or begin to express what he has to utter. * * * He gives the best he has; never speaking, any more than writing, down to the supposed requirements of auditors only partially developed; not stopping to sort, but flinging his words out as they come, satisfied that each hearer will appropriate what belongs to him, and all will get something. Great torrents and waves, as it were, of appeal and aspiration and eloquence and thought rise and fall, and whirl and eddy, throughout the church, till they seem to become almost visible and tangible and to beat upon the eyes and foreheads of his hearers as they do against their hearts."

He goes on: "In point of fact, coolly considered, Phillips Brooks exhibits, as a preacher, well nigh every fault of delivery; but he does not leave you time to criticize. There are in him a tremendous vitality, a vigor, an exhaustlessness, an irresistible onset of confident and ardent earnestness, that, whether you will or not, take you clear off your feet, and whirl you along—at their mercy, but pleased—and, it is to be hoped, benefited."—Book News.

An exchange has this piece of valuable information:

Judging from the number of children who attend school, the United States is the best educational country in the world. The number of children per 1,000 population who attend in the United States is 197; in Switzerland, 179; Austria-Hungary, 172; Norway, 154; United Kingdom, 143; Sweden, 142; Netherlands, 125; Denmark, 123; Spain, 106; Italy, 87; Greece, 72; Russia, 14.

NOTES.

"Molasses draws more flies than vinegar." Is that true of preaching?

A defalcation is now, not stealing, but "an evident sign of the inextinguishable of past administration;" that if a preacher is not involved.

The disposition to discard the good old Anglo-Saxon seems to be growing too rapidly. It is not the thing to say a man is a liar; the thing to say is, "an irresponsible pathological specimen."

Every man in the Methodist Church has openly said that he "renounced the world, the flesh and the devil." This is the vow. Let every Louisiana remember his vow when he comes to vote on the lottery amendment.

Zion's Herald published recently a symposium of "New Year's Messages to the Epworth Leagues." Among the contributors we notice the following names of prominent men in the church: Bishops Keener, Grosbeck, Hendrix, Duncan and Galloway, and Drs. Hoss, Southgate and Steel.

A newspaper man out West made a very safe offer, as newspaper men generally are sharp enough to do. He offered his paper free for one year to any man who says he is too poor to pay for it; "provided the applicant neither chews, smokes, drinks or keeps a dog." Catch a newspaper man napping!

If we were called upon to write the most important work before our pastors for the year 1892, we would say, "preaching the gospel, organizing your people into working forces. You may take a force strong enough to move a mountain and scatter it into atoms; to nothing. Take again a force which seems insignificant and add a hundred well-directed forces, and you have power that will surprise you beyond measure."—Alabama Christian Advocate.

A man's actions react and leave their impress on his character. A man's character grows in the line of his deeds. The doing of unrighteous deeds produces unrighteous character. This may continue until unrighteousness is actually loved, just as an organ of the body may be perverted until it has a reverse action. "The eye was made for the light, but a diseased eye prays for the darkness."

The moral of this is: Don't pervert moral powers and reverse their action by unrighteous acts.

The Central Christian Advocate, speaking of our lottery contest in this State, says:

This is the first of a series of contests with the vice of gambling which is breeding bribery, dishonesty and fraud to an extent known only to those who have studied the subject.

The fight is assuming larger proportions and the earnestness is becoming more intense every day. We suppose there never has been just such a conflict before. We trust the praying people everywhere will not cease to cry to God in our behalf.

John Wesley spoke and wrote of almost everything. In his journal, under date Dec. 1, 1763, we find a note which some preachers and Sunday-school superintendents ought to take to heart. It is this:

I made an odd observation which I recommend to all our preachers. The people of Canterbury have been often reproved (and frequently without a cause) for being dead and cold, and that it has utterly discouraged them, and made them cold as stones. How delicate a thing it is to reprove! To do it well, requires more than human wisdom.

Here is a note from the Christian at Work which explains a thing that we sometimes see in this country:

Of late the papers have published foreign dispatches portraying an appalling state of drunkenness among the starving Russian peasantry. How reconcile this with the statement that Russia is a land of plenty? Simply this: The cause of the poverty-stricken state among the peasants is present, and their drunken habits will not for energetic effort to relieve the stress of the situation, hence to drink, despair they drown reason in drink. Drinking in poverty intensifies the evil of poverty. The total abstinence rarely becomes poverty-stricken; but it does, he knows that drink is no cure.

Here is a paragraph from the Preachers' Magazine which we commend to all our preachers:

The men who want to-day are not those who can give excellent reasons why they are unsuccessful preachers, but men who succeed in bringing others to God. Many of us have "seals to our ministry" because we are content to preach sermons that have no saving power in them. Not long ago we were talking with a young preacher who said that, while he had found his preaching well received by his congregation, he had never known anyone converted through it. We did not bid him go on quietly and leave results with God—a favorite phrase to excuse ineffectiveness or even idleness—but sought to impress upon him the fact that God never meant him simply to please people, but had sent him to be a herald of salvation to them, and urged him to pray and preach with this special object. Within a month of our conversation he wrote to tell us, with infinite gladness, that his preaching had been blessed to the conversion of two people. A man generally attains what he strives for; God gives us what we request.

OBITUARIES.

JOHNSTON.—Mrs. CATHARINA A. JOHNSTON, the subject of this sketch, was born in Wilmington, N. C., Sept. 6, 1816, and died in Vicksburg, Miss., October, 1891. In 1828 her parents came to Mississippi, and settled near what was then called the Walnut Hills, now Vicksburg. She was married in 1837 to Mr. D. Davis, a prominent merchant, in Vicksburg, who died in March, 1850. She remained a widow till 1851, when she married Mr. D. B. Johnston, the oldest brother of the late Rev. W. H. Johnston, and Rev. P. A. Johnston, of the Mississippi Conference. He died May 10, 1852, after which she remained a widow and a citizen of Vicksburg till the close of her life.

She was a quiet, good woman, loved and honored by all who knew her, both old and young. She is spoken of as having been specially kind and attentive to the sick and suffering. Her last illness was of short duration, but very severe. Being unconscious from the time she was taken sick, she could leave no verbal testimony of her preparation for death; but her life is sufficient for the comfort and assurance of her only surviving child, a son, and other relatives and friends who mourn her loss.

W. H. LEWIS.

McRANIE.—We chronicle the death of GEORGE W. McRANIE. He was born Nov. 2, 1846, and joined the M. E. Church, South, some time in the year 1885, and departed this life Dec. 16, 1891.

George W. McRanie's life was a consistent life up to the day of his death, as far as I know. He was a man of great patience and nobility; was always too kind and liberal for his own good. He could not deny a friend or a foe a favor when asked, and was often imposed upon, and was too meek in spirit to resent a wrong done to him. His sickness was protracted for two weeks, but was not thought to be critical; therefore, his death was not expected when it came. The last few hours of his life were attended with great suffering—all of which he bore without a murmur. The last words he spoke were, "I have almost given up," and as he spoke these words the breath left his mortal remains without a struggle. He was never married, and was a carpenter by trade, and has built many a fine church for the worship of the Master, and was always liberal in his donations to the Master's cause and kingdom. May the brothers and friends so live in this life as to have a blessed reward for them in heaven!

J. H. EVANS.

WOODWARD.—Sister C. ANNIE WOODWARD (nee Porter) was born Feb. 4, 1824; was converted in early childhood; was married to Rev. J. O. Woodward, Dec. 15, 1853 (bro. Woodward was for years an honored itinerant Methodist preacher, with whom she lived a long and useful life; reared a large family of children, all of whom are consistent members of the Southern Methodist Church but one (Marvin), the youngest, who we expect will join soon.

Sister Woodward died Oct. 17, 1891, in Louisville, Wharton county, Miss., where she had gone to educate her children. She died as she had lived; peacefully, quietly, trustfully she fell asleep in Jesus. From Salem Church we buried her; from the altar where she had so often worshipped and communed with the saints we carried her, and in the midst of a large congregation of friends and loved ones we laid her to rest beside her companion, to sleep together till the resurrection morn., when soul and body will go together to the reunion in the skies. Pray there be none missing then.

J. H. SMITH, Pastor.

RUSSELL.—Whereas, It has pleased God, in his infinite wisdom, to call from our midst our beloved friend and president, KENNETH RUSSELL, we the members of Claiborne Mission Band of Hinds do feel that in his death we have sustained a loss from our band that can never be filled; a true, generous hearted and devoted member, and one whose greatest pleasure in life was trying to make those around him happy. Our hearts are bowed in deepest sorrow at having to part with him; but then we have the blessed thought of knowing that we shall meet him again, when our little band shall be joined together once more around our Father's throne, where there shall be no more parting, no more death.

SAGE.—Died at Cokrum, Miss., Dec. 5, at eleven o'clock P. M., in her twentieth year, Miss Emma, daughter of Mr. W. W. and Mrs. Kate Sage.

As we are called upon to deposit in the silent grave our beloved friend and schoolmate, Emma, we recognize that we put away from us forever one whose brilliant mind, ever-cheerful demeanor, and quick repartee, with her many virtues, have made her one of the brightest gems of which our society could boast. And in token of the high esteem in which she was held by her many friends, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved friend, Emma, we have sustained an irreparable loss in our community, and in the M. E. Church and Sabbath-school, of which she had been long an honored and efficient member. Our heartfelt sympathies go out to the bereaved family in this hour of unspeakable sorrow, and to the members of the Sunday-school, pray that the hand of our heavenly Father may be laid in gracious healing upon their broken hearts, and that the sunshine of his presence may brighten the present sad separation by the hope of a reunion in the many mansions of our Father, where sorrow and parting are no more.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the surviving family, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Byhalia Journal for publication.

MANY FRIENDS.

WILLIAMS—ANNIE MISSOURI WILLIAMS. Infant daughter of C. F. Williams and Harriet Ann Williams, was born Dec. 1, 1891, at Vancleave, Miss., and died Dec. 23, 1891.

We do not understand the providence of our God when he sends the angels and takes from the warm embrace of mothers their sweet little babes; but possibly we shall know hereafter. I know Fannie is almost heart-broken, and that she is so sad; but, praise God for the fact that gave the Psalmist so much consolation. While she has not yet come back, parents can go to it. God help Fannie and Fannie to go to their sweet little babe.

M. L. WHITE.

KIMBROUGH.—Sad, indeed, was the death of little Olga, daughter of Sister Georgia Kimbrough, at Jones, La., Dec. 7, 1891.

This lovely little child had greatly endeared herself to everybody, and especially her mother, who is a widow. Olga was born Nov. 8, 1886, and was, therefore, five years and twenty-nine days old. How short was her life, yet how beautiful! She talked of Jesus, and was learning, in her prattling way, to spell his glorious name. Now she is in his arms! G. E. GNESE, Pastor.

WAY.—The Sunday-school of the Methodist Church of Centerville, Miss., adopted the following resolutions in regard to the death of Mrs. FANNON WAY (nee Petty):

Whereas, God, in his providence, has seen fit to call from labor to rest our sister, comrade and co-worker, as a Sunday-school we mourn her loss, and how in humble submission to the will of him who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved school-mate, we have met with an irreparable loss. A true Christian, indeed, one whose kind and gentle presence was always welcome in character and example of all that was good. Her bright manners made her lie amongst us like a ray of sunshine. A true and noble woman, God's greatest work.

Resolved, That we tender our deepest, heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and friends, not forgetting the dear little boy she left as a token of love to her dear ones. May you, dear friends, watch and guide his little steps in the footsteps of Jesus, until he reaches that river across whose waters mama waits to meet him.

Resolved, That this tribute of respect be spread upon the minutes of our Sunday-school, a copy furnished her afflicted husband and family, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

LILLIE BENSON, for Com.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of tomorrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers who have saved much anxiety and loss of sleep by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c bottle.

Historical Famines.

The Russian famine now prevailing has drawn public attention to other terrible disasters of this kind. Famines were formerly much more common than during the last half-century, and many notable calamities of this nature are mentioned by historians. Not including the seven years' famine in Egypt mentioned in the Old Testament, the first great famine noted in history was in Italy, B. C. 436. Thousands of persons, driven mad by want, threw themselves into the sea and rivers to escape from further suffering. In A. D. 42 there was a great famine in Egypt, and another in Rome and the vicinity in A. D. 252. In 272 famine prevailed in the British islands, and people ate grass, roots, and the bark of trees; thousands died in Scotland from privation in A. D. 866, and over 40,000 persons perished in Britain four years later.

In A. D. 450 famine prevailed all over the south of Europe, raging worst in Italy, where parents ate their children, and in 739 England, Scotland, and Wales were again ravaged, also in 823, when thousands starved, and in 954, when the crops failed for three successive years. In 1016 an awful famine raged throughout all Europe, and again from 1193 to 1195, when crop failure caused terrible suffering. In England and France the people ate the flesh of dogs and cats, and many cases of cannibalism were recorded. There were famines in England in 1231, 1315, 1336, 1348 and 1565, and general distress prevailed also in both England and France in 1693, 1748, 1789, and 1793. The great Irish famines of 1814, 1816, 1822, 1831, and 1846 were in consequence of the failure of the potato crop, and no doubt in each thousands of persons starved to death.

European calamities of this kind, however, dwindle into insignificance when compared with the colossal dimensions of a famine in the crowded countries of Asia. In 1837 over 80,000 human beings starved to death in northwest India, and in 1859 another famine carried off 500,000. In 1865, 1,000,000 people were supposed to have starved in Bengal and Orissa; and in 1868 the death roll from famine in Rajpootana exceeded 1,500,000. Even as late as 1877 about 500,000 perished in Bombay, Madras, and Mysore. The worst calamity of this kind ever recorded took place in the years 1877 and 1878, in China. Complete crop failure took place in all the northern provinces, and the number of those who perished from want of food was estimated at 9,500,000. As the internal communications of a country are improved, the danger of wholesale starvation is much lessened. It is not likely that, save in Russia, Persia and China, there will again be such dreadful loss of life as has been experienced from the failure of the crops.—Anon.

PATIENCE.

BY MARK MERLE.

In darkest night that ever came down
When raging storms obscure the sky,
Beyond the clouds the smiling stars
Shine bright and clear in heaven high.
And would we but with patience wait,
We'd find success of sorrow,
For, pass the night, the skies will clear,
The sun shine bright to-morrow.

An Awful Tragedy.

ITS SOLEMN WARNING.

MR. EDITOR: The holiday season has made fearfully sad to this section of country by the "Sims" riot in Choctaw county, Ala. Many of your readers are, doubtless, familiar with details of the awful outbreak of a violence which has been smouldering for many years. Indeed, some of the daily papers have furnished minutiae of a story sufficiently sorrowful even in outlines.

Briefly recounting, we note first that the scene of these horrors lies between twenty and thirty miles from this place—just over the Alabama line—and that much of the news concerning these things naturally passed through the place, as the nearest railroad and telegraphic outlet to these rural districts. Here the tragedy has been much discussed, and, I suppose, the main truths elicited and the falsehoods discerned and discarded.

The leading facts published are these: Last Spring an unoffending Baptist preacher, living not far from the recent battle-ground, was strangely assassinated. About the close of summer a United States marshal and posse raided the illicit whisky distillery of a certain Mr. Bob Sims, notorious for many things in the vicinity of Wm. Hill, Ala. While being conducted to jail, stopping at Bladen Springs, a party of the kindred and friends of said Sims rushed in unawares and rescued him from his hands, and captured state, meanwhile killing one of the guards and a most estimable physician who happened to be sitting near. The marshal's posse and others, hotly pursuing, avenged this innocent blood by the speedy slaying of two of the Simses—a brother and a son of the now famous "Bob." He, who was known as the leader of a large class called "Simsites," calling under the guise of religionists, escaped to other regions, where, it is said, he has many ardent admirers and followers. At this juncture a large body of the leading citizens of the county and adjacent country massed together and forcibly drove away most of the family, near relatives and clansmen of Sims, including women and children. This was done because it was believed their presence in their homes was dangerous to the rest of the community, as they openly justified and upheld one who had distinctly made himself an outlaw. The refugees came over into Mississippi, and remained on and near the railroad for many weeks. Finally, by the friendly interposition of Gov. Jones, they returned to their homes in Choctaw, sadder, perhaps, but not wiser. A different course on either side might have brought less unhappy results.

No one supposed that Bob Sims would dare again to show himself openly in Choctaw; but, doubtless, relying on the strength of his following and the fort-like style of his family dwelling, and also having abundance of that style of courage known as foolhardiness, he returned the latter part of December. It is reported and believed that he declared he would have "a barrel of blood for every drop" which had been spilt from Simsite veins. It is certain that he and some of his family waylaid and robbed a wagon carrying groceries to the store of a neighbor, McMillan, sending him word that he would also kill him soon. About the following night, in the midst of the rain and darkness, eight or ten of the Simsites surrounded and set fire to McMillan's home. As the inmates fled out, they were shot down on every side with Winchester rifles. Little children were wantonly shot, and one little boy actually kicked alive into the blaze by the foot of Bob Sims. There he perished while the fiendish incendiaries gloried in their work with loud cursing and threatening. Four of the McMillan family and friends were killed, and four badly wounded. This deed so roused the citizens generally that before many hours the Sims headquarters was surrounded by large bodies of armed men bent on swift and sure vengeance. The sheriff was apparently in charge, and seems to have done what was in his power to restrain mob law. After more than twenty-four hours' battle and siege of the "block-house," and when cannon were approaching from each side, the desperadoes were induced to surrender late Christmas evening. That night, as they proceeded to jail, the body-guard of fifty men, with the sheriff, was overpowered, and all four of the men captured were quickly hung to the same tree. Sims maintained his spirit of bravado to the end, and, horrible to relate, swung off into eternity mingling words of awful cursing with the tune of one of our most sacred and popular hymns. Before death, he said he had nearly forty other citizens marked down for death, and that he would be avenged. Several of the others most implicated in the riot have since suffered lynch law. Some innocent may have suffered. It is seldom otherwise in such outbreaks. One wild report we are authorized to contradict. For the honor of our section and the sake of humanity, we are glad to utterly discredit the report that even the worst of the women have been hung. We believe they have escaped, and trust they will lay to heart the dearly bought lesson.

Now, let us all take some of the teaching of this tragic history. Last year I saw in our ADVOCATE some warnings from the pens of Broes/Hunt and McDonald about the fanatical and insistent proslavery methods of the Seventh-Day Adventists in certain quarters of Louisiana. I have reason to know that much is being done through a teeming press and other methods to propagate this most evil and yet pernicious form of error. Here is an "object-lesson" worth studying. Ten or fifteen years ago, and more, this man Sims (whose name is now the synonym of insane wickedness and hypocritical pretension to religion) was a "shouting member" of the Methodist Church, South. He had made such a brave soldier, and seemed so earnest, that all outward blemishes were hidden thereby. He was regarded by many as a saint; married into one of the best and most solidly religious families of the community. Presently there came along certain from the Northwest who taught that Christians generally were keeping the wrong day for Sabbath. Working on that vein of superstitious adherence to the letter (even though flatly adverse to the spirit), Bob Sims embraced the Seventh-Day craze, and ere long began to flourish as a religious crank. His first real trouble—and sin—began by working his farm on Sunday. Ere long he gloried therein, and audaciously cultivated, in sight of the public road, all through the Christian Sabbath. This naturally brought him before the civil courts. Combining the false plea of religion with that unanswerable allegation that railroads are allowed to ply their work on Sunday, he always escaped punishment. Succeeding in one defiance of law, he tried another. He—at first secretly, and then openly—distilled whisky, etc., contrary to the laws; even such as we have: He waxed more and more independent of all government; prided of "personal liberty" to do what he wished with his corn to do what he wished with his corn and his fruit, etc. Through such demoralizing talk, aided by his cheap, unlicensed grocery, he drew a large following. Some seem to have been deluded by the religious (?) features of his teaching, and came almost to worship him as a god. They seriously talked of his rising again the third day after he was hung.

Through a series of years he has gone on from bad to worse, some of his neighbors protesting, others indifferent, and a considerable number drawn into his many and multiplying errors. Time and space would fail me to tell of all the foolish and perilous errors taught by this man, orally and through a small sheet issued at Womack Hill, but evidently printed chiefly in the Northwest. This was constantly filled with vituperation against the church, the ministry, all law and government, sacred or secular. With go much of outlawry professed and practiced, it is not wonderful, though very sorrowful, that such an end should have overtaken the leaders in this anarchism.

From this history let us draw these warnings: "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." Errors of the head lead astray the heart and life. It is dangerous, as well as foolish, to set up the judgment on religious subjects contrary to the general consent of religious teachers from the apostles down. Frying into and prophesying about the second coming of Christ is treading on forbidden ground. Let us make every effort to secure consistency in our laws. So long as railroads, etc., are allowed to desecrate the Sabbath, thousands will excuse themselves in other forms of violation of God's most oft-repeated command. Serious errors of doctrine, such as subvert the order of religious worship, ought to be rooted out of a community before they become deeply set. Plow deep and sow broadcast the seeds of that true kingdom which teaches reverence for authority; whose outgrowth, flower and fruitage is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

The End of War.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

Nation shall not lift sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more.—Isa. 2, 4.

War, so history would seem to teach, has been almost the normal condition of our fallen race. Before the flood the earth was filled with violence and blood. But once, in long centuries, was the Temple of Janus shut in token of universal peace. This was at the coming of the Prince of Peace.

So general and common has been war, and seemingly so inevitable, that not a few have regarded the prediction of universal peace and the final abrogation of war as little better than a fond imagination, and practically impossible. But the word of the Lord is true, and abideth forever, and not one jot or tittle shall fail until all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth may pass away; but God's word shall stand forever.

We believe the prophecy shall be fulfilled, because God says so, and because we think we see the trend of providential causes moving toward this devoutly to be desired consummation. Christianity is elevating the masses of men. It is continually increasing the individual value of life. It is increasing the interest in life, because it is ever increasing the comfort and desirableness of life. Its possibilities are unfolding and enlarging, and men are gradually learning to value and appreciate it more highly.

War is ever becoming more costly, and its destructions and losses greater, as values are ever increasing. Intelligent millions are considering these losses, and ever growing more restive under the crushing burdens of the needless wars of ambition and territorial aggrandizement. The war debts of the so-called civilized nations amount to more than twenty-five thousand millions of dollars, and the annual interest, at a moderate per cent., is more than fifteen hundred millions of dollars. To this must be added the vast destruction of property, the interruption of commerce and productive industries of all kinds.

Thoughtful millions are beginning to ask: "Can not civilized men adjust their differences in some less expensive and bloody way? Can not civilized nations, as well as civilized men, be governed by reason and justice?" Certainly they should. Already civilized nations are adopting the peaceable and inexpensive method of arbitration, and we doubt not, as men come more and more to see the immeasurable advantages of this method, it will be more and more resorted to.

Another and stronger reason for believing in the fulfillment of the prophecy in the final cessation of war, is in the ever-increasing destructiveness of modern warfare. Engineering, mechanical skill and chemical science are giving appalling efficiency to destructive implements. Men are killed and can be killed with a wholesale destructiveness and suddenness without precedent in all the centuries before ours. The power of steam on the seas and by railroads on the land has appallingly increased the power and sudden destructiveness of navies and armies.

Some thirty-five years ago, when pastor of the Carondelet Street Church, preaching a sermon on war and its evils, I said, to the surprise and horror of some, that I rejoiced in the invention of every new and improved implement of destruction to be used in war, and hoped the time would speedily come when chemical science would be able to kill an acre of men in a moment of time; when to march to battle would be equivalent to marching to a wholesale public execution. The outlook on this line is, that this awful consummation is rapidly approaching. When it comes, war will leave the earth, and men shall learn the bloody art no more. It was a most suggestive and awakening thought when the Peace Society, during the Crimean War, posted on the walls of Birmingham, England, "Wanted: Ten thousand able-bodied men to shoot, or be shot at, for a shilling per day." The time is coming, I trust, that the notice may be posted, "Wanted: Ten or twenty thousand men to be certainly and instantly killed, to settle some national misunderstanding." When the time comes, the twenty thousand men will not soldier for a shilling a day. If nobody is to come back to be heroes, to be knighted, to be elected congressmen, governors and Presidents, if nobody is to live to get a pension, nobody will go, no battles will be fought, and swords will be beaten into plowshares, and the earth shall be filled with peace and plenty. The God of love speed the happy day!

Evangelism.

"Master, we saw some casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade them, because they followed not with us."

Not many days ago I met one of our preachers of large influence in our church, because he is able; and whom I love, for he is worthy. Conference was nearing, even at the door, and we were discussing our bright young preachers. I called the name of Bro. "A," as being full of promise.

"Yes," said the brother, "but his disposition to evangelize will seriously damage him."

I expressed surprise.

"The judgment, the convictions of a large majority of our church, both ministerial and lay, are against it."

Many of our most intelligent laymen, as well as ministers, have spoken out in disapproval of it. (Pardon me the heterodoxy, Mr. Editor, if I express the doubt as to the infallibility of "the Press," as an exponent of public sentiment.) I can not believe that the Press of your own State is an expression of its intelligence to-day upon the issues of the hour any more than I can accept as settled the foregoing conclusion, in the face of the immense concourses our evangelists draw. If curiously the incentive, the curious would hear and depart, which is not the case. Several important reasons are given why evangelists damage the regular pastorate.

1. Their work tends to discourage the regular work of the pastorate by making church work spasmodic. The object of preaching, as I see it, is to awaken men, make them think, prepare them to appreciate the importance of routine church work.

2. It is urged that it places the pastor at disadvantage by comparison in this: that any student, by applying all his investigations to ten or twelve texts, has every way the advantage of the pastor, who must preach from, at least, fifty-two texts.

If our pastorate could say, "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up" (consumed the ego, the pride, the selfishness), it seems to me that the glory of the workman would be lost sight of in the success of the work.

"If these evangelists would go into the 'waste places,' instead of our cities and communities, where our churches are established, then their work would be appreciated, and they would be building upon their own, instead of other men's, foundations."

In all earnestness I asked, and still ask, Where are greater moral "waste places" than in the teeming thoroughfares of our crowded cities? Where is there greater need that some prophet, with his heart and tongue set on fire with a consuming zeal for God's house, should cry into the ears of the rushing, thoughtless, gain-getting crowd, "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee," than in the streets of our modern Nineveh?

Within the last five days I have met a "leader in Israel," who, in addition to the foregoing reasons, gives this as an objection, to wit: "There is only about a given amount of money in any community for ministerial support; and if these popular evangelists gather this, the tendencies are to weaken or, rather, cripple the pastorate."

My experience as a steward would be a third of a century does not corroborate this rather selfish proposition. There were two contribution boxes at the door of the temple, as well as pillars upon its porch. That box on the left represented the "strength" of the law—the tithes; that on the right the promptings of grace; and, as a steward, I have always, without trepidation, approached the left hand of the man who used his right freely.

Of the evangelist, in the popular sense of the term with us—in other words, of Sam Jones and George Inge—I would scarcely dare to speak. I could not do my own conceptions of their work justice. Their fruits manifest themselves, and their work is their vindication, rather than defense. Like their great antitype, John Wesley, the father of evangelism, the zeal of "my house" has consumed their egotism, their "conservatism" (their cowardice, their cringing fear of orthodoxy, of churchism), and sent them out armed with the manhood to say, "Thou art the man;" to tear open the strongholds of men's selfishness and egotism, and reveal to them their secret sins. Of these I say nothing but, God speed them! But it is of the lesser lights—such as the brother under consideration—I would speak, and of the effect of this spirit of opposition to evangelism upon the inner workings of our economy. And I approach the presentation of this subject with the shoes removed from my feet, and with fear, lest I offend; wound where I have the least desire to do ought but help, encourage, support.

Know, Mr. Editor, that I am supremely indifferent to the imbecile cry of "pessimism," with which any suggestion of error or complaint is met by the average thinker, if it be lawful to dignify them by such a term.

The first fact we present is, that we have a growing number of "boy preachers" entering our Conference (God bless them!). These are entering the "school of the prophets," and, by our economy, are so considered. I say nothing new to a well-informed Methodist when I say that each Conference is a ministerial university; that our preachers are more carefully educated, and more thoroughly, from a special standpoint, than the students of any college, on an average; yet there are dull students here, as everywhere else, and all must be in the matriculate stage—from four years and upward—and yet all must have work. And just here comes one of the great hardships upon the country circuits. These are the practical educators of our pulpits. These pay out more money, and make greater personal sacrifice for the education of our pulpits (ten times over in proportion to ability), than Jackson, with its $4,000, or any other city church. They take up these boys, they board them, they furnish conveyance, they pay them, and, what is infinitely harder, they often endure them, and tula with a full consciousness that if they make anything superior out of them, some city, with self-assurance of its superior needs and merits, will "gobble" them up, and leave for our edification only the duller students.

Mr. Editor, I am not grumbling. This is not pessimism. This is only an honest diagnosis of a necessary malady, and a malady without the reasonable possibility of a cure. There are, it seems to me, mitigating conditions that might be utilized. For instance: I was impressed with the thought of our own peerless young Bishop Gallows, last year, when he made, in some instances, the experiment (?) of sending out our preachers (as of yore) in "twos"—the junior and senior; but this, to my mind, correct idea was ignored by our late Bishop, and boys (God bless them again, I say), to whose faces the razor is a stranger, have to meet the responsibility of preaching often to congregations and to churchmen whose ears have been trained (shall I say, unfortunately?) to the sharpest criticism by having drunk of "old wine."

When I was young, and a father realized that for any reason the pastor in charge could not reach his son or daughter, he could invite some other preacher to come over and hold a meeting for us; but "ministerial courtesy" has done away with that privilege, and no preacher dares to accept the invitation of a layman to preach at his church. And now the iron hand of "courtesy" says, or proposes to say, to the Christian minister whose heart is burning with the spirit of the missionary: "Back to your 'pent-up Uccal!' Do the routine work assigned you, and let the souls Bro. 'B.' can not reach be lost."

Mr. Editor, our church was born of evangelism. Sam Jones and Inge are the true followers of Mr. Wesley now. Let our Conference lay aside selfishness, and study how to utilize, rather than suppress, this reserved force.

J. V. ENOCHS.

Terry, Miss., Jan. 10, 1892.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. O. L. Savage, Minter City, Miss., Jan. 3: "I have just been around to see our churches at Minter City and Strathmore, Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference. Have received a warm welcome. The people have been very kind to us, and furnished us everything necessary. We are comfortable and happy. Hope to do some of the best work of our lives for the Master this year. Have received five members up in date; made fifty pastoral visits. Our first Quarterly Conference was held at Minter City, Jan. 2; Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, P. E., in the chair. My people were delighted with him in the pulpit and social circle. We send you three new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, and wish you a happy New Year."

Rev. R. W. Tucker, Wilson, La., Jan. 10: "We are now located in the town of Wilson, on the L. N. O. and T. R. R., where we were appointed by Bishop Hendrix at the last session of the Mississippi Annual Conference. On our arrival here we were met at the train by Dr. Hooper and others, who conducted us to the preacher's home (a nice new cottage owned by R. F. Fridge, of our town), where we found a blazing fire in Mrs. T.'s room, and several kind ladies, who, after we were warm, escorted us to the dining apartment, where the board was groaning under many things that were nice. We desire here to thank our friends for such acts of kindness, and for their blessings to us. We pray God's benedictions upon them. We feel encouraged and determined to go forward."

Rev. H. W. May, Prattville, Ala., Jan. 8: "We are in the midst of a glorious revival of religion that has been going on since last Sunday. Seven souls have given themselves to the Lord, and the altar is filled with seekers. We did not intend to protract the meeting, but God has so ordered it. I arrived here last Friday night. I came to visit my father, whom I had not seen in nine years. Our pastor here asked me to preach for him on Sunday, and at the close of the service I received an answer to a prayer eight years long. The prayer was to live to see my father a member of the M. E. Church, South, and to be the instrument in God's hand of receiving him. At the close of the first service of this meeting my father and my sister came to be prayed for, and joined the church, and the meeting has been growing in numbers and power ever since. We had a regular old-fashioned Methodist about last night. Quite strange for a fashionable church."

Rev. G. E. Greene, Lind Grove circuit, Louisiana Conference: "By waiting until Jan. 1, we were enabled to go through from Alexandria to our circuit, Lind Grove, on one railroad, the B. C. A. and N.; and my wife was the first lady passenger on the new division from Alexandria to Riverport. Arriving at the parsonage Saturday evening, Jan. 2, we found a warm dinner, hot coffee and two bright fires ready for our reception. Sisters Johnson and Brodnax were setting out dinner, which they and other kind ladies had procured. Sisters Gallagher, Higginbotham and Moore had come with baskets the previous Wednesday, expecting us, and many others helped in various ways. A barrel of flour, a whole hog, some coffee, sugar and butter, cakes, pies, salad, etc., were collected and stored away in the parsonage pantry, and numerous new articles of furniture adorned the kitchen, dining-room and living-rooms. Yesterday Bro. McCauley paid us a visit, and brought us six gallons of fine syrup. May the Lord enable me to minister as well to their spiritual wants as they do to our temporal needs! My wife and I are certainly grateful for all these evidences of kindness and thoughtfulness on the part of all concerned. God grant that the year of grace 1892 may bring many conversions and much spiritual growth on Lind Grove circuit!"

THE WILL OF GOD.

"Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."—St. Luke xiii. 32.

O Lord my God, do thou thy holy will—
I will be still;
I will not stir, lest I forsake thine arm;
And break the charm
Which hinders climbing to my Father's breast,
In perfect rest.

Wild fancy, peace! thou must not me beguile
With thy false smile;
I know thy battles and thy cheating ways;
Be silent, Praise,
Blind guide with stent voice, and blinding all
That hear thy call.

Come, self-denial, high and pure,
Thoughts that in thankfulness endure;
Though dearest hopes are faintly found,
And dearest hearts are burning round,
Come, Resignation, spirit-flee,
And let me kiss thy placid cheek,
And read in thy pale eye, serene,
Thy blessing, who, by faith can wear
Thy heart from sense, and learn to love
God only, and the joys above.

They say, who know the life divine,
And upward gaze with eagle eye,
That by each golden crown on high,
Rich with celestial jewelry,
Which for our Lord's redemption is set,
There hangs a radiant coronet,
All gemmed with pure and living light,
Too dazzling for a sinner's sight,
Prepared for virgin souls, and them
Who seek the Martyr's throne.

Nor deem, who to that bliss aspire,
Must win their way through blood and fire,
The writhings of a wounded heart
Are fiercer than a woman's dart,
Of life's stillness, shadowy refinement,
In desolation unrepining,
Without a hope of earth to find
A mirror in all answering mind.
Meek souls there are, who little dream
Their daily strife an angel's theme,
Or that the rod they take so calm,
Shall prove in heaven a martyr's palm.

And there are souls that seem to dwell
Above this earth—so rich a spell
Flows round their feet, where'er they move,
From hopes fulfilled and mutual love,
Such, if on high their thoughts are set,
Nor in the stream the source forget,
If prompt to quit the bliss they know,
Following the Lamb where'er he go,
By purest pleasures unbeguiled,
To doleful a wife or child,
Such wedded souls our God shall own
For faultless virgins round his throne.

Thus ever where we find our suffering God,
And where he trod:
May set our steps—the cross old Calvary,
T'planted high,
Beams on the martyr host, a beacon light
In open sight.

To the still writhings of the lonely heart
He doth impart
The virtue of his midnight agony;
When none was nigh
Save God and our good angel, to assuage
The tempest's rage.

Mortal! if life smile on thee, and thou find
All to thy mind,
Think who did once from heaven to hell descend.

Thou to befriend;
So shalt thou dare forego, at his dear call,
Thy rest, thine all.

"O Father! not my will, but thine be done!"
So spake the Son.
Be this our charm, mellowing earth's ruder noise
Of grief and joy;
That we may eling forever to thy breast,
In perfect rest.

The Possibilities of Man.

BY DR. J. W. HARMON.

The mind of man in its earnest researches and development, in the accumulation of knowledge and wisdom, is only limited by eternity and God. His capacity of mind is like and only a little lower than the mind of God; and man is exalted in greatness and the glory of his being just in the same ratio that he takes into his soul God's estimate of his endowments and the value of his immortal soul.

What mighty fields of thought have been traversed! What wide realms of investigation and discovery have been placed under tribute to his intellectual achievements!

His soul, with tireless wing, has winged its way over continents of science and art, over fields of music and poetry and philosophy; while its keen eye has penetrated the secret arcana of nature herself.

And then in the study of man and his marvelous environments his soul has pursued its majestic flight up into the august presence of God himself; and there, amid the pangs of angels, laid down his crowns, his fame and honors at his feet; while unexplored visions of God's infinite nature and glory still spread out in matchless and measureless grandeur before him. What possibilities have been achieved, and what unknown realms will yet be surveyed!

Standing on the lofty mountain of knowledge, he has traced out in their trackless orbits, measured and weighed in the balances, the sun, moon and stars, and all the visible planets, as they whirl along in their abysmal depths of infinite space.

And, then, after all, in this bewildering sweep of his sovereign mind, he is compelled, like the great mathematician, Newton, to exclaim: "I know not what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing with pebbles on the seashore, while the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me."

And while the possibilities of man's mind shine out brilliant in the character of Newton, as he scanned the profound depths of the physical universe, so the versatile character of Shakespeare stands out in lofty altitude as he analyzes the "mysteries of human nature, and with his instinctive intuition covering every age, and all races and all conditions of mankind. Sometimes he seems to stand at the very gate of heaven, measuring, with sublime conceptions, the possibilities of man to take on the angelic nature, and even the God-like; and then, at the very gates of hell itself, reproducing in man's character all the devilish elements of satanic hate and hellishness.

What wondrous endowments do men possess, what capacity of soul, to soar so high in the sweet realm of song and music, as to vie with the angels of God! What sublimity of enchantment, what heavenly fascinations there is in Handel's "Messiah," and the "Fidelio" of Beethoven!—and all because man was made in the image and likeness of God.

And so in the world of art, Raphael and Angelo, in the sanctified flights of their pure and subtle imaginations, have given to the world in their inspired paintings the spiritual beauty of the child Jesus, and the holy maturity of manhood in the world's Redeemer. They have voiced on canvas the divine right to enter into the inner sanctuary of the soul—and, all alone, hold communion with God.

And just here we scale the walls of this world and reach the soul's marvelous capacity for spiritual visions, as thrown upon the canvas of this world's history by the exiled John on Patmos; and as we gaze with rapture upon the majestic beauty of his spiritual pictures, we catch fresh inspiration from their grandeur, and, lifting up our heads to the very stars in glory, we come at last to be God-like and unchangeable as God himself.

The only true possibilities of man in this world, and the only true life to live, is to make preparation for the real life hereafter.

Ten Reasons for Family Worship.

Doubtless many readers of the ADVOCATE have resolved, at the beginning of this new year, that they will live more devoted to God than they have done heretofore. Who can compute the good that would be accomplished this year if family worship was kept up regularly in every home where the ADVOCATE goes? And is this not "a reasonable service" that every head of a family should render unto the Lord? That it is, we hold for the following ten reasons:

First. It is a Christian duty for every head of a family, as far as possible, to bring glory to God from his family. It is not only the Christian's duty so to live himself as to bring glory to God, but so to order his household that they will bring glory to God by their lives.

Second. It is a Christian privilege. To receive the greatest good and accomplish the most, the Christian must look upon his religious as a privilege. Is it not an exalted privilege to have a home altar, where we may daily approach our Creator, with the assurance that he will hear and answer our petitions?

Third. It is a generally admitted fact that family worship is a means of accomplishing good. St. James says, "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Hence failure to have family worship is a sin of omission, and will receive from the Lord its legitimate punishment. (See Matt. xxv. 30.)

Fourth. The Bible implies this duty in such expressions as these: "Thou shalt teach them to thy children when thou liest down and when thou risest up;" "I will that men pray everywhere." The patriarchs and prophets erected altars of worship and prayed long before we have any account of any positive command to pray.

Fifth. Family worship unites and harmonizes the individual members of the family. Those who worship daily at the same altar feel more forcibly that theirs is a common interest. It has been truthfully said, "Family prayer is the oil which removes friction, and causes all the complicated wheels of the family to move smoothly and noiselessly."

Sixth. It aids parents in teaching the truths of God's Word to their children, and strengthens parental authority. By regularly and constantly reading the Scriptures at the home altar, the parent is enabled to keep the truths of God's Word ever before his children, and thus give them "line upon line." No one can calculate the good that thus accrues from family prayer.

Seventh. Family prayer benefits the parent in restraining him from wicked words and temper. A sense of consistency will cause him who regularly prays with his family to be more careful about his own conduct. Is this not the experience of those who have tried it?

Eighth. It prepares the family for hearing the preached Word with more relish and profit. I feel confident that ministers who have thought much along this line will corroborate this statement. One of the great needs of the congregation of the present day is more appreciative hearers—that is, hearers who know more of God's Word, and can properly appreciate it as it is proclaimed from the pulpit. For lack of this often the minister seemingly speaks to many of his hearers in an "unknown tongue."

Ninth. Again, family worship educates and prepares laymen for praying in public church services and prayer meetings, etc. It is needless to argue this point. What is to become of our prayer meeting and Sunday-schools without such laymen?

Tenth. Finally, there is actual benefit to be derived from family prayer. All Christians admit that God hears and answers prayer—not only the prayers offered in secret and in "the solemn assembly," but that he answers prayer whenever and wherever offered. Hence these daily prayers at the family altar are of incalculable benefit to the family. Who can compute the good that is being accomplished by the tens of thousands of family altars that are erected all over our land? The family altar is the citadel of the home. The Roman orator said, "The republic is at the fireside." Equally so may it be said of the church. The great army of men and women that are pressing the Lord's cause to victory come from those homes where the fires constantly burn on the family altar. Philip Henry says, "If the worship of God be not in the house, write, 'Lord, have mercy upon us,' upon the door, for there is a plague, a curse in it." Archbishop Tillotson says, "that constant family worship is so necessary to keep alive a sense of God and religion in the minds of men, that he sees not how any family that neglects it can in reason be esteemed a family of Christians; or, indeed, to have any religion at all."

It seems to me that either of the above reasons is sufficient to convince any man of this important duty. Is it not cause for deep regret and shame that there are officials, and even ministers, who fail to perform this important duty?

Brother, are you living in the omission of Christian duty? If so, go this very day and erect in your home an altar to God, and never let the holy fire cease to burn there till God shall call you hence; then will you be the better able to render your account "with joy, and not with shame."

Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission.

[Mrs. S. S. King sends us the following, which we cheerfully publish.—ED.]

We regret the great delay in getting into print the minutes of the convention held on Dec. 3, 1891, in the interest of the parsonage and home mission work. Acting on the principle that it is never too late to do good, we herewith submit them to the readers of the ADVOCATE and all interested in the work:

The Convention of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the Louisiana Conference met in New Orleans, La., Dec. 3, 1891, in the Carondelet Street M. E. Church, South; Mrs. S. S. King, Conference secretary, presiding. There was a goodly number of Christian workers present, every live auxiliary society in the city being represented by one or more of its officers and members, and a delegate to represent the society at Boyce, La., in the person of Mrs. Tillotson.

The convention was opened by the choir singing, "I want to be a worker for the Lord," after which the audience joined heartily in singing Hymn 658. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. King, who selected Isaiah lxiii for the occasion. Mrs. Auvray then led in prayer, after which Hymn 697 was sung. Devotional exercises being ended, Mrs. King read her report, which was able and full of interest, giving a synopsis of the work since its inauguration in 1886.

Reports from the different auxiliaries were then called for, to which eighteen responded, four of which were from the city and fourteen from the country. All of the latter except one had been but recently organized, and called forth remarks of explanation and commendation from Mrs. King.

Rev. Dr. Evans, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, then made a few remarks of encouragement, reminding the ladies that every work has its difficulties in the beginning, and that he saw no cause for discouragement.

Rev. Dr. Beard followed with some explanations about woman's work in connection with the Board of Church Extension, of which he is president in this Conference.

Mrs. Widney, Conference treasurer, then read her report. The amount collected during the year 1891 was $280.46, out of which help has been given towards building two parsonages, leaving a balance of $180.46.

The following named persons were elected officers of the Conference society for the year, viz: President, Mrs. H. A. Lyons; vice-presidents, Mrs. B. D. Wood, Mrs. B. F. Alexander, Mrs. J. T. Sawyer, Mrs. A. E. Pharr, Mrs. Dr. W. H. Riley. Conference corresponding secretary, Miss Mary Werlein; recording secretary, Mrs. C. W. Carter; Conference treasurer, Mrs. Adele Widney.

The following named persons were elected district secretaries, viz: Miss Kate Riggs, New Orleans; Mrs. Mattie Morrison, Shreveport district; Mrs. Bettie Glover, Arcadia district; Mrs. John E. Hanna, Delhi; Mrs. Henrietta E. Pharr, Opelousas; Mrs. S. E. Garner, Alexandria.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Tillotson, from Boyce.

Sixteen subscribers were secured to the little paper—the Parsonage and Home Mission Quarterly.

Resolved to hold the next annual meeting at Opelousas.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. King for faithful services rendered the last two years, to which she made a fitting response.

Convention adjourned to meet at 7:30 o'clock P. M.

Owing to the inclement weather the attendance upon the evening session was not large.

Devotional exercises consisted of reading Scripture by Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh, prayer by Rev. J. T. Sawyer, and singing by the choir.

Minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Report by Mrs. King was read, and the convention resolved to have it published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh argued that the publication would do much good.

Rev. Dr. Evans made quite a speech upon the advantage and comfort of having a house for the housing of the preacher's family, giving an episode in his own life, which was very amusing, notwithstanding the sadness of the reality and truth of it in many preachers' lives.

In the absence of the speaker of the evening, Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Rev. J. T. Sawyer proceeded to take a collection to defray the expenses of the convention, which amounted to sufficient for the purpose.

Convention adjourned.

MRS. M. M. AUVRAY,
Recording Secretary.

Old Clothes.

The subject of old clothes has a certain interest. True, it is homely, but not, therefore, to be entirely despised. Think of the clothes you wore so long ago you dislike to count the years. Imagine yourself clothed in those garments to-day, provided you could get yourself into them. You feel that your identity would simply be lost in their remoteness from the prevailing mode, to say nothing of possible reminders of previous rough usage. Yet once you felt well dressed in them, or, at the least, comfortable. To-day you look at them with a pity which you do not know where to apply, whether to them or to yourself. They have not changed; but you have, and so has the world about you. Hence, their unfitness for present use. They are outgrown. Only one kind of old clothes we know of that do not seem to be out of keeping with their surroundings. The mother stealing away to that little chamber and reverently opening the chest containing treasures of the departed, knows what we mean. The little shoes, wrinkled, run-down at the sides, yet still retaining the shape of the tired little feet, now forever quiet; the little dresses useless now, except as pathetic reminders of a day of agony in the long ago, when the house was hushed and darkened, and sorrow, a hideous shape, had taken possession of the home. How sacred these to the mother's heart! To her they are never out of fashion, for the child that wore them, to her thought and love, is ever the same she laid beneath the daisies so long ago. And the father, strong in home love, ready to fight a host to keep harm from his darlings, as he looks on these relics, reminders of hopes blighted and that fell down dead when his boy died, must needs turn away to hide his tear and swallow the grief he would not destroy. Do you and I wear old clothes? Do we like it? Don't we feel a trifle ashamed that the hat begins to show signs of premeditated poverty and shabby gentility? That the coat or the dress has a superabundance of crease and wrinkle, or lacks the fullness or draping that would make it in "the style"? After all, these old clothes are typical. They were the expression in their day of ideas of fitness based upon the common consent of their wearers. They are old clothes because the consensus has changed, or they are worn out, which practically amounts to the same thing. And even as the attics of our homes, or our heirloom chests, are full of worn-out or old-fashioned garments, or garments preserved because of tender associations, so are not the hyrums and attics of the church, of the State and of society filled with worn-out garments of fads and fancies, creeds and opinions, views, notions, plans for betterment, for which, in case of creeds especially, men were willing to hazard their lives? In their day they filled a certain place; they expressed the consensus of thought at a given contingency; they served their purpose, and henceforth may be permitted to rest, relics of the modes of thought of the past, samples of the garments in which the thoughts of brave defenders of truth were clothed. In this regard they have an interest and a value. But we want to be in fashion. We ought to be in fashion. Only the best of reasons—reasons with a heart and a soul to them—can justify any in clinging to old garments when better are to be had. We may not make a fetish of old garments—men sometimes make scarecrows of them—nor should we rest content with old forms for the expression of truth when our day demands with united voice, not the modification of the truth, but the modification of its expression. May we not cast aside some of the old clothes of our fancies, our prejudices, our errors of judgment and of practice as garments outgrown and useless except as relics? Still they are also a prophecy. All preceding labors see their finality in the present. They have been working towards this goal. The present is the sum of the past. Hence we may entertain a certain respect for outworn creeds and opinions as they not only represent what has been done, but serve as a foundation upon which we, of the present, may project our effort into the future. And so we may make respectful acknowledgment of the glorious robes in which the heroes of the past clothed the truth, remembering that truth is ever greater than its ensowments, and can not be limited by them. There is a garment pure, fair, beautiful, full of adorning that shall be in the day of God the universal pattern: new, yet old as eternity, and as lasting. It is the robe of Christ's righteousness, the last investiture of the truth, grandly simple, of universal adaptation. All efforts to answer Plute's ambiguous question, "What is truth?" must, after all, but come back to the peasant simplicity of him who, on that night, stood before that bar of judgment declaring his coming to be for the bearing witness to the truth. It is our privilege in the noonday splendor of our age to be in the fashion that shall outlast all that is merely conventional and adventitious. To clothe ourselves in the new and grandly beautiful robes of the simplicity of the truth as it is in Jesus. Let the old rags and tatters of the past go. Do not resurrect them for altar cloths, or hang them as a veil between God and the soul. On the other hand, do not re-enact the folly of the fanatics of Munster, by declaring, as did they, for the naked truth. Truth must be clothed—that is, being abstract, must have its concrete expression to bring it into touch with our life; but let that expression be an improvement on all that has gone before of similar endeavor. Let what we believe be a working plan of what is to be done in our day for Christ and humanity.—Fra. Martin, in Interior.

Genuine Contrition.

The repentance set forth in the gospel as the gate to the kingdom, is a matter much wider than men usually suppose. It is a state as well as an act. So far from being a momentary aversion from sin, it is a state, a turn in the whole tide of life, a permanent settling of the soul towards God. The persistence is required to complete and fill up the act.

In the famous theses nailed to the door of the Wittenberg church, Luther brought out this continuous aspect of repentance: "When our Lord and Master says, 'Repent,' he means that the whole life of believers on earth should be a constant and perpetual repentance." The early Reformation churches went beyond Luther; they assumed that all trained in the true faith and living a sober life were to be regarded as regenerate. They left out of account the importance of the individual will and choice, the conscious turning from sin and the set of the will towards the right.

Then came the reaction, especially in the Methodist movement, which gave emphasis to the momentary act, the conscious aversion from wrong, the act of the individual will heavenward. The individual was separated from the mass and made to realize that his salvation depended upon his personal act. The act should be immediate; the stress was laid, in all their preaching, on the present. Salvation was free and present; and its attainment depended less on the efficacy of any supposed covenant, in which our interests might be bound up with those of innumerable others, than on the conscious acceptance individually of the divinely imposed conditions. This new trend of thought and action was indispensable to the success of the movement. Under the old teaching the sense of individuality had been lost; it was necessary to revive it by an appeal to the conscience of each man.

After travelling so many years in this direction, it may be doubted whether the continuous element in repentance should not again be emphasized, at least, more fully than is now done in most Methodist pulpits, for we assume that all genuine repentance must be both instantaneous and continuous.—Zion's Herald.

Mississippi College.

One year ago the trustees of Mississippi College asked the two Mississippi Conferences to make an assessment of one thousand dollars each for material education in said college. This assessment was levied by both Conferences. On the assessment in the North Mississippi, four hundred and thirty-five dollars were collected and placed to the credit of the Conference with the treasurer of the Board of Trustees. What amount was secured to the Mississippi Conference I do not know. I wish to emphasize the fact, and ask all our preachers to make plain to the people, that this collection is not for the college proper, but for poor young men who are striving to fit themselves to preach the gospel. Many good men, who do not call upon to contribute of the small means to Mississippi College, would gladly deny themselves that which might help educate a worthy young preacher.

We will need all we can secure from these collections. Dear brethren, let us to your people of it. Lay this upon their hearts. The college will open next Fall. The poor preacher-boy will be there, as he is at the opening of our church colleges—he can't remain without help. God has done two things. He has called the young man to prepare to preach. He has called upon him to help him make ready. I can speak for other Conferences; but the time has come for the North Mississippi Conference to do something toward preparing her young men to enter upon the work of preachers and pastors in the church of God. Of a goodly number that comes from year to year desiring to enter this holy office, few are men of trained minds and thoughtful habits. Books assigned to them for study in the four years' course, without an instructor, are in very many respects sealed to them. They do not know how to study, and their circumstances on the charges to which they are not are not conducive to study. These are good and true men—feel called of God to preach, would have attended some good school and college, but they were not able. No doctor, no lawyer, no teacher, mental laborer, succeeds who comes thus unequipped to his work.

My lay brethren, you have not reasons for the ministry—you have an educated one for this great work—perhaps, you would be greatly disappointed and somewhat humiliated were your son, rich in natural gifts and mental culture, to give himself to preaching the gospel. Will you see to it that these collections are full and the young men have all the help they need. The field, as you see, is white unto the harvest, but in those parts most fertile the grain can be garnered by uncultured men. Come to the rescue!

PLEASANTRIES.

Before the Venus of Milo.—Smithers (reading sign, "Hands off!"): "The poor idiot! Do they think anyone could look at that statue and not have the hands were off?"

It was the first time little Beale had ever seen a snake; and, as it writhed along, she ran into the house breathless with her discovery. "O mamma, come quick!" she cried. "Here! I'll tell you here wagging without a dog!"

A Frenchman of some literary distinction, after studying English for a few months, wrote to an American friend: "In small time I can learn many English as I think I will come to the America and go on to the west to lecture."

A successful competitor for the prize in a foot race made the following graceful temperance speech in accepting it: "Gentlemen, I have won this cup by the use of my legs; I trust that I may never lose the use of my legs by the use of this cup."

Mrs. Titile: "Yes, the Climer is looking up. There's that girl of theirs. Mrs. Climer says she's going to have her voice cultivated. It doesn't cost too much." Mrs. Titile: "I guess it won't cost a great deal. It can do its own harrowing, you know."

School-boy: "Mama, I wish you'd let the hired girl put up my lunch instead of doing it yourself." Mama: "It's no trouble, my dear." School-boy: "I know." Mama: "Then you do want her to do it?" School-boy: "'Cause she's got a better appetite than you have, and she puts more in."

It is told that one day during the war a squad of Confederates, weary and captured blue overcoats, rode up to a house in Tennessee, and greeted the owner with, "Well, old man, what you, Reh or Yank?" Puzzled by the blue coats and gray trousers, and not knowing to which army his visitors belonged, Old Caution answered: "Well, gentlemen, I'm noblin' and vory little of that."

An Episcopal and a Methodist clergymen were recently discussing the merits of their respective churches. "Well, anyhow," remarked the Episcopal brother, as a clincher, "we have the apostolic succession." "That's right," cheerfully responded the Methodist; "but we have the apostolic procession." "What's that?" queried the other. "Why, the thrancy," was the reply, "which gives to all our churches a noble procession of apostles."

MISSIONARY.

"ONE CENT A DAY."

One cent a day the Master asks
From every true disciple's hands;
One cent a day to tell his love
And teach his world in foreign lands.

One cent a day to place a star
The gates of mercy wide and broad;
One cent a day to spread afar
The knowledge of our risen Lord.

One cent a day may send a blaze
Of gospel light o'er India's plains;
One cent a day may free a race
For ages bound by error's chains.

One cent a day—on China's shore
We watch the cry and hear the plea;
One cent a day a few more
And struggling China shall be free.

One cent a day may wake the note
Of Zion's song in fair Japan;
One cent a day, O blessed Christ,
May tell of all thy love to man.

How Shall Mohammedans Be Evangelized?

ONE WHO HAS LIVED FORTY YEARS IN THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

The subject is considered under the following heads:

1. Finding means of access to Mohammedans, they repelling all religious and social approach. 2. Their pride and arrogance of opinion, based on the assumption that they are the favorites of heaven. 3. The strength of the fortress which Mohammedanism occupies; because there is so much of the mingled with its errors. 4. Political complications give Mohammedanism greater power to oppose Christianity in the Turkish Empire, for it is a state religion, and so considered as essential to the integrity of the Empire. The death penalty hangs over every Moslem who becomes a Christian; the Koran authorizes this, and religious liberty is inconsistent with the spirit of Islam. 5. Christianity is falsely presented by the character, the habits and conduct of nominal Christians, who still cling to their superstitions and idolatrous worship—dead and life bear the witness. 7. Misconception by the Moslems of the truths of Christianity. They fail to understand what we mean by "calling God our Father," and "believing in a Spirit." 8. No liberty of the public discussion. Has Christianity any allies upon which she can rely? Yes. 1. The progress of human thought, for every discovery is a new peril to Mohammedanism, which is wholly at odds with human progress. The soul awakened to a sense of its wants which Christianity fully meets and Mohammedanism cannot. 3. That course of Divine Providence which is weakening the political power of Islamism. The dismemberment of the Turkish Empire is preparing the way for the incoming of the gospel. What agencies have hitherto proved most successful? 1. The circulation of the Word of God. 2. The education of Moslem children and youth (education means the undermining of the Koran). 3. Little women, who have access to Turkish women in their homes and private life. 4. Cultivation of the acquaintance of Mohammedans, personal and friendly contact and winning attention. 5. Medical, and especially hospital work; the physician being the privileged character, welcomed everywhere and in peril nowhere. Let us emphasize, (1) The vast importance of the theme, as every eighth or tenth person in the world is a Moslem. (2) The difficulties in the way of reaching them do not relieve us of the responsibility of laboring in their behalf.—Missionary Review.

The Origin of Zenana Work.

Understanding from Mrs. Armstrong, of Durham, that Mrs. Elizabeth Sale, of Rockport, Hertsburg, Scotland, could give information of the earliest movement in this direction, I wrote to her, and received the following reply. It will be of great interest to all who are interested in woman's work for woman.—A. T. P.

As soon as I knew enough of the language to make myself understood I began going into the villages among the women of India, in 1852. In 1856 I got first an entrance into a Zenana proper. In 1858 I began work in Calcutta, and worked more than a year in my first house before I got anyone to take anything out of my hand. It was very difficult to get one of the ladies to look at a book, as they feared being made widows if they desired to know anything of the outside world. As soon as some little bits of work were done—a little pair of shoes and a bit of canvas work—I had them make up, which so delighted the husbands and brothers, that the "wonderful work" was taken to other houses, when the needle came to teach there also. The needle work had to be made the wife to induce the women to learn to read. I had then been so far blessed, that the ladies in three Zenanas were daily hearing the Scriptures read, and some read so far broken through their ignorance that they were learning to read. In 1860 my husband was ordered to Europe, when I heard of the arrival of Mrs. Mullens, and her daughter. I wrote to her of this pending, when she came and was introduced to the ladies of the three Zenanas. And from that time the work spread rapidly. Now there is no need of work as a bribe to learn to read; so anxious are the ladies in the Zenanas for instruction that, where we have one female missionary we ought to have a hundred; and would if the Christian Church were alive to its responsibilities. Excuse this hurried reply. I am, Yours in the best bonds,

ELIZABETH SALE.

Every factory and workshop in the land should keep on hand Salvation Oil. 50 cents.

The most reliable family medicine for coughs and colds is Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has three Conferences in India, North India, South India, and Bengal. The statistics have recently been published of the three combined, together with corresponding figures for 1870, and the growth of 20 years thus shown is most cheering. The figures for two decades ago are put in parentheses: Missionaries, 72 (19); wives, 62 (17); Hindustani missionaries, 54 (9); Zenana missionaries, 33 (2); baptisms in 1890, 7,661 (471); native communicants, 11,991 (600); day schools, 853 (117); scholars, 25,540 (4,309); money collected in India in 1890, 217,287 rupees (24,478).

Our Baptist friends are getting ready for the observance of the great Carey Centennial this year. A good deal of literature will, doubtless, be forthcoming, which will be helpful to them, and to all of us. The American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, has just issued "A Century of Baptist Foreign Missions," by Mrs. Titterton. It is an outline of annals, briefly stated, and with a list of questions at the close of each chapter, suggestive of its being used as a text book. It is confined to American Baptist missions in Asia, Africa, Europe, and South America.

The Christian Newspaper.

Whenever the editor of a Christian newspaper urges, through the columns of his journal, the importance of having a paper of this kind placed in the hands of every professed Christian—to say nothing of others—the readers of such utterances are quite apt to infer that the editor is prompted by a selfish motive, and that his object is not so much to secure the highest good of his fellow-Christians as it is to advance the circulation of his paper, and thus reap a pecuniary profit from the same. And hence it is, because of an impression thus made, unfortunately—and I might say, unwarrantably—that editorial exhortations of this kind are often prevented from producing the good, practical effect which they ought to have.

Now, I undertake to say, in behalf of the editors of all truly Christian papers, that their chief and crowning purpose in emphasizing the importance of having a good Christian journal in every family is for the sake of the benighted and benighted results flowing therefrom, rather than for the pecuniary advantages which would accrue to themselves. And such a purpose as this leads me to say something which may induce the readers of this paper to prize, with increasing appreciation, the Christian newspaper. As a pastor, I am frequently pained with regret, when I see so many of my own church, and those also belonging to other churches, who do not take any distinctively Christian paper. It is sometimes amusing, and at other times sadly provoking, to hear the silly excuses which members of our churches make for not taking such a paper. Oftentimes they tell us that they cannot afford to do so, when at the same time they are in good circumstances. Such an excuse is so bold a contradiction of the truth, that a pastor, knowing the man's circumstances, is quite apt to lose confidence in the man's word and profession. The pastor sees that same man spend more money, by far, to support some useless, and even damaging, habit in one year than it would cost to take a first-class Christian paper, or several such papers, it may be, three or four years. The fact is, there is no one so poor who could not, with prudent foresight and a fair amount of industry, provide sufficient means for paying, and paying promptly, for one of his denominational papers. The real difficulty, in many cases, lies in the fact that there is a great lack of wise and devoted interest in the cause of Christ, and this lack of interest is due, in no small measure, to a want of vital spirituality. I know that there are many spiritually-minded Christians who do not take any religious paper, although able to do so. They love the Bible, and read it much; and are frequently engaged in prayer; and yet it may be said they are lacking in that breadth of spirituality which constitutes a fully developed and well-balanced Christian, because wanting the supply of the conditions of a larger intelligence.—Watchman.

The Winter of Discontent.

Every winter we have to combat coughs and colds. When you get a cold, go to your druggist and get a bottle of the favorite remedy for coughs and colds and croup in children—Marsden's Pectoral Balm.

THE PREACHER'S APPOINTMENTS.—The Holston Methodist, in discussing the subject of appointments, says: "What would be a good appointment for one preacher might be a very poor appointment for another preacher. No matter how abundant the opportunities and resources for doing good might be, they would be of no use to the preacher who did not have the capacity to use them. Fitness is to be considered. There is a great variety of talent among preachers, both in kind and degree, and it is fortunate that there is a corresponding variety of appointments. Because an appointment is considered good in the abstract, it is considered good in the abstract, it does not follow that it would be good for a particular preacher. It would be a misfortune to an unlettered preacher to be appointed to labor among a learned and critical people. What might be a good appointment for a preacher of the majority and experience might be a very poor appointment for a novice in the ministry. No worse misfortune could befall a young preacher than to be appointed to a work for which he has not the capacity. He would not only not be able to accomplish any good, but the effect on him would be most hurtful. He would fail, and his failure would cause him to lose confidence in himself, and his friends to lose confidence in him. Both he and they would be expecting a failure next time, and it would come almost inevitably. A young preacher needs to pray to be delivered from unwelcome friends who seek to elevate him before he is qualified for it. In fact, no young preacher can be elevated by his friends—he must elevate himself. If you put him in a place too small for him, the natural demand for a wider place will be an honor. If you put him in a place too large for him, he will begin with shame to take a smaller place—a lower seat."

THE LOTTERY.

The Louisiana Lottery.

The State lying on our eastern border has fallen among thieves and robbers. Her true and loyal citizens are now making a mighty struggle to deliver her from their grip. They deserve the sympathy and prayers of all good people, and whatever other assistance it is possible to render. Neither is this merely a question of sympathy. Self-protection demands that the people of every State in the Union should help put down the lottery. Every State has been for the past twenty-five years robbed by it. One of the arguments used by the robbers for the perpetuation of their nefarious traffic is that the greater part of their booty is drawn from other States. The impression they desire to make is, that, through the lottery, Louisiana is to be enriched by the spoils from other States. That all the States are being continuously robbed by this corporation of gamblers is known to all. The life of the institution for another quarter of a century depends upon the popular vote of the people of that State. It is the question now before them. What is ordinarily called politics has been relegated to the background. The lottery has its ticket in the field, and no means, however foul, will be neglected to perpetuate its existence. It has bought legislators, senators and judges, and it will buy every purchasable vote necessary to carry the election in its favor. It has no lack of funds. It has been for years filling its coffers with stolen money at the rate of about $13,000,000 annually, less expenses of stealing. Whatever the power of money can do, it is able to do. But the stealing of money is not the greatest evil done by this corporation. Its worst result is the wholesale corruption of morals—its wholesale education of the people to gamble. It saps the very foundation of good government.—Texas Christian Advocate.

Only Half a Truth.

In the course of his letter of acceptance, Judge McNary ventures a half-heard defense of the lottery revenue amendment. He is quoted as stating, apologetically, that "in Europe at the present time, in many communities this method of raising money for special purposes is in vogue." This reference is uncandid and misleading. The writer must have known that had he stated his analogy with precision, named the countries in which governments raise money by means of the lottery, their forms of government, and the condition of their populations, the parallel and debase the precedent upon which he would construct a warrant for the Louisiana Lottery. But if this were not so, such an argument is an affront to the intelligence and virtue of a people who are entrusted with self-government, upon the theory of their ability to judge issues and set upright standards through their own intelligence. Judge McNary might, with equal truth and equal force, have said that in some countries of Europe, the knout was used and women sold.

This reference to the European lotteries is fallacious on another respect. They are under such rigid government surveillance as to insure and compel honest administration, and are required to distribute a far greater proportion of the proceeds of sale of tickets in prizes. Nothing so gross and flagrant as this Louisiana Lottery would be tolerated in the Southern European countries—where the lottery prevails. In France or Spain, if the morals are lax—according to our code—the methods are summary and the popular rights and interests are guarded against the outrageous impositions and exactions of corporations; which have too much sway in America.—Clarion.

Dickens never introduced a cleverer piece of portraiture than that of the imaginary philanthropist, the Cheery-Brothers in Nicholas Nickleby. Good deeds and kindness are always pleasant, whether read about or encountered in real life. But there is no philanthropy that comes as close as this of a real remedial agent that can be depended upon to mitigate pain. Such a remedial agent now known through the length and breadth of this great country is Mansfield's Magic Arnica Liniment. It is as useful for animals as for man, and acts as satisfactorily upon one as the other. The lives of thousands of afflicted animals through the West and Southwest have been saved through the use of this valuable remedy, while through its instrumentality thousands of others have been made serviceable that would have been useless, in lameness, spavins, ring-bones, distemper, inflammation, stings and bites, swellings, galls and carbuncles, strains, and indeed practically in all the ailments which are common in animals, it not only relieves, but cures; and thousands of bottles have been sold to veterinarians alone. Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.

Without the newspaper great advertisers can not exist. Without the advertisers, great and small (but mainly the small advertisers), the newspaper of to-day would be impossible.—James H. Rea, Jr.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following: "I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food was digested. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

CROUPY SOUNDS

At night, from baby's crib, are distracting to parents who are at a loss for a medicine equal to the emergency. Not so with those who have Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house. A dose of this medicine affords certain and speedy relief. To cure colds, coughs, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, and the various disorders of the breathing apparatus, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has no equal. It soothes the inflamed tissues, expectorates, and induces repose. Cap. Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children were subject."

"I use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my practice, and pronounce it to be unequalled as a remedy for colds and coughs."—J. G. Gordon, M. D., Carroll Co., Virginia.

BRIEFS.

Our preachers in this city have all "buckled down" to their work like good and true men, and the congregations have "squared themselves" for a year of honest and continuous work for the Master's cause. Our special need now is for a more hearty co-operation in the mission work here. Thousands of people never go to any of the churches, and we must go to them with the gospel. The obligation is on the church to tell out the good news of hope and help to the poor and despairing. We are glad to say that already there are signs of quickening in our mission work here, and we believe that we shall see much good done on this line during the year. We need means to enlarge this work. We can use this year to the great advantage of the church and to the good and salvation of souls the sum of five thousand dollars, and we ought to have it. Can not the religious business men of our church put us in the way to get this sum? What a thrill of joy would shoot through the heart of the church in Louisiana and Mississippi; if we could announce through this paper that that amount had been raised for domestic mission work in our city during this year! Such an announcement going out from this center would kindle enthusiasm and encouragement all over our territory, and would be a signal evidence of our devotion to the cause of humanity and of Christ. Such an announcement would be a challenge to every other place, great and small, to emulate us in "rescuing the perishing." Are we able to do this? Yes, abundantly able! Are we willing to do this? We wait to hear the answer.

A sneer is the last argument to bolster up a lost cause. The lottery papers and speakers are just now very free in the use of this argument. They are applying sneering epithets to the Anti-Slavery with a profusion which shows that they have run short of legitimate reasons for their cause. We remember to have read of one Oliver Cromwell and his adherents who were reproached as being "saints," and to-day those "saints" are universally regarded as the men who gave England the best government on the continent of Europe at that time. The "saints" who are fighting the lottery intend to do the same for Louisiana, and thus show what saintship can do in modern days.

Judge Marr, of this city, has decided that a "primary election" is not an election that comes within the purview of the law governing elections. The case came up under an indictment of a man for selling liquors on election day within less than a mile of the polling place. The defense demurred on the ground that a primary election was not such an election as the law contemplated, and Judge Marr sustained the demurrer. Hereafter, "primary elections" will be more disgraceful than ever.

Editorial Correspondence.

It is surprising how much fuss a little thing can make. When one of these little two-dollar-fifty-cent nickel-plated alarm clocks, for instance, goes off at the dead hour of midnight! Only one experience of this kind fully explains the exclamation of a certain old lady the first time she ever heard one: "Land o' sakes, old man, the judgment day sho' is comin'!" As often as we have been aroused by these little clocks, we have never failed of springing out of bed and seizing it—as if that was the very thing to do.

It was one of these delightful (?) little surprises that warned us at three o'clock on the morning of the fifth instant, that the west-bound train on the A. and V. railroad was about due. In due time we steamed out of Jackson en route to Vicksburg to look after the interests of the Christian Advocate. After an inviting breakfast at the parsonage of the Crawford Street Church, we began our work. In company with the pastor, Rev. W. B. Lewis, we spent the day mounting stairs, climbing hills, working our way through the maze of railroad tracks and machinery, and such like. When we had finished our work we felt convinced that Dr. Chapman, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, must have had a somewhat similar experience which caused him to write quite recently that Vicksburg excelled ancient Rome, in that it was situated on fourteen hills instead of seven. But our greetings were so cordial, the kind words we heard of the Advocate so many, the responses so cheerful, we were more than repaid for the jaunt.

We found business a little dull after the holidays, but there is always a calm after a storm. We judge houses must be in demand, for we found two in the middle of the street. We had the pleasure of looking at the site selected for the Northeast Vicksburg Mission Church. While some objections might be made to it, we are told it is admirably situated to meet the present demand. We were gratified to find so much interest manifested in this point, and sincerely hope by next December the work will command the serious attention of the Board of Missions, practically manifested.

Bro. Robertson, of South Vicksburg, has moved into his parsonage on South Washington street, and he and Bro. Lewis are both cheerful and hopeful. At eight A. M., on Wednesday, we left for Fayette via the L., N. O. and T. railroad. Bro. Brady, our pastor there, took the train at Harrison and went down with us. Our reception was equally cordial with that of Vicksburg. In the face of a blustering wind laden with dust and fine sand, we went from house to house renewing old acquaintances, thus combining pleasure and business. Many with whom we have romped and frolicked in childhood are now listening to the prattle of their own little ones; many veterans of the cross have laid aside their armor for the crown; and many recruits have become leaders of the Lord's hosts. The church-building in Fayette has been renovated, and is now a model of neatness. The church at Harrison is a new building not quite finished. It is built after a plan furnished by the parent Board of Church Extension, and, like all others built from these furnished plans, reflects great credit on the society. It is the desire of the brethren to have this church dedicated some time this year. The building and lot are the property of the M. E. Church, South. Harrison has grown considerably within the past twelve months, and it was a wise move to occupy that field.

We came to Port Gibson on the midnight train, Wednesday, to attend the meeting of the district stewards of the Vicksburg district, which was called to meet at ten o'clock, Thursday, morning. Presiding Elder Little was there looking hearty as ever, and well equipped for the fray. Bros. Lewis, of Vicksburg; Stevens, of South Warren; Cowan, of Martin, and Roberts, of Utica, were there, besides the official board. The attendance was as large as we have ever seen, and from what we saw and heard each delegate must have come "instructed." But when it was learned that the assessment on the district had been increased about five hundred dollars, each assumed his share cheerfully, and the apportionments were made without friction. The question of a district parsonage was discussed, but definite action was postponed until the meeting of the District Conference. Taken as a whole, the meeting was instructive and profitable.

The outlook at Port Gibson is quite hopeful. They are preparing for a forward move. The policy of Methodism since its birth in Oxford University, England, has been to move forward. In so far as we move forward, to that extent do we widen our sphere of usefulness and prepare ourselves for greater things from above.

B. F. L.

Sin and Salvation.

Christianity, looked at as a system of ethics, offers this distinctive feature: it puts the greatest possible stigma upon sin, and at the same time it offers the greatest possible hope to the sinner.

On the one hand, no other code of morals is so severe, so rigid, so exacting, so inexorable in its demands for a life of entire and absolute purity. Nowhere else is such a high standard of purity fixed. Nowhere else is so little allowance made for sin, so little toleration towards it shown. No other religion is so searching in its casuistry, so inquisitorial in its arraignment of conscience, so unsparing in the tax it levies upon human character, whether upon its passive or its active side. No other law of human life makes so few exceptions, no other grants so few exemptions. No other book contains such homilies against sin as the Bible, such invectives, such threats, such denunciations, such anathemas. No other jurisprudence prescribes such terrible penalties for the transgression of its laws, or enforces those penalties with so divine a sanction. No other penal system is so awful, so infinite in its severity: "The wages of sin is death;" no other is so universal in its application: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" no other is so unqualified in its ascription of guilt: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

Other legislators have been content to let the overt act constitute the criminal. It is not so with the law of Christ. Human justice would teach us that adultery means illegitimate cohabitation; Jesus teaches that it means uncleanness of heart. Human justice would teach us that murder means the unlawful taking of human life; but Jesus, in his new interpretation of the law, proclaims that ill-will in the heart constitutes man at once a moral murderer.

Almost every other legal requisition or legal penalty is based solely on what a man does; it has been left for the biblical scheme to propose to punish a man for what he does not, as well as for what he does. Its broader and more comprehensive scope includes sins of omission as well as of commission. One definition of sin is given in the weighty words, "Sin is the transgression of the law;" but another and not less significant definition is given when it is declared that "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

But, while we have here the most omniscient analysis of sin, the most unbending austerity towards it, the most unmeasured condemnation of it, the direst penalty against it; yet, on the other hand, Christianity holds out to the sinner his brightest hope, and affords him the only solid ground of safety. Herein is drawn the most boundless and emphatic antithesis in the universe. God hates sin, but loves the sinner. On the one hand, sin is heinous in the sight of God; it is an abomination to him; he will surely visit it with death, and with such a death as only the vocabulary of the infinite can portray. But, on the other hand, the sinner is the child of his tenderest love; of so great a love that he gave his only-begotten and well-beloved Son to die for him amid the shameful odium and untold agonies of the cross. "For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

Set over against Sinai, there is Calvary. In contrast with the thunderings of divine law and divine wrath, there are the gentle wooings of divine compassion and divine mercy by which the sinner is urged and entreated to come back to God and be reconciled to him. The very words in which these invitations are couched are all a thrill and a throb with the pulse of divine affection. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways," says the All-father, in loving remonstrance with the disobedient and refractory nation upon whom all the treasures of his grace had been lavished in vain; "turn ye, for why will ye die, O house of Israel." "Come unto me," says the All-savior, stretching out the arms of his love to a burdened world; "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." And then, as if to pile Pelion upon Ossa of divine urgency, he adds, with the imperative promise of a royal grace, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." And the apostle catches the sweet echo of his words, and says, "He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." And John, the beloved disciple, standing amid the glories of that great and final revelation, where the dawning splendor of the New Jerusalem light up the rocky cliffs and barren wastes of "sea-girt" Patmos, records, as if in a last and lingering refrain, the tender words in which the chorus of divine grace still beseeches the sinner: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

A due sense of this gigantic scriptural contrast will be helpful in comprehending and in presenting Jesus as the world's Redeemer from sin. We need to realize that the weight of a divine and infinite opprobrium rests against sin; sin in all its forms, sin in any of its forms, sin everywhere, sin anywhere. We need also to realize the exhaustless depth of God's love for the sinner; the most hardened sinner, the lowliest, the basest, the chief of sinners.

The philosophy of the contrast is not far to seek. The problem is not hard to solve. The key to it is found in the cross. Here "vengeance and compassion join, in their divinest forms." Vengeance towards sin, compassion towards the sinner. From no other standpoint can we so well take in the mystery of the iniquity of sin as from that spot where we can look upon the dying Son of God, and know that he is giving his life to atone for sin. And the broken, expiring heart of Jesus is also the focal point of the manifestation of God's love to the sinner.

Paul, in the magnificent argument of the Epistle to the Romans, approaches to the very core and center of a demonstration of the whole theorem, and a statement of both sides of it, when he declares, "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

"Thus, while his death my sin displays,
In all its blackest hue,
Such is the mystery of grace,
It seals my pardon, too."

Mutually Honored.

A private note from Rev. Dr. Waller, secretary of the British Wesleyan Conference, informs us that Bishop C. B. Galloway has been elected to preach the annual sermon before the Foreign Missionary Society of that body. Dr. Waller says: "This sermon is generally preached by a distinguished minister of another church, and some of the leading Non-conformists have occupied the pulpit on the occasion. No American minister, so far as I know, has been asked. The reason for this might be the great distance. In years past we have had such men as Drs. Dale, Spurgeon, McGregor, McLaren, Raleigh, Parsons, Binney, and the very flower of our British ministers. This is meant as a mark of honor to Bishop Galloway." Our whole church will be greatly pleased with this courtesy to our fraternal representative. We trust that Bishop Galloway will be able to comply with the request that is made of him.—Nashville Advocate.

This is a great honor conferred upon Bishop Galloway, but it is worthily bestowed.

We regret, however, to state that Bishop Galloway says his duties are such that he can not visit England so early as the time of holding the anniversary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. The Wesleyans will miss a great speech for that occasion, but will be repaid by the Bishop's visit and speeches and sermons at their Annual Conference. Add when it is all over, they will consider that we have done them as much honor in sending Bishop Galloway to them as they did to us in sending Dr. Waller to our General Conference.

The Grave of Lorenzo Dow.

I see from a communication in the Advocate that the Mississippi Conference wishes to know where Lorenzo Dow is buried. In the Advocate, of the seventh, J. H. Lane gives the traditional place to be on the bank of the Amite river in Louisiana. A hand-book of Washington City, which I have, speaking of the cemeteries of that city, says, that in the Western, later known as the Holmead Cemetery, on 19th St., between S and T streets, N. W., rested for forty years the remains of Lorenzo Dow. Removed to "Oak Hill" Cemetery (Washington City) in 1874. If the committee will write to the proper authorities of this cemetery, they will find out if this statement is correct.

MISS ANNIE H. GIBBS.

P. S.—The reason given for moving the body of Lorenzo Dow was the Holmead Cemetery was to be done away with.

NOTES.

Brother, don't "mark time" forever. March! march!

What is needed these days is a waking conscience added to a living heart.

If you have power at all in any direction, remember that it is given you for helpfulness!

There is a great deal of truth in what Hannah Whitall Smith says: "A deal of so-called spiritual conduct is simply spiritual rebellion."

If every man and woman in the church would turn out and do honest day's work for Christ, it would change the complexion of the whole world.

Practical religion is defined by one of our contemporaries as a "self-rendering devotion to the good of mankind." Such a religion is ever-present, never-absent want of old sinful world.

It is said that a very simple experiment will demonstrate that a man don't like to be shown the back that is in him. The experiment is this: "Show a cross child in a mirror, and he will strike it." That tells the whole story, preaching that shows a man how filthy he is will be resented in his bones out of ten.

An exchange says of a certain preacher: "He seldom or never preached without actual conversion. He always expected conversion, and his faith was not in vain." This is a profound divine philosophy to explain the success of that preacher. It is found in the Psalmist, and commended by Paul, and is simply this: "We believe and therefore speak." It is so with you, brother?

"A revived ministry will be followed by a revived church, and a revived church will be followed by a converted world." Take it backward, and a minister will see how completely he is needed with the whole plan for recovery and salvation. This also the great duty and the immense responsibility of the relation. Looking at it thus, have we, as ministers, a clear conception of our position? Do we realize the real, tremendous fact of the case?

More than 500,000 people from Europe came in 1891 to live among us. The class of immigrants is not what once was, and because of this fact more thoughtful statesmen look with some apprehension upon the result which must follow from the class people that come to us in these last days. The ignorant and superstitious and vicious and socialistic do not produce a great deal to the maintenance of the virtue and patriotism of our country. We fear serious trouble in the future.

In the deafening whirl of the machinery of social, political and church life we are apt to forget the all-important fact of personal influence. In our last analysis all influence is personal. There is some person somewhere back of every machine. The machine is the expression of personal influence. So it is in art, in philosophy and religion. There is nothing else than the vehicles of personal influence. Let us not forget the back of our church machinery is great Person, and that, through the church, He is achieving the greatest thing ever attempted, and that is, salvation. And He alone can do it.

The distinction between church music and God's praise is of vital importance. They are two things separable, and may be wholly distinct. There may be the finest music, less in its taste and execution, and in its character, with not one element of praise. Praise means to the highly of God, and express through the lips the heart's exalted estimate of him. The musician may have his grace and influence of art and genius, and God be far away. Praise is God in the heart, and its song is out in melody to him. Many are missing the serious mistake of substituting church music for God's praise. It is of first importance in God's service. Its virtue can not be magnified. Church music serves the purpose of flowers at a funeral.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"A waste howling wilderness," do not know who invented that expression, probably some man who never been outside of the city limits of London or Boston. We have never a wilderness, but never a "wasting" one.—Interior.

We respectfully ask the privilege to inform the Interior that neither London nor Boston can claim the nationality the expression. We have found the book that originated in neither place and its author never so much as heard of either of them. When the expression was "coined," the author was from personal experience what he was talking about. If the Interior has an old book, commonly called the Bible, and will turn to the tenth verse of the thirty-second chapter of Deuteronomy, these words will be found: "Hear him in a desert land, in the howling wilderness." An apology Moses is in order.

Established Facts:

That the ROYAL BAKING POWDER is the oldest and purest baking powder, and the greatest in leavening strength.

That it is free from every injurious substance.

That it makes lighter, sweeter, more nutritious and healthful food than any other.

The Royal Baking Powder Company refines its own cream of tartar in its own mammoth refinery, and thus insures its unvarying quality.

There is used in the manufacture of the Royal Baking Powder more than half of the cream of tartar consumed in the United States for all purposes. This is required and must be chemically pure, and chemically pure cream of tartar could not be obtained in the markets of this country or Europe which necessitated the building of special works, and the employment of special processes.

All other baking powders, when analyzed, show traces of lime and sulphuric acid, which arise from the impurities of the materials bought in the market, which their manufacturers use.

This is why the Royal Baking Powder is the only absolutely pure baking powder made.

VOL. 39.—NO. 4.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1892.

WHOLE NO. 1849.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. LEWIS, Asst. Editor.

A Revelation of the Lottery.

Judge Frank McGloin, of the Louisiana Court of Appeals, and Mr. J. C. Wickliffe, one of the founders of the Anti-Lottery League and editor of The Delta, the anti-lottery daily of New Orleans, both contribute papers to the January number of The Forum, the crisis in Louisiana. Judge McGloin discusses the question, Shall the charter of the Lottery Company be renewed? and Mr. Wickliffe gives a history of the company up to date. The facts stated by these two writers confirm all that has been spoken and written concerning the infamous character of the lottery managers and their business. If the history had been that of a regularly organized gang of thieves and swindlers, having no other reason for existence than the plunder of the people, it could not be any blacker than it is. The marauder Lafitte, who once had his lair in the swamps of Louisiana, was not a more implacable, dangerous and formidable enemy to society than John A. Morris and his associates in the lottery industry. Late made no pretence of being anything else than a free-booter, whereas Morris and his hand try to invest their plunderings with an air of legality and respectability.

The writers of The Forum articles show that from the beginning of its history the Lottery Company has been supported at nothing fair or foul to accomplish its purposes. It has bought legislatures, corrupted the judiciary, subsidized the Press, bribed judges and senators, and in some cases openly defied and overruled the processes of the courts. Even darker crimes than these are laid at its doors. To what length the conspirators will go in carrying out their plans is illustrated in an incident which occurred at Baton Rouge last summer. After the Legislature had adjourned, it was discovered that all the constitutional requirements of the matter of the lottery amendment had not been complied with. Immediately the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House were telegraphed to come to New Orleans. They came, and, after a consultation, they went to Baton Rouge, the capital, with Lloyd, one of the lottery senators, and changed and altered the journals of the two Houses so as to make them show that these formalities had been observed. The journals had already been printed, but not bound. They destroyed four forms of twelve pages each, forty-eight pages in all, and had thirty-eight new ones set up containing the changes. Of course, this was clearly an unwarrantable and unlawful act; but the agents of the lottery cared nothing for that. The bold manner in which some of the judges of the State show their subservieny to the Lottery company was shown in the case of a legislator who was arrested during the session last year under an information for receiving a bribe, filed by the district attorney. The evidence was as conclusive as circumstantial evidence could well be. The lottery officers were summoned to attend the trial and produce the books and vouchers of the Lottery Company. They disobeyed the subpoena and went to the State of Mississippi, beyond the jurisdiction of the court. The judge called the case up after ten o'clock at night on the day of the term of court, and ordered the district attorney to proceed with the trial, despite the district attorney's showing that the witnesses for the State had refused to obey the summons to attend and testify, and that the books of the Lottery Company were not in court. The judge peremptorily ordered him to go on with the case. This the district attorney refused to do, and in order to prevent the defendant from having a good plea of former jeopardy, entered a "nolle prosequi," thus reserving to the State the right to indict him again.

Incidents of this kind might be multiplied almost without number. Outside of the bonded liquor interests, there exists in the United States no more audacious and so formidable in its proportions as the Louisiana Lottery. Its triumph in the present struggle would mean the turning over of one of the oldest and largest States in the republic to the service of a band of robbers as heartless, as selfish and as cruel as ever out-throated or scuttled a ship. No effort can be too great and no sacrifice too dear that shall prevent the consummation of this foul conspiracy against the welfare and happiness of a people.

Enough has been said as to the character and purposes of the Louisiana Lottery Company. The important thing now is to render the greatest amount of practical service to the citizens of Louisiana who are seeking to free the State from the grasp of this powerful and avaricious enemy. These citizens need not sympathy only, but they need money. There are numberless ways in which money can be spent legitimately and to good advantage in the fight which the Anti-Lottery League is waging. The Christian people of the country should make common cause with their brothers in Louisiana who are struggling not only to save their State from further shame and dishonor, but to defeat and suppress an organized iniquity whose evil and demoralizing influence extends over the whole land. The Christian people of the United States may, indeed, count no cost too great in the effort to overthrow this monstrous business. If the lottery is defeated in Louisiana, it is not likely again to secure a foothold in this republic. Let the citizens of the North then rally to the battle. It would be well if anti-lottery mass meetings could be held in every community in the land during these winter months, the main object of these meetings being to raise money to send to Louisiana. Every church might well devote some part of its beneficent fund to this cause during the next six months, even if it were necessary to divert it from its regular channels for the purpose. We know of no cause in which a little money might do more actual and immediate good than in this anti-lottery campaign. The Christian people of this country can not afford to let the lottery win. It is as much their fight, in a large and true sense, as it is the fight of the people of Louisiana.—Christian at Work.

Preachers and Congregations.

This is an age when self-assertion is one of the enterprises of the day. Men must assert themselves one way or another; they must make themselves felt at all costs. Hence, we often have foolish assertions. Then we have had no little of a style of church and pulpit ministrations that has made our people restless and produced weariness. They have had a maneuvering, sensational, quackish sort of gospel preached to them until they can not be satisfied with any other. Their appetites have been vitiated; they have lost their power, and now they will not endure sound doctrine. The evil of this is twofold. They decline in spirituality and divine power, while they become more critical and harder to satisfy. They must have the yellow-back, dime-novel style of gospel, or they must have another preacher. Of course, this light literature in the pulpit must not be too coarse; and hence, if our preachers will develop in the art of putting some history, philosophy, politics and a little religion now and then into his sermons to make the thing respectable, he will be "the man for our church and our times." Very few men know how to mix things that way, and hence very few men are in demand for these churches. We notice, too, that when a church sets itself to do the good old honest work of saving the world and making men better, there is not much trouble in pleasing them in a preacher.

But we can not deny the fact also that the preachers have not developed as fully as our opportunities demand. We, too, are much disposed to cavil about little things, and spend our lives on minor matters. We have some mind to please the people, and are dwarfed or worn out trying to carry the burdens that a worldly and exacting church has put on our shoulders. We are trying to catch attitudes, assume airs, take on tones, and deliver striking utterances that will please the popular ear and create a demand for our service. Of course, we fail, and, of course, we grow little all the time, and must soon go to the superannuated list, or into some pocket that has been made for us. When will we learn sense? The kingdom of God is not like any other kingdom, and can't be run on the lines of other kingdoms. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual. We do not need to develop in the ways of the world, or the demands of a worldly church, but in the ways of God and his Word, of Christ and his Spirit.

What we need now is to get back to our work. Preachers and churches have but one work; "Behold the Lamb!" A church that does not carry Christ to the unsaved masses is no church, is a cumberer of the ground, and the sooner it is torn down the better. And the preacher who has not the one aim of putting the life of Christ in the hearts and lives of his hearers, and making them better, has lost his bearings, and had better go back to the starting point and fix his eye. We need to study more and study better. We need not burn more of the midnight oil, perhaps, but we do need to burn more daylight in our work, and especially to focalize more rays of the Sun of Righteousness on it. I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the Word; be instant in season, and out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." (Paul to Timothy.)—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

One Sermon Felt.

A brother seated by the table, a few weeks ago, remarked that one of the best tests of a good sermon is that its preparation has added to the stock of the preacher's own knowledge. This, without doubt, a practical test of a good sermon; and many sermons utterly fail when submitted to this test. Their preparation adds absolutely nothing to the preacher's own knowledge; they are simply a recasting of facts already in his possession. They are as a former Scotch pastor of this writer used to say: "Could call 'em o'er again.'" Such preaching profits the preacher but little; indeed, sermons of this class may injure him by making his work professional, perfunctory and powerless. If a preacher can honestly say when he has prepared a sermon, that in its preparation he has become a larger man, intellectually, and a better man, spiritually, he certainly has a sermon which will greatly benefit the people to whom it is preached. If its preparation has added considerably to his growth, its delivery will add greatly to the growth of the hearers. Rarely is a man justified in preaching a sermon whose preparation has not made him a bigger and a better man. The recasting of familiar truths and the rehearsing of platitudes is a process of doubtful value, intellectually, and of equally doubtful morality. This does not imply that old texts and former themes should not be used again; but it does imply that into the old texts and themes the larger life of a growing pastor should be liberally infused. It is a great thing for a pastor occasionally to attack themes which he must honestly admit are at the time of the attack above his level. He must work himself up by patient thought, careful reading, and earnest prayer as nearly as possible to the high level of these great themes. He must keep this exalted standard constantly before his mind. He ought to have such a theme always in his thought and on his anvil, and about once a month he can give the people the results of his most careful and thorough work. The standard of his ministry will thus be vastly exalted and his reputation will be fixed at the height of this higher reach. Once a month, at least, there ought to come a sermon far above the average in a pastor's ministry; the late President Anderson used to say to the writer: "Once a month give them a smasher." It is also greatly wise in the settled pastorate to select not only themes of this character, but long lines of thought. The pastor might take the summer vacation to select these lines, breaking them up into appropriate topics. Let him not accuse himself of presumption, at aiming at a high mark; let him rather stoik deeply into his sides the spurs of a noble ambition, and then drive himself to the use of every ounce of power which God has bestowed. It is impossible for a long pastorate to avoid ruts, platitudes and repetitions except there be this constant reaching up to higher things, and this annual selection of new fields of thought, and this higher ambition to enter these fields and to traverse them to the utmost limits which time and talent permit. Seldom ought a pastor to prepare a sermon which does not add to his stock of knowledge, which does not send the red blood leaping through his body to the enlargement of his brain, and which does not send great thoughts plowing their way through the depths of his soul. A pastor who so works will never run out in any field of labor; he will always be fresh, vigorous, masterful in the pulpit, in the prayer meeting, and in the social circle.—Dr. R. S. McArthur.

Letter from Mrs. Weems.

MR. EDITOR: Letters from Mexico carry me back to that interesting field, and awake afresh my interest and sympathy for those dear people. Our leave-taking was so painful that at first I could not speak of it; but now that I see my husband improving in health, my hopes are brighter and my heart lighter. Our native ministers, and many of the lay brethren, our Bible women, teachers and pupils followed us to the train. We bade them farewell with tears, and they write that they still weep over our departure. But there are brave and true workers there to carry on the work, so that there can be no loss. We will ever feel a deep interest in that work, and carry it ever on our hearts. We brought with us one of the Mexican girls who was given to me; the other I left in Miss Holding's care, in Laredo, Texas. I want very much to educate the little girl I have, and send her back to Mexico to do the work I so longed to perform.

Last Sunday I met the children in our church in Brookhaven, and organized a society of Little Workers for the missionary cause. We enrolled thirty names. They agreed to meet every week; sing and pray and pay their dues for missions. No doubt, Dr. John will hear from these Little Workers later on.

We are hoping and praying for a prosperous year in our church here. I trust all our friends will unite with us in this prayer. It seems to me if there is one place in Mississippi, more than another, that ought to be deeply plous, it is Brookhaven. Here we have that grand institution of learning, Whitworth College, whose pupils are each Sabbath brought to church and Sabbath-school. They, of course, will be more or less affected by the spiritual state of the church. We are all striving to be more careful in our lives, that we may do these precious souls good.

Our presiding elder resides here, and our church has reason to feel proud of its nice home for the presiding elder, and the one for the pastor also.

Mr. Weems is now so far improved as to be able to fill his pulpit last Sabbath. We had much interest manifested in all the services of the day. We trust each Sabbath may be to us a Sabbath day's journey toward the kingdom of our Lord and Savior.

Pray for us and for poor Mexico, and let our people continue to send contributions for our much-needed church.

S. G. WEEMS.

Brookhaven, Jan. 20, 1892.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. P. Lewis: "The sun is out to-day (Jan. 15) for the first time in a week. We have just had the coldest and most disagreeable spell of weather we have had in this country for many years. With a good house and plenty of fire-wood, it is difficult to keep warm. Sister Mary Jane McLaughlin, of Bethel Church, died on Jan. 12, of typhoid fever. She was in the fifty-second year of her age. She died in peace at Dr. R. R. Applewhite's, one of her sons-in-law. She leaves six children—three sons and three daughters—and a host of grandchildren to mourn their loss. A good woman is gone to rest. To-date eleven have been received by letter; twelve removed by letter; one has died."

Rev. W. J. O'Bryant, Black Hawk, Miss., Jan. 13: "After a long and tedious journey through the country, I met the wife and children in Carrollton, Miss., where Bro. J. R. Bingham had secured a hack; were then escorted by him to this kind Christian home, where he and his good wife did all in their power to make us pleasant and happy during our stay. May the Lord bless them! We reached Black Hawk, Saturday, in the afternoon, about four o'clock, where Sisters Johnson and Conner waited to welcome us to our parsonage-home with pleasant smiles, brisk-burning fire, and a pot of hot coffee; the table well-laden with luxuries nicely prepared, and the safe displayed the culinary art in wonderful variety. In the cook-room we found flour, lard, sugar and coffee at our disposal. Sunday, at eleven, I preached to the good people of Black Hawk, and on Sunday night we had a most excellent sermon from Rev. R. A. Meek, of Carrollton, which was edifying to the people; and on Monday night we had the 'pounding,' participated in by the good people generally. They continued to come till some twenty-five or thirty were present, bringing in quite a variety of things, all of which were profitable to the inmates of the parsonage. May the good Lord bless and abundantly prosper the good people! So you see, Mr. Editor, the people of Black Hawk circuit know how to receive their preacher, in order to make him feel at home and get a good year's work out of him. We are praying for and expecting great results this year.

I have visited and prayed with about fifty families since Conference; received into the church one adult by certificate. Hope we will be enabled to leave behind as many warm-hearted friends, and do as much good as our predecessor, Rev. B. F. Phillips."

Rev. A. J. Jones, Valden, Miss., Jan. 14: "We are in the parsonage at Valden at last. A change being made after Conference caused considerable delay in getting moved. We met with a very warm reception, just such as makes a preacher and his family feel at home at once. On New Year's Day the ladies stormed us with a pound party, supplying a very important part of a parsonage-böme. I believe we are to serve a kind and appreciative people. Work is abundant. The man who follows such workers as Bros. Evans and Lagrone will have his hands full to keep up. We have received one into the church on profession of faith, and trust that we may be able to add many to the name during the year. Pray for us, brethren, that we may have a prosperous year at Valden."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Caseyville, Lincoln county, Miss.: "We are comfortably fixed up in a nice new parsonage, well finished, well furnished, large, roomy, and it don't leak. Did you ever live in a leaky parsonage? We have four large rooms, kitchen and dining-room, with a nice little store-room; and every part of the inside, even back to kitchen and store-room, nicely celled and painted. Then we have a good corn-crib, two good stalls and buggy-house, good garden spot, nice yard for children to play in—all in a good neighborhood, among religious people. We have three churches near by—Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist. Preaching every Sunday, and Sunday-school every Sunday evening. So far, congregations have been good, notwithstanding the cold and rain. The people here speak well of their former pastors: Johnson, B. F. Jones, Caldwell, Hinds, Howell, Ellison and Ellis—all good men, yet living and doing good work. Again, they say, 'Let's have a revival.' I say, 'Amen!' to that. If we want it, we can have it; if we have it, let us have it on God's terms. What are his terms? Let us look to Isaiah, first chapter; begin with the sixteenth verse, read down to the twentieth verse. Also read Malachi III, 10. Then look to God, not man, for the revival needed. Let us not be satisfied with a mere ripple upon the surface. No, no. Let the work be deeply rooted, thorough, genuine; let our motto be, 'Holiness to the Lord'; let us not quarrel about how it is obtained—leave that to others. Don't stop to theorize, but get to work early; do a great deal of earnest praying; ask in faith, nothing wavering, and God will hear you. Let us be guided by the Divine hand. We must 'abide in Christ' if we would bring forth fruit to perfection."

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, Australia, Miss.: "I arrived at Australia last Saturday. Found the people looking for me, of course, as the preacher's few days of grace were about out. I follow some good, strong men here, who have done their work faithfully and well. The man whom I immediately follow is Bro. O. L. Savage. The people here remember him kindly, and many of them say he is the biggest preacher in the Conference. To those who know him, this statement needs no elaboration. I am comfortably domiciled in the parsonage all alone. I never cooked enough to get my hand in good, and, therefore, I take my meals at Bro. D. J. Allen's. My first quarterly meeting was held yesterday. The weather was so very inclement that only a few were in attendance; but we had a good time. Bro. Standerfer, our presiding elder, preached us a good gospel sermon. The people hold him in very high esteem. I am looking and praying for a good time this year. The Lord give it to us throughout this district and throughout this Delta country. We have a hospitable and kind people here, and, I must confess, a great deal more religious than I expected to find. This whole Delta needs salting down with the salt of which our Savior spoke. Put it on pretty heavy; then take off your gloves and rub it in. It is a rough process; but it will save the meat when everything else fails. I trust that the same fervent desire may be enkindled in every heart throughout this country that lived and burned in the prophet's heart, and that glowed in inextinguishable flame upon his lips, when he said: 'For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.'"

Rev. P. M. Brown, Amite City, Jan. 14: "Have just finished reading the last issue of our ADVOCATE. The clarion notes of its editorial columns arouse our slumbering energies from the torpor into which they had fallen under the influence of this unusually freezing weather. We lay the paper aside with the wish in our heart that its inspiring influence could be felt in every Methodist home upon our pastoral charge. And why should not this be so? We are almost ready to say that this shall be our aim during the year which has just begun. Wonder and anxiety had full possession of our heart and mind upon the closing day of the recent session of the Mississippi Conference we sat before Bishop Hendrix to receive our first appointment in the Methodist itinerancy. The great question of, Where shall we be sent? was soon changed to, How shall we get there? In order to meet the demands of a depleted purse, we determined to make most of the trip to our work by hack. On Jan. 1, after the sun had dispelled the clouds and showers of the early morn, which had threatened a stormy day, we turned our backs on the little town of Slaughter, which had been the scene of the past year's labors as teacher and preacher. After a pleasant, but rather muddy, drive of forty-two miles, about eight p. m. we drove into the beautiful little town of Amite City. We soon found some of our flock, and were conducted to the parsonage by Bro. A. P. Stewart. The ladies, who were waiting to receive us, had left, having despaired of our arrival at so late an hour. However, rekindling the dying embers of what had been a cheerful blaze on the hearth, we found, upon inspection, that the good ladies had anticipated and provided for our every temporal want with comfortable rooms and beds, and a larder well-filled with the nicest of groceries. Amid these cozy surroundings we erected the family altar, and, with hearts overflowing with gratitude to God and these, as yet, unknown friends, reconsecrated ourselves to the work of the gospel, and entered with buoyant hopes (which, we hope, are not all youthful enthusiasm) upon our year's labors. The intimation thus received, that our lines had fallen to us in pleasant places, has been verified by further acquaintance with the people of the circuit. We are well pleased to find this a prohibition parish. The parish court in session, with a jail with open doors and empty cells, is a fine illustration of the wholesome effects of the banishment of the open saloon. With this out of our way, and with the hope that in a few months that other great obstacle to religious work in Louisiana, the lottery, will be buried beyond resurrection by the righteous indignation of our commonwealth, we are encouraged to believe that success will attend our efforts this year. However, the devil is by no means idle, but is alive and active in various other forms. To follow successfully such zealous and indefatigable men as Bros. Keen and Anders will tax the capaciousness of mind and heart. Your 'field editor' is cordially invited to visit us in the interest of the ADVOCATE at his earliest convenience."

SINS OF OMISSION.

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you a bit of headache
At the setting of the sun.
The tender word, foretold,
The letter you did not write,
The flower you might have sent, dear,
Are your haunting ghosts to-night.

The stone you might have lifted
Out of a brother's way,
The lot of brotherly counsel
You were hurried too much to say,
The gentle and winsome tone,
That you had no time to thought for,
With trouble enough of your own.

The little acts of kindness
So easily out of mind,
Those chances to be angels
Which every one may find,
They come in night and silence,
Each child, reproachful wrath,
When hope is faint and tagging,
And a blight has dropped on faith.

For life is all too short, dear,
And sorrow is all too great,
To suffer our slow compassion
That tarries until too late,
And it's not the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you the bit of headache
At the setting of the sun.

"Gilderoy" and His Books.

Well, I've been shut indoors for a week or more. The weather has been too bad for anything. First, we had four days of rain, and then a cold wave came, and now everything is hard frozen. All I could do was to build fires and read and write.

I read with great relish "Echoes from Foreign Shores," by Rev. P. L. Stanton, now residing at Pueblo, Colo. This is a good book, written in a taking style for the young people. It is published in fine style by our own House at Nashville, Tenn. Those who want a good book for their children, one they will read, let them send for this one. A few typographical errors mar its pages.

I then dropped into "Pope's Compendium of Christian Theology," and read with great care and much prayer all he has to say on regeneration and sanctification. In the matter of suggestiveness, provoking thought, this book is far ahead of any theological work I have at my command. For this reason I enjoy it more than any other. It leaves me something to do, and stirs me up to doing it. The suggestions grow into sermons.

With this I turned back to some old books—some I had read when a boy, and again the first year of my ministry. "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Human Soul," by Phillips Doddridge, was a great book with my mother, and did me good when I was in my teens, and later, after I began to preach. So I read it again, and with more profit than ever before. This whetted my appetite for another old book, one that I remembered as exceedingly helpful to me in my early religious life; so I got down and read with a warm heart "Interior Life," by Thos. C. Upham. I really did not know till this week how far this book had gone in forming and fashioning my own thinking on the doctrine of holiness. In many important particulars it is the best book on this subject I ever read—save, of course, the Word of God. It discusses and presents in a clear light some difficult psychological questions connected with this subject that are not touched by other works, at least, not by those that have come under my eye. No one can read this book without being benefited by it. It incites one to holy living. How anyone can object to the Bible doctrine of holiness, to sanctification, to assurance of faith, to being made perfect in love in this life, after reading this book, is more than I can see. Mother is dead and in heaven, but I thank God again and again that she directed my attention to this book and urged me to read it when I was a boy at home on the farm. It has helped to save me from doubts, questionings, qualms and fears in regard to this central thought of Christian life. I have firmly believed in the doctrine and duty of holiness from early childhood.

On this point, mother brought me up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." I am now more than ever impressed with the importance of the reading children and young people do. If anyone had told me that what I took to be my own thinking was so nearly the thought of this book, I would not have believed him. Without knowing it, the man and the book—a book read so early in life—are alike. What a blessing it is that it was a good book. I am inclined to think now that I have never had one purely original thought; they are all the thoughts of those who have gone before me and of those who are around me. They have entered into me; have become a part of me; and I have my own way of expressing them; but the seed-thought, or thought-seed, was planted in the soil of my mind and heart by some one else. I want to say now that if I am not sound on the doctrine of sanctification, Mr. Upham is largely to blame for it. He got a hold on me and got a strong grip on me when I was in the plastic stage and was easily moulded. He lives in me by a law of mind that is as certain and fixed in its operations as any of the other laws of nature. And, yet, some people feed their children on the "apples of Sodom," and then grieve and wonder that they do not "yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness." What farmer would sow down his land in tares before he put in a crop of wheat? There will be tares enough without the trouble of sowing them. The enemy that sows tares in the minds and hearts of children ought not to be the parents that bore them. If Mr. Upham's book has done me any harm, my mother is partially to blame for it. She read it, talked much of it in the family, urged me to read it and took pains to explain it to me. If it has done me any good, and I think it has, then the author, as an instrument in the hand of God, and my mother, as the responsible agent in training her children, deserve, through the grace of Christ, and will receive, reward for it. Mother—bless her memory!—bestowed more care on my reading than she did on my dress. The reading she selected for me was all fine, the dress all plain. I now believe if I were to turn back on the old books, the vain conceit of originality would all be taken out of me. I know nothing except what I have learned from others. The furniture of my mind is all borrowed. But enough for a cold day. This grew out of a bad spell.

An Item or Two.

First and foremost, I want to call the attention of Methodists, and everybody else, to our East Mississippi Female College, which is under the efficient management of President C. W. Anderson and a splendid corps of teachers. The religious and educational advantages of this excellent school are unsurpassed in the South.

Next should be presented the claims and merits of Fairview College, at Binnsville. President Moore and Prof. Burton have associated with them Prof. Harlan, who was a student at the University of Mississippi, and also at the Vanderbilt; and Maj. Mohler, one of the most experienced and successful educators in the State. The girls board in Maj. Mohler's family, and the boys with Prof. Burton. Faithful work is done in this school.

And, in conclusion, as chairman of the Colportage Board of the Mississippi Conference, I must remind the Methodists of Mississippi, and elsewhere, that the Rev. W. D. Dominick is the general colporteur of our Conference, and, as such, he has established a book depository at Jackson, and is prepared to fill orders for any good books, Sunday-school literature, periodicals, etc. He deserves liberal and continued patronage. At an early date he will have his district assistants to aid him in making a very thorough canvass of our territory. Let good books and papers have an ever-widening circulation. T. L. MELLE.

Shall the Church Educate Her Ministers?

In looking over the ADVOCATE, of a recent date, I noticed a call for help to educate a young man for the pulpit. The ministry is the noblest calling of men excepting my own profession—teaching. The Christian teacher is also a preacher spreading Christian love. He is brought in closer touch with humanity, and that in his tender and more impressive age. He is as much called to his work as the minister to his. If he is faithful, the foundation for a beautiful, Christian and useful life is laid before the child can appreciate the "preacher proper." Now, we hear much about educating the ministry, but never hear a word about educating the teachers. The work of the called Christian teacher does more to solve all religious problems than that of the preacher, because every child must go through the educator's mill, where his character is moulded before he reaches the preacher's. Christ was a teacher, not a preacher. Then, let me ask why we must educate our preachers and let the devil have our teachers and, consequently, our children? If God calls his preachers, and expects his people—the church—to educate them, he also calls his teachers, and expects his people to educate them. I believe that God calls both, but does not expect the church to educate either. I question the wisdom on the part of the church of educating boys for the ministry. Every man should enter the service of God to dispense and not to receive. Christ gave, but took nothing. Do you not believe that many a boy, through his zeal for an education, has mistakenly claimed to be called of God. It is a fact, but to be regretted, that there is to-day in Mississippi a scarcity of professional male teachers; but can't you imagine scores gently tapping at its doors, if the church would only educate them?

As I write over a nom de plume, I hope that a bit of personal history will be pardonable. I was born in 1865; my father died the same year, and my mother found that the ravages of war had confiscated all property except one colt and a small tract of woodland. As a result of emigration, push and toil, at the age of sixteen, I found myself surrounded with plenty to give my mother and sister a comfortable support. I educated sister and myself without the aid of individual, church or State. At graduation I was chosen the annual speaker on Friday; traveled some hundreds of miles, and entered the school-room as teacher Monday, and have been teaching since. Am now teaching in one of the best female colleges in the State. What I have done any boy may do. When God has a work for a man to do, he places the means at his hand. The greatest preacher and man of the nineteenth century, Sam Jones, never attended a theological school, and says the way to learn to preach is to preach. The way for boys who want to enter the ministry to get their education, is to do their part and call on God to do the balance.

Letter from Brazil.

This evening I am thinking of the readers of the ADVOCATE, and will attempt to give them all some news from the work at this point.

Piracicaba, as, perhaps, you already know, is one of the starting-points of our Brazil Mission. The church here was organized about ten years ago, and has had a varied experience. At present there is a falling off in membership; some have moved away, and others have grown indifferent. In spite of discouragements, our pastors labor earnestly among the people, and the majority of our members are regular attendants and good men and women. At present there is a lively interest among the children who attend all services well, and a number of them this year have united with the church in full membership. The Sunday-school is particularly interesting, and is well attended by old and young. There is a class for men, one for women, several for girls and one for boys. Near the church is a small office which serves as a room for the infant class. This room is furnished with nice little chairs from a contribution sent me by the Sunday-school children of the Seashore Camp Ground. There are thirty of these chairs, and usually most of them are filled. This is a very interesting class, and is taught by our kindergarten teacher of the college, Mrs. Brelsford. The class of women taught by Miss Watts is particularly touching, as in it one sees the aged, the middle-aged, and the young women, all seeking together to learn of the Bread of Life. But no class is more attractive than my own, which is composed of six bright, smart girls. Two are members of the church, and expect to become teachers; two have taken the first step to become Christians, and the other two have expressed a desire to be good. On Saturday evenings we have a little prayer meeting service, which is to prepare the heart and mind for the Sabbath. It is a sweet and refreshing service, and one which would not be out of place in the home-land. On Sundays there are three, and occasionally four, services at the church. During the week there are prayer meetings in various parts of the city at houses of the members, and at the church also. Our native Christian women are very faithful, and many of them do Bible work among the people as occasion offers. They visit the sick, attend all divine services, and some make fervent, earnest prayers in public when called upon. The death of one of our women not long since was peaceful and triumphant.

The public mind is now absorbed in politics, but our people have their shoulder to the wheel and the gospel cause is moving forward. The Annual Conference of Brazil Mission convened at Piracicaba last July. There were about twenty preachers, and they gave thrilling accounts of their work. Our Christian paper of Brazil, Expositor Cristiano, is now published weekly. It gives the Sunday-school lessons, and affords valuable reading for our people.

In a few days our sister representatives of the W. B. M. will gather from their different homes to attend our annual reunion which, also this year, convenes at Piracicaba. The W. B. M. has now three colleges in Brazil—one in Rio de Janeiro, another in Juiz de Fora, and another here at Piracicaba. This last is the oldest and most flourishing. During the past week our annual term of ten months was brought to a close. All during the year there has been an average attendance of over a hundred. The deportment has been good, and a sweet spirit has pervaded the school. The examinations were fair, and the majority seem impressed with the truths of the Bible. Some have joined the church; others have taken the first step to become Christians. The year has been one of earnest work and it ends well. God has been gracious, and we go forward courageously. Pray for us.

SALLIE M. PHILLIPS.

Dickerson—Hazzard.

Two young men, John S. Dickerson and William S. Hazzard, emigrated from Maryland before 1840. They selected Vicksburg for their future home, where they lived and died—W. S. Hazzard soon after the war; J. S. Dickerson within the last few weeks. Industrious and useful citizens, they differed greatly from the immigrants whom we generally meet. They were zealous in church services, attending prayer and class meetings, praying in public and singing—Dickerson particularly.

Both married and had families. W. S. Hazzard left his body with his family and friends to be buried, whilst he went to God accompanied by heavenly beings who came for him, as he said, before he ceased to breathe.

J. S. Dickerson moved to Beauregard, where he lived, engaging in the lumber business and farming. Here, as he ever had been, he was a zealous worker in the church. So his pastors and brethren would testify. In 1891 he returned to Vicksburg, where he had some property. He prepared for himself and children and grandchildren a neat cottage home. His Christian zeal and service in the Methodist Church was unabated. He joined the resident preachers in prayer meetings in private houses, at times gladly having them at his home. I visited my friend of many years. Each of us near an eightieth birthday, our conversation was appropriate to old age. Our experience, though entirely different, was so much alike that we were congenial in sympathy as to trials and sufferings and gladness when relief came. We could increase the faith of each by the faith of the other. We spoke of scriptural words and the intended spiritual meaning for all, perhaps for us. Sanctification we knew was in the Bible, and we had heard and read that learned and good men had discussions about blessings from God, killed first and second. We recollected that the divine Teacher had directed, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." Success in this, if followed by another blessing, would be the second. J. S. Dickerson had been perplexed until he called his state of grace consecration. By this designation he intended to express,

"I give thee all, I can no more."

We parted with sensations, if not by words—

"God be with you till we meet again."

He died soon after.

The Quarterly Review.

The January number of the Quarterly Review, M. E. Church, South, edited by Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D., LL.D., and published by Barbee & Smith, agents, Nashville, Tenn., is worthy of the subscription of every thinking man, both clerical and lay, in the church. This publication should have the liberal support it deserves; and, as the price has been recently reduced from $2.50 to $2 per annum, it should induce those who are not subscribers to become such.

Religion and Politics.

Recently, in a Mississippi town, the principal of the public school invited a Christian woman to address the school. She did so, and the day following a prominent Jew, one of the school trustees, albeit he is a wholesale liquor dealer, reprimanded the principal of the school on the ground that a gospel talk, in which Christ was mentioned, was an infringement on the rights of the Jewish patrons.

Now, what ought a Christian community to do about that? What should the Christian ministers of that town do?

The same afflicted town has had Sunday baseball during two successive Summers, the games being played beyond the town limits, so that only county officials could take cognizance of them.

Ought the Christians of a town to have allowed that desecration of the Sabbath? The solution of such difficulties lies with the voter; must be reached through politics. It appears evident, therefore, that, however we may try to keep our religion out of politics, the politics will get in the way of our religion. What is to be done about it?

In the North the thousands of irreligious foreign voters have in many places gotten control of affairs; in some States the Bible has been forced from the public schools. The same thing may occur in the South. The Christians of Mississippi had better put more religion into their politics, or they will soon have to emigrate in order to enjoy religious liberty.

I give the brethren a topic for discussion: The Bible in the public schools.

Suggestion to Presiding Elders.

I respectfully suggest that presiding elders ask the preachers in charge the following questions, viz.:

1. How many pastoral visits have you made the past quarter?
2. Do you teach fasting by precept and example?
3. Do you enforce the discipline of the church?
4. Do you travel on public conveyances on the Sabbath?

The Club and the Home.

Several years ago we heard a prominent Sunday-school teacher in one of our large Sunday-schools give his class of boys a very earnest talk on this subject. He pointed out the evils of club life in a very clear and simple way, and showed how such a life endangered not only the character of those especially young men—who frequent the clubs, but put in absolute peril all the best interests and all the purest enjoyments of the home life. We do not know how the talk influenced the future of his class; but we thought at the time that that teacher had done a good hour's work in a good direction. Since then we have observed that there is hardly anything that does so much damage to our young men in the cities as these same clubs. And there are hundreds of homes in our city that are being irreparably damaged, because these clubs allure young men, and old men, too, away from their sacred precincts. We commend to our city readers the following thoughtful editorial from the New York Christian Advocate:

Among the recent institutions of our modern city life, the club is prominent. Men's clubs are numerous and various in respect to their objects, but usually the social element enters largely into the institution. The club is provided with splendid apartments, where members of the society may resort, and spend more or less time, mostly in the evening, conversing, eating, smoking, and reading the news. The club-house is generally, if not in all cases, furnished with a bar, card-room, bowling-alley, billiard-room, luxuriously fitted up for the accommodation of members. Intelligent, wealthy, and prominent citizens patronize the club; and in the list of members may sometimes be found names of church members, and even ministers. Political, professional, business and social interests attract many excellent men to these places of resort.

The number of these institutions has become considerable and the membership enormous. Whether a Christian gentleman can be an active member of a club, and at the same time be true to his home and church, is a serious question. Leaving out of the account the consideration that the drinking and games are encouraged and indulged in, and that his example may lead others into a snare, even if he should himself escape unharmed, there remains the fact that his club-life and home-life may conflict.

Every sacred institution in the world is placed under a severe strain by our intense city life. The home is exposed to great peril. A thousand foes combine to disturb, to modify, and even destroy it. Men are compelled to be absent from home much of the time by the exigencies of business. No matter what a man's calling, it requires him to go from home by day, and often by night also. Some men spend most of their time abroad, and can only be at home a day now and then. Under such circumstances it would appear that every man who is loyal to his wife and children, and who loves them as a husband and father should, will have no wish to remain away from his home one hour more than is absolutely necessary.

If one is disposed to spend the time at his command in society other than that of his family, serious consequences may result. Men sometimes fail to appreciate the peculiar nature of women. Thousands of men have lived for years with wives, the depth of whose souls they have never sounded, whose feelings and thoughts they have never comprehended. Men are apt to think women are just like themselves. They imagine that because they would not be hurt if left at home alone in the evening, therefore their wives will not care if left in the same way. This is a grave mistake. Women are more sensitive to the little attentions and courtesies of domestic life than men. They endure the necessary separations which the care of business requires without a murmur. It is not pleasant, but endurable.

But when the husband adds to this hardship, by absencing himself needlessly, spending with other men at the club the hours which should be spent at home, his wife has cause for jealousy. She can not help thinking that other society is more agreeable to him than hers. Her sensitive heart is wounded, and home loses much of its charm. If her feelings and deportment toward her husband remain unchanged, it will be in spite of his imprudence and neglect. In this way many homes have been ruined, and others made unhappy.

These remarks apply only to married men. But most unmarried men have homes also. The young man owes a duty to his mother and other members of the family. One who forms a habit of going from home needlessly before he is married is in danger of bonding to this same habit after marriage. His home is to be maintained, care must be taken by men not to do violence to their domestic feelings. These are cultivated. It is not merely the man, but the man himself suffers much as the home. No man can wander from home recklessly without serious injury. The man who finds pleasure anywhere else than at home already on the way to ruin, unless his home is unworthy of the name. Testimonies from Longfellow contain a lesson for every man:

"Stay, stay at home, my heart, and rest,
Home-keeping hearts are happiest,
For those that wander they know not where
Are full of trouble, and full of care;
To stay at home is best."

PLEASANTRIES.

The original whale was quite a male carrier; but Jonah probably had impressed upon him the need of a new delivery system.—Boston Courier.

"That's what I call relief from an unexpected quarter," said the tramp who asked for a nickel and got a twenty-five-cent piece.—Yonkers Statesman.

"A Young Writer" writes to inquire how he may write best. Write but little, and steer clear of what you know nothing of. If this bears you out altogether, you are lucky.—Fairfax Herald.

It's a poor rule that don't work both ways. Mind-cure doctor: "Make up your mind there is no pain and there is none. Two dollars, please." Patient (moving toward the door): "Make up your mind there is no pain, and there is none. Good morning."

One of the professors of the University of Texas was engaged in explaining the Darwinian theory to his class, when he observed that they were not paying proper attention. "Gentlemen," said the professor, "what am I endeavoring to explain to you the peculiarities of the monkey I wish you would look at me."—Texas Siftings.

A Brooklyn lady was much annoyed with "runaway rings." Determined to be sharp down upon the delinquents, she suddenly opened the door after a ring and catching the supposed offender by the collar of the ears, she exclaimed in astonishment: "To a Christian and Devil meeting in the vestry," was the reply. And it suddenly flashed across the caller's remembrance that for that afternoon had been appointed at the vestry of the church a meeting of the Society of Christian Endeavor.—Boston Courier.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. J. T. SANFORD.

The Temperance Lunch House.

It is with great satisfaction that we note the patronage bestowed upon the C. T. U. Lunch House, at No. 142 Gravier street, near St. Charles street, from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m. The temperance women, attentive and affable, are busy serving out their fifteen-cent lunches, or more extended bills of fare, required, by the scores of patrons who daily sit at their neat and inviting tables. There is an air of home comfort and solid good cheer about that young and vigorous establishment which is thoroughly captivating to the hungry about lunch time. May the good women keep at the blessed work and continue to enjoy, as now, the favor of God upon their labors and the generous patronage of their many friends.

The Prohibition Vote.

We see that June 20 has been fixed as the time, and Music Hall, St. Louis, is the place for the holding of the National Convention for the nomination of a Prohibition presidential ticket. It is quite in point, then, to note the steady growth of the Prohibition vote, since 1872. The vote has been as follows:

1872.....	5,607
1876.....	9,787
1880.....	10,306
1884.....	150,638
1888.....	249,945

Should a strong ticket be put forth with Senator Clift, of Georgia, or some other such man, at its head, there might be possibly a half-million votes polled by the Prohibitionists. The liquor traffic has such absolute control in political matters, dominating, as it undoubtedly does, the two great parties of this country, making and unmaking men in most of the States, the growth of prohibition sentiment and the steady and handsome increase of prohibition votes is a something truly wonderful. May the year soon come when the Prohibition or some other party shall vote whiskey out of the United States.

Is not every word of the following, from a New York secular paper, true of the liquor curse?

It is impossible to examine any subject connected with the progress, the civilization, the physical well-being, the religious condition of the masses, without encountering this monstrous evil. It is at the centre of all social and political mischief. It paralyzes beneficent energies in every direction. It neutralizes educational agencies. It silences the voice of religion. It baffles penal reform. It obstructs political reform. It rears aloft a mass of evilly-inspired power, which at every salient point threatens social and national advance; which gives to ignorance and vice a greater potency than intelligence and virtue can command; which deprives the poor of advantages of modern progress; which debauches and degrades millions, brutalizing and soddening them below the plane of healthy savagery and filling the centres of population with creatures whose condition almost excuses the immorality which renders them dangerous to their generation.

The following tells how it is in Iowa:

A speaker for prohibition, whose word is the best of authority, relates a personal incident that shows how prohibition doesn't prohibit. "I came through Iowa this morning, and when I took my breakfast on the dining-car I saw on the bill-of-fare, 'No liquors sold in Iowa.' While I was passing up on the Central Iowa road I ordered lunch, and on the bill-of-fare there were twenty-five or thirty kinds of liquors, including Old Bourbon and all kinds of liquors. I said this didn't look like enforcing prohibition in Iowa, with all kinds of whiskey, gin, and rum on the bill-of-fare, and I thought I would try it. So I said to the porter: 'Get me a bottle of old Bourbon,' and he said, 'No, sah, couldn't do it, sah. You can't sell it here.' 'Well,' I said, 'but you have it on your bill-of-fare.' And he said, 'Yes, sah, but we can't sell it in the prohibition States.' And at the top of that bill-of-fare I saw, 'No liquors sold within the limits of prohibition States.' Well, I thought maybe he was fooling me a little, but I looked around, and nobody knew me and I knew nobody, so I said to him: 'Couldn't you get a fellow a bottle of beer, anyway?' And he said, 'Oh, no, boss, couldn't do it, nohow.' I said no one would know anything about it, and he said: 'Why, sah, I'd counted every bottle in the car before we reached the State, and then they counted 'em after we leave it; and if a bottle is gone I have to 'count for it.'"

"As soon as we left the Iowa line the darkey came to me with a face like a full moon, and said: 'Now, boss, we're in Minnesota. I let you have what you want.' Not a drink in Iowa under prohibition—all you want in Minnesota under high license."—Christian Statesman.

"The New York Observer says that in Kansas prohibition does prohibit. Just read this:

After several years of experiment, it is becoming known in what degree and under what circumstances prohibition actually prohibits. For a long time it was extremely difficult to obtain satisfactory testimony as to the degree in which its purpose to prevent the use of intoxicants was effectual. No utterances were more discouraging in regard to the law in Maine, than the complaints and remonstrances of its leading temperance advocates in regard to the failure of the authorities to enforce the prohibitory laws. Some time ago a representative of this paper made a tour in the West for the purpose of investigating the operation of prohibitory laws in Kansas and Iowa, and the results of his investigation were published at length in the Observer. His conclusions, which were in the main favorable to prohibitory legislation, are strongly confirmed by the remarkably intelligent and thorough inspection of twenty counties in Kansas by a representative of the New York Times. He is forced to believe that prohibition in Kansas is a permanent institution, that it is regarded as an advantage and blessing by a majority of the people, and that serious opposition to it is confined to a few large cities. Outside of four cities, there is no open saloon, and even in these cities the saloons are separated from the street by some other business, and liquor dealers are increasingly hampered and distressed by police interference and legal difficulties. Senator Ingalls' statement in regard to the activity of breweries is fully contradicted, and also his statement in regard to the revenues of cities from the liquor business, only five cities out of sixty deserving mention, receiving any regular revenue from such sources.

Opponents of the law who admit that it can abolish almost completely the open saloon, contend that secret drinking is stimulated by this kind of rigor and that the people are demoralized by their efforts to evade the law. It is impossible to obtain statistics in support of this assertion, and the force of this objection can be measured only by moral results that will surely be manifest in various directions. Certainly the criminal statistics of Kansas do not confirm the notion that the benefits of prohibition are counterbalanced by its evils, says the Times correspondent. "When the prohibitory law was enforced there were 1,000 prisoners in the State penitentiary. Since that time there have been added to the population of Kansas more than 250,000 people, while the number of prisoners has been reduced to 312. Of the 100 jails in the State 50 are empty, excepting where insane persons are held awaiting room in the insane asylums, while the number of paupers on the poor-farms has decreased one-half."

In respect to the assertion that prohibition is a practical injury to the State, the same writer says: "The opponents of this law assert that the driving out of the saloons has caused a stagnation of business in all the cities, and that this law is responsible for the present dull times. And yet Topeka, with no saloons, has been constantly growing, while Wichita, with sixty saloons, has been decreasing in population. Pittsburg has doubled its population, while Hutchinson, of equal size, with saloons, has held its own, although it has added to its industries thirteen large salt plants and three packing-houses. Similar comparisons might be made with other cities. These instances are given simply to show that no one can tell the causes of the present depression, not even an Alliance man, but at best can only assign what he believes to be the cause. Is Kansas better off? There are in the cities and towns thousands of boys sixteen years of age who never saw a saloon, and only know from hearsay what they are like."

All this encouraging testimony, however, does not in the least degree lessen the necessity of a strong moral sentiment in order to cope with the gigantic liquor evil. Prohibition prohibits in Kansas just to that degree in which the public sentiment compels and sustains the enforcement of the law, and no farther. There is no magic in a prohibitory law that will prevent the general sale of liquor in a community without a powerful purpose to expel liquor as a nuisance and a public danger. If there is sufficient public sentiment to enable us to expel it from certain neighborhoods, to make it an unprofitable business, to separate it from children and other helpless persons, we should avail ourselves of it in spite of the opposition of the liquor dealers and fanatics.—N. Y. Observer.

Rev. Dr. W. W. Wadsworth, not unknown to New Orleans Methodists, some time ago handled the club curse in vigorous style. He was thus reported by the Augusta Chronicle:

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB.

But this crying evil does not stop here. It goes above the administration; it goes above any single line of business; it goes to the plane of what is called the upper circles of society, and we have the spectacle of 200 men, some of them of large wealth, refinement and ability, organized as the Commercial Club and engaged in running a bar. A bar-room is a place where liquor is sold by the drinks, and money passed over the counter. The profits of the business in this case go into the support of the club and aid in perpetuating it. They say it is not a public bar, and is open only to the members of the club, and they have the same right to furnish liquor or wine to their members as a man has to furnish it to his family and guests in his own home. But a man does not usually furnish it to his family by selling the members of his family by selling it over the counter at so much a drink. I saw the other day this advice to a fellow: 'If you must drink, buy your liquor by the gallon, carry it home and give it to your wife to sell to you. Then instead of patronizing bar-rooms buy it from the bar-keeper, so that she can lay aside the profits to bury you with when you go down to a drunkard's grave, and have something left for your helpless and penniless children.' But this big family in the Commercial Club has not even this humane provision, and when some of its members go down to drunkards' graves and to hell the profits made on the money they spent in the club does not go to providing them with burial, but to perpetuate the club in order that it may keep up its diabolical work and blight the lives of other young men who come after them. I am informed that they take in about $40 a day, and in a single year about $14,000 at their bar. I tell you, some of them drink like fish. They have increased the per capita for liquor consumed from $16.25 to $40.

IT IS A FREE SUNDAY BAR.

And, worse than that, it is a free bar. I put Council on notice that this bar owes the city a license of $250 a year, and unless it is paid they are condemning it in plain violation of the statute. But, worse than all, it is a Sunday bar, and week after week they violate the law in spite of your ordinance proscribing $100 fine for the first offense. The law is very strict on this point, and does not even allow a window or door open on Sunday, leading into a room adjoining a bar, and yet these young men air themselves on their veranda and go back and forth into their bar on the Lord's day in open violation of the law. It is the only bar in the city that openly overrides the sanctity of the Sabbath, and there is no reason for it under heaven except that they claim to be gentlemen. They say they have the newspapers there to read, and I know they have other papers there, about 3 by 4, with kings and queens and spades on them. And they have billiard and pool tables, and all that; but I tell you the bar is the chief attraction, and if it was not for the bar, the Commercial Club would go to pieces in sixty days. I have no doubt there are some perfectly temperate members of the club, and some, perhaps, who would like to see the bar taken out, but it is the chief attraction for three-fourths of the members, and without it the club would collapse.

ENEMY TO MORALS AND CHURCH.

It does more moral harm than any ten bars in town. It is dragging young men down to death, and is the greatest evil foe that the Young Men's Christian Association has to contend with. Some men give $50 to the Young Men's Christian Association and $200 to the club—the most inconsistent donations I ever heard of. The Young Men's Christian Association can keep the young men out of the low bar-rooms, but it is hard to keep them out of such attractive quarters, sanctioned by the leading men in the upper circles of society. It is blighting society at the very top, and the Y. M. C. A. fear its influence more than any other bar in the city. "Woe to him that buildeth a town in blood or establisheth a city by iniquity."

I am not surprised that the good women of this land have risen in their might to protest against this mighty curse, and with their white-ribboned army are waging battle against it "for God and home and native land."

The readers of the ADVOCATE will be pleased to learn that there is, at least, one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly sores of swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors," manifestations usually ascribed to many other causes. Scrofula is a more formidable enemy than consumption. It is a more general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it. How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. Ayer writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my hair is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair."

The present postal cards are just the thing to use for reports "from the work."

The woman who has reared a manly boy and started him on a career of usefulness and honor, has done tenfold more for God and humanity than she would have done if she had, during the same time, held the highest position in any profession or in politics.

"Dogmatics in opinion and autocrats in action," is the last from the Times-Democrat in regard to preachers who oppose the lottery. That is good, coming from the lottery mouthpiece! The "dogmatics and autocrats" are getting to be too numerous for the lottery folks. That is all.

Goodness is greater than sects, and more than names. Let the world see the goodness, and they do not care what church that man goes to; whether he uses a prayer book or not matters to nobody, or whether he is led up to service by a peal of bells or a big drum. There are some whose religion may be laughed at as a folly; whose most sacred convictions are often the subject of sneer. Be of good courage. There is one thing men do know in their hearts, and do honor and envy—downright, thorough, consistent goodness.—Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

An exchange says:

The wealth of the Protestant Church members in the United States, in 1890, was estimated at $13,076,300,000, and the entire wealth of the United States at $61,459,000,000.

With wealth running up into figures that bewilders all arithmetic, and dollars given to the Lord's cause that any school-boy in his teens can understand, is it any wonder that there is such a pressure in money matters? Is it not the old story of "robbing God," and are we not reaping the reward of our robbery?

A COMMENDABLE EXAMPLE.

A little over a year ago Miss Emma Samuels, a teacher in the Carondelet Methodist Sunday-school, lost her father. Self-support became a necessity, and this young Christian woman selected the profession of kindergarten, and after a year's study graduated with great credit to herself, and has been appointed by the Directors of Public Schools principal of the kindergarten department in McDonough No. 4, Algiers, La. The energy and perseverance displayed by this young woman we commend to others as eminently worthy of imitation.

A man arose in one of Moody's meetings and gave his experience. He said: "I have been for five years on the Mount of Transfiguration." "How many souls did you lead to Christ last year?" was the sharp question that came from Mr. Moody in an instant. "Well, I don't know," was the astonished reply. "Have you saved any?" persisted Mr. Moody. "I don't know that I have," answered the man. "Well, we don't want that kind of mountain-top experience. When a man gets so high that he can't reach down and save poor sinners, there is something wrong."

The Missionary Spirit.

It is unfortunate for us, because it is a great hindrance to our personal development and a barrier to the aggressive movements of the church, that we study the spirit of religion as manifested in the lives of men rather than as manifested in the life of Jesus Christ. The rule that is followed with unbending rigor in other matters is very greatly relaxed when it comes to matters of religion. In other things our ambition is to imitate the best models, but we are not so strict in carrying out this rule in things of religion. This shows our folly and reveals clearly the source of all our weakness. That there is power as well as peace in a religious life is clearly demonstrated by the life of Jesus. That he had power, none will deny. That he had peace, his wonderful life demonstrated. And when we study closely we are surprised to discover that both sprang from the same source. He said, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." There is the revelation of the spring which fed and nourished his whole being. Obedience to the Father's will is the simple solution of the wonders of his life.

The spirit of religion, as exhibited to the world in the conduct of Jesus, shows itself to be in all its phases the simplest sort of a missionary spirit. In him we see this spirit reaching out the hand of sympathy to the suffering—opening the treasures of charity to the needy—stooping to raise the fallen—pouring consolation into the hearts of the troubled—ministering at the bedside of the sick. At every point in his career his religion proved its heavenly origin by its missionary work. He proved the sincerity of his religion by the work which he did for others. He rigorously applied his own rule to his own conduct, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and in this way not only showed the sincerity of his heart in that work, but demonstrated his love for those who were the objects of his labors.

We show the measure of our discipleship in the proportion in which we manifest a like spirit. Our loyalty to our Master can be proved to the world in no other way. The only tests of our religion are obedience to God and helpfulness to men. These two things test all love. The only way we can prove our love to our Father in heaven is by obeying him, and the only way we can prove our love to our fellow-men is by helping them. And these two things can not be separated. Christ said that these two things were all there was in the law and the prophets. The two tables upon which God, with his own finger, wrote the moral law were exactly alike in shape and size and weight, and the inscription on the one balanced the inscription on the other. They were in perfect equipoise! We see, then, the folly of the man who tries to keep one of these tables to the neglect of the other. The thing can not be done. "This commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also." We see also how natural was the surprise of the Apostle John that a man could pretend to love God and at the same time not love his brother!

In manifesting the spirit of religion Jesus is our pattern. He took his stand upon the two tables of the law, and from that standpoint he lived his wonderful life and wrought his great deeds. His soul went out in loving, ceaseless obedience to the Father and in loving, ceaseless beneficence to men. He loved God and obeyed him. He loved men and worked for their good. The cheerfulness of his obedience was the measure of his love for the Father. The activities of his life were the measure of his love for men. It was the fullness of the missionary spirit pouring itself ceaselessly toward God and men. This is the religion we need—the religion that Jesus put in practice in his every-day life.

Ministerial Education.

At various times during the past year communications from various sources, and especially from Bro. F. B. Holloman, of Canton, Miss., have appeared in the columns of the Advocate on the subject of Ministerial Education. Bro. Holloman is the president of an organization within the Mississippi Conference, which has for its object the aiding of young men at college who are preparing for the ministry. Dr. C. G. Andrews, of Meridian, is treasurer, and Bro. M. L. Burton, of McComb City, is secretary of this association. So far as we know, this is the only organization of its kind among our patronizing Conferences.

In a recent issue of the Advocate, Bro. Holloman makes an appeal for aid for this association "in the name of the Master and his church," that they may be financially able to prosecute the work they have been so nobly doing for over twenty years. We join in this appeal. For the past ten or fifteen years, at least, the young men who have received aid from this association have attended Centenary College. The three at present receiving aid are at Centenary. Even after Millsaps College opens, so long as the Mississippi Conference retains her half interest in Centenary, we presume a young man seeking the aid offered will be allowed choice of the two schools.

Methodism has never made an iron-clad demand for an educated ministry, but she has never tolerated ignorance. When God lays his hand mightily on the heart of a young man and calls him to this important work, none dare say him nay. But a call to preach does not always imply an immediate call to the itinerancy, if at all. Ofttimes it more properly implies a preparation for this work. When a young man knocks for admittance at the door of the Conference, and is unqualified for the work, it is unjust to the church and to him to receive him. It is equally unjust to set him adrift, unencouraged, leaning solely on his own resources.

The churches are making greater demands upon their pastors. As a consequence, the Conference inquires more carefully into the intellectual endowments of the candidates. The per cent. of illiteracy is yearly decreasing, while the grade of intelligence is rapidly becoming higher. The ministry must keep pace with this forward movement. We do not believe the time should ever come when a diploma should be a necessary requisition for admittance into the traveling connection; but the time should be hastened when something more than mere "natural smartness" should be required. Methodism has always stood in the very forefront with the religious bodies in point of intelligence, and has never lost sight of that great subject—Education. She numbers her communicants by the millions, and her adherents by the tens of millions, though only a little over one hundred and fifty years old. If she would retain this hold on the world, she must always have a ministry, at least, on a par with the laity. She has it now and must keep it.

Let all loyal Methodists read and ponder Bro. Holloman's article in the issue of the seventh, and Dr. Hunnicutt's, of the fourteenth, and act accordingly.

University Extension.

The subject of extending university teaching to persons who have not the means or opportunity of attending the university itself has commanded the attention of educators in England for several years. Within the last two years it has been much discussed in this country, and the discussion has led to the adoption of the plan and the carrying out of the work by most of our great institutions. Indeed, these institutions seem to have taken to the plan very heartily and are pushing the work with a great deal of enthusiasm. As we understand the subject, "University Extension" means a system or plan formulated and worked in any given community by which anyone in that community may have the opportunity afforded of availing himself of university teaching on any line of study that may be adopted, and that he may select. In other words, it brings "higher education" in reach of thousands who otherwise could never receive any benefit from it. Regular university instruction by university methods is placed at the doors of the humblest.

Through the courtesy of Dr. Wm. O. Rogers, the secretary of Tulane University, we have received the announcement and program of that institution in regard to this matter. President Johnston announces that his university is ready to begin this new departure for the extension of higher education as soon as classes of sufficient size can be formed. The instruction will be given in the form of lectures in Tulane Hall, "though if classes should be formed by societies and associations, other suitable places may be selected if desired. Some of the courses will be given in the evening, others may be given in the afternoon, if preferred by the classes." Six lectures constitute a "course." The program announces six lectures on English Language and Literature, by Prof. Sharp; six lectures on English History, by Prof. Ficklen; six lectures on the French Drama, by Prof. Fortier; six lectures on Psychology, by Prof. Dixon; six lectures on The Chemistry of Every-day Life, by Prof. Ordway; and six lectures on Electricity and Magnetism, by Prof. Ayres. A fee of one dollar is charged for each course. Here is a fine opportunity for our young men to add to their stock of knowledge and broaden their intellectual capacity, and we hope that many will avail themselves of it.

City Churches Producing Preachers.

We find the following in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, of a recent date:

We have had presented time and again the alarming picture of large churches so feeble and emaciated as to have but few, if any, converts during a whole year. We have seen many times a great mass of worldly, wicked, godless people, dwelling for years under the shadow of our fine churches, and no hand or voice raised to reclaim them. And then the Macedonian cry is in our ears all the time, at home and from abroad, "Come over and help us." We need preachers—we need them here and we need them yonder. We wrote to Dr. Candler, a few weeks ago, to know how many men he had in training for the ministry, and how many from city churches. He replied, "Since I have been president, I find we have had in all seventy-six candidates to the ministry, and that seven of them came from city churches, four of these seven being sons of preachers." Only one of the seven was, strictly speaking, a city church product." He then said, "You are on an important subject upon which you can not easily deliver yourself too strongly." We remarked to one of our most thoughtful, connectional men a few days ago that we were getting very few preachers from our cities.

He said, "Yes, the young men there all go into real estate, or other money-making enterprises."

The churches of this city are an exception to what seems to be laid down as a rule in the foregoing paragraph. If New Orleans Methodism is noted at all, it is noted for its production of preachers. This has been the case from the time Methodism struck its roots in this soil. We can not, at the present moment, give the exact number of preachers our city churches have raised up and sent forth; but out of ninety-two men on the Conference roll last year sixteen had been sent forth from us, and three others appeared among the men on trial. Besides these there are, at least, a half-dozen more young preachers who are now attending schools, preparing for the ministry. And yet we do not think we are doing any great things, even in this matter.

A New Departure for Centenary College.

Bishop Keener, the president of the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, has at last seen his way clear to appoint an agent for this venerable institution. The letter below explains the matter. Rev. Robt. Harry is a member of the Louisiana Conference, and, judging from his past record, we think the Bishop has made a good selection. We heartily commend him to all our people in Louisiana and Mississippi. In helping him you are helping the cause of Christian education, and in doing that you are greatly furthering the interests of the church. Here is the Bishop's letter:

MR. EDITOR: I have, with the advice of Dr. Hunnicutt, appointed the Rev. Robert Harry, of Louisiana Conference, to be the agent of Centenary College. He will keep you posted from time to time of his success in fully endowing this venerable institution. I commend him to our Methodist people, to the young men, and the ministers of our church, and to all who have either attended, graduated at, or patronized this institution; in fact, to all who would further the cause of Christian education, both ministers and laymen. Let us leave Methodism as strong as when we found it, and thus secure the labor and gifts of those noble spirits who preceded us, both of Mississippi and Louisiana, to those who may come after us—as in evidence of our appreciation of their memory. Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

Carrollton, La., Jan. 22, 1892.

A Lesson in Beneficence.

Bishop Galloway, in the Clarion, of Jackson, Miss., speaking of Capt. Tribette's gift to Millsaps College, deduces these wholesome lessons, which everybody may learn with profit:

1. His large success—the result of industry, economy and integrity—is a stimulus to young ambition. In this section from which many have removed westward in quest of a better country, he has achieved fortune and become "the providence of the poor."
2. He bestows his gifts upon his own people, with whom he has lived, and whose needs he best appreciates.
3. His benefactions, together with the wise and princely generosity of our townsman, Major Millsaps, will turn the thoughts of the wealthy to education and charity in dispensing their gifts. How unwise to leave large fortunes to children and relatives, which will make them spendthrifts and prodigals! In some sections of our country it is regarded as a reflection upon the memory of the rich not to give liberally to education and charitable institutions. How narrow and selfish the man who can not interpret the larger needs of humanity outside his family circle, and endeavor to minister thereto!
4. The wisdom of being the almoner of one's own fortune. Posthumous charity lacks some of the essential elements of virtue. Besides in our new Constitution gifts by will to church institutions are prohibited.

NOTES.

Men are not saved by sacraments and syllogisms, but by personal communion with Jesus Christ and personal appropriation of his merits.

A man may enjoy religion in a selfish way. The true enjoyment of religious life is that which springs from a helpful activity.

A brave preacher he was who said, "If it took half the brains to criticize a sermon that it takes to make one, there would be a decided falling off in the number of sermon critics."

The student should never forget that the object of study is such an acquisition of knowledge as will invigorate the mental powers, just as the acquisition of proper food invigorates the physical being. Knowledge is the mind's food, and healthy mental action depends upon how it is taken.

Preachers may take in this definition of a "good sermon." "A good sermon achieves four things. It makes men listen; it makes them remember; it makes them think; it makes them act. If your hearers listen, and forget to remember without thinking, they will never act and the sermon will be a failure."

The revelation of God the Father satisfies all the longings of the soul, and the incarnate Christ is such a revelation. When Philip said to Jesus, "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us," the reply of Jesus was, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." There is a good sermon in that request and reply, if you will work it out.

If you are thoroughly acquainted with your subject, and have the divine allatus, you can preach a first-rate sermon in half an hour. If you don't know what you are talking about, and the "Lord has departed from you," you can talk for an hour and a half and get drearier all the time. And the Lord generally "departs" from the unprepared preacher.

All preachers have not the genius or eccentricity requisite for sensationalism, but all preachers have hearts which can be filled with the Spirit, and Spirit-filled hearts make eloquent and drawing pulpits. "Pray for a baptism of the Spirit! When the fullness of the Spirit comes, power comes, man trembles under the preached word and devils flee away."—Tennessee Methodist.

One of the prerequisites of a successful Methodist preacher is quitting sense. Many a good sermon has been spoiled by rehearsing certain passages, or by going over again what would have made a good impression on the mind of the hearer. Quitting sense supplies strength for many weak points, and having it weakens every strong point in a preacher's working facilities. Among the first things you get for eighteen hundred and ninety-two, there be this faculty—quitting sense.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

The following suggestions from an exchange show how the Christian life can be lived with increasing power and usefulness: By a new consecration; by leaving Grumbler alley; by looking on the bright side; by rebuilding the family altar; by forgiving all your enemies; by speaking well of the person; by loyalty to the prayer meeting; by planning large revival results; by parting company with the devil; by moving into Thanksgiving street; by harmonizing church differences; by taking an allopathic dose of sunshine; by getting cured of irreligious dyspepsia; by warmly greeting the stranger at church.—Mid-Continent.

There is a form of Christianity too prevalent in some places, and it makes a warm-blooded man shiver to come in contact with it. A geologist would label it as belonging to the "glacial period," and it might itself be very properly labelled "glacial Christianity." Strangers, strange to say, are the first persons to discover and locate it, and they too frequently find it practiced by members of a city church. Hunt it up, brother pastor, and focus the warming rays of God's love upon it and thaw it out!

The Christian, by the very terms of his religion, is compelled, when he exercises his right of suffrage, to vote against every candidate who is in favor of any scheme that promotes vice and discourages virtue. Every Methodist and Baptist and Presbyterian and Episcopalian and Catholic and those of every other denomination in Louisiana are bound to offer the most determined opposition to the lottery and its candidates. Nothing less can possibly satisfy the Christian conscience and the law of God.

Brother preacher, do you feel like Paul: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel?" Then be careful. You may put the emphasis on the wrong word. The emphasis starts with the word "woe," but it only reaches its climax with the word "gospel." Be sure that you preach the gospel. We have heard from observing persons that there is a good deal of preaching about the gospel. That is not what Paul felt called to do. "Shining round geographically" won't meet the demands of any man's call of God to preach the gospel. Be careful then to know the gospel by experience as well as from the Book; then and only then can you preach it with power.

MILES-RENEE NANCY, infant daughter of Robert and Eunice S. Miles, was born Oct. 1, 1891, and died Jan. 12, 1892, aged three months and twelve days. Geo. W. FERRER.

COMMUNION.—At the Quarterly Conference of the North Wilkerson circuit, in session at the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Dec. 18, 1891, the following were present: Mr. J. H. Forbes, Mr. J. D. Parker, Mr. J. L. Williams, Mr. R. A. McNeill, Mr. F. H. White, Mr. M. L. Cline, Mr. J. D. Parker, Mr. J. L. Williams, Mr. R. A. McNeill, Mr. F. H. White, Mr. M. L. Cline.

Resolved: That in his death we and his own community feel keenly his loss to the church, and that we feel his place will not soon be filled efficiently. As a citizen, he was true and reliable, and as a rule, he was ready for every good work, and as a rule, he was ready for every good work, and as a rule, he was ready for every good work.

DUNN—PETER M. DUNN, the subject of this obituary, was born in South Carolina, June 19, 1813, and died near Woffle City, Hunt county, Texas, on Dec. 25, 1891. He was married to Miss Lizzie Duboise, in Alabama, Sept. 18, 1836, and professed religion—saving faith—in Christ about the year 1844 at a cottage prayer meeting, and joined the Methodist Church at Mt. Pleasant, near Russellville, Ala., with his companion, in which he lived till the day of his death.

The writer was personally acquainted with Uncle Mack, as he was familiarly called, and has been with him time and again in meetings, and has heard him tell of the dealings of God with him, and his resolutions to live near the Cross. The writer was also present with him just a few days before he left us, and talked freely with him about his afflictions. He said: "It is all right." "The Lord doeth all things well." "The will of the Lord be done." To his daughter, Sister Phillips, he said, "I have my check." He died well, for he had lived well. So, cheer up, Aunt Bette; your companion has just gone up to possess the heavenly inheritance before you. "Be thou faithful unto death, and he will give you a crown of life." A happy meeting awaits you in the bright hereafter.

MAIRSHALL—ARTHUR C., son of T. E. and S. Mairshall, was born in Carroll county, Miss., May 20, 1872. He fell asleep in Jesus in Rome, Ga., Nov. 14, 1891. His remains were brought home by his brother, Benjamin, and were placed in the family burying ground. In August, 1881, he joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Henry E. Smith. In the Fall of 1890 Arthur had come to the loved ones at home, and went to Rome, Ga., to attend the Rome Business College. From this school he graduated. He conducted himself so well while there that he found a good position as a bookkeeper with one of the firms of the city.

While in Rome, as a student and as a business man, where do we find him? He hands his church certificate to a pastor of one of the churches; he sits under the ministry of the Word; he is found in the prayer meeting; he is a member of the Y. M. C. A., and becomes one of their leaders; he is a Sunday-school worker; he went about like his Master, "doing good." He was much loved in Rome as well as at home, where all knew him well. When he died the dear ones at home good-bye, little did they expect that it was for the last time on earth.

God's family is one; a part on one side of the river of death, the other part in heaven. Arthur was taken from a land of sorrow and death to that country where none of these shall ever come. He lived well; he died well. We know where to find him. One by one God calls us over the river to our eternal home. Dear parents, you have a noble boy in glory. Take courage.

May God, in his own good time, take us all home! Heavenly Father, bless and keep the bereaved ones! D. L. CORDELL.

Beauty is a thing often hard to define, but it is acknowledged that one of its greatest aids is looking where there is any deficiency or disease of the hair, especially if it be a woman.

The Creoles are noted the world over for the luxuriance and beauty of their hair. It should not be supposed that this results from carelessness. On the contrary, it is the outcome of the most careful attention. There is a peculiar dressing and tonic the Creoles have used for generations, and it is this that is made the basis of the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, generally considered the quickest and most satisfactory restorative for the hair now in use.

It promotes the growth, cures dandruff, stimulates the scalp and gives it a healthy tone, and in a great number of cases has cured absolute baldness, causing hair to grow on scalps that seemed absolutely barren.

As a dressing it is unexcelled, and it has a place on the toilet table of some of the most fashionable ladies of the country.

It is made by the Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.

The following is copied from my notebook, for which I clipped it from the Register, of June, 1878. The sermon was preached by Bishop McTear, at eleven o'clock the morning of Sunday, June 20, 1878, at the residence of the Bishop, in the city of New Orleans. The Bishop was in perfect health, and presided over the Conference with his usual ability and efficiency. The sermon on Sunday morning was clear, strong and suggestive. The following account of it will be all the more interesting to the readers of the Advocate from the fact that it was written by a layman of another denomination, and evidently a man of good judgment and close observation. It may, therefore, serve to show the impression which Bishop McTear made on others, as a man, as a preacher, and as a pastor. It is not one of the included in "Passing through the Gates."

The office of a bishop is a very high one in any church. In the Methodist, it is the highest; and, therefore, no little great concentration about the individual who has received that honor. (Here follows an outline sketch of Bishop McTear's life to date.) In the collection of bishops, Mr. McTear is regarded as the working member. He is regarded as the one who has the most influence in the church, and whose resolutions and other matters of the church, is counselled with as to church government and ecclesiastical and official law; and thus he is a very great factor going to make up the completeness of the college as the head of the M. E. Church, South.

In form and action Bishop McTear is a solid dignity with great natural, unadorned simplicity. He is about five feet ten and a half inches tall, heavy-bodied, erect and firm as a statue, his arms and legs being full-muscled, converging to shapely wrists and ankles; hand neither small nor large, of agreeable outline; and feet that, in their deep instep, are just such as an artist would desire to see. A short, stout, surmounted by a noble, intellectual head; forehead broad and of edim height; eyes large and far apart, protecting their blue-gray by any lashes; nose large and straight, not broad at the nostril-base; mouth broad and descending gracefully to the corners. . . . a regular old Virginia pattern gotten up in South Carolina; light suburn hair, with some sil threads furnished by labor and age. These, with a most benignant expression playing throughout the whole contour, even back to the graceful ears that lie close up to their solid background of hair, will enable the reader to form some idea of this bishop of the church. Neat, but inexpensive apparel, scrupulously free from dirt or stain, completes the picture.

Eleven o'clock found the house well filled with pious women and men of church and others who were drawn together by the fame of the gentleman in the pulpit. With great dignity he rose and with slow deliberation read the opening hymn. This having been done by the choir and congregation, proceeded to read the Old Testament selection and the sixteenth chapter of Luke in the New. The Bishop's graceful and effective reader, pause often for the mind to grasp the word, and now and then furnishing a comment in the intervals for reflection. Singing and the regular prayer which was longer than we had expected being over, he selected as a text the latter clause of the eighth verse of the chapter last read: "For the children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light."

The opening words of the sermon characterized Bishop McTear, and of strong and practical mode of exegesis. They were as follows: "It puzzled me a long time to know why the Lord commended the unjust steward; but finally, one day, I looked right close at the word (steward) and I saw that it was spelled 'steward' and it meant a 'steward'—THE LORD of heaven and earth, but the steward of the earthly master, commended."

Some philosophers have maintained that all conceivable truth is equally easy and of apprehension to the ignorant and thinking soul; others say that the fields of thought to be reached by transcendent effort. Bishop McTear is clearly not of the latter division; but by his exposition of this text he showed himself a master of the former. He would, doubtless, find that the structure of a steam engine is quite as easily understood as that of a coffee-pot, if the proper time and attention be given to its study. The reader now begins to see how he introduced the subject of his discourse.

of the text, he plays around on the context, until you begin to say to yourself, There is nothing left for the sermon. The landscape is opened up to view, and the attention called to every stump, tree, clump of willows, streamlet, flock and herd, and the background of forest, ocean or sky. This is all pleasant, because it is nature. You see everything in a beautiful and clear, though soft and mellow, light. The listener has no trouble in the world, nor is he fatigued in understanding the exposition offered. The speaker is very deliberate, uses but little gestulation, confines himself chiefly to the easy conversational style, tone and manner, so entertaining you that you are perfectly at ease, although he is carrying you by degrees over rugged paths, with yawning chasms on one side and overhanging rocks on the other. . . . until you reach the summit, and wonder how easily you attained it. There is no "eloquence," no pretension to the higher flights of oratory; but the pleasantness and impressiveness of earnest disquisition and exhortation compensate you for any lack of fiery appeal to feeling and passion. You grasp the subject at last, with the same confidence and pleasure with which it was elucidated by the speaker. Bishop McTear is the best listener's preacher we have ever heard.

We should be glad to lay before our readers the Bishop's treatment of his text; but our space does not admit it. Suffice it to say, he showed how much more earnest, prudent and wise the men of the world are in adapting the proper means to the accomplishment of their ends than the members of the church ("children of light") are in applying their resources and powers to the advancement of spiritual interests.

Letter from South Carolina.

MR. EDITOR: I want to express my unaffected pleasure and gratitude in the recent privilege of reading regularly the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I used to see it and read it every week while I was editor of our South Carolina Advocate. It is to me now, a reminder of the past, when first the classic Parker, and after that the vigorous and accomplished Gallo-way, were its successful editors. I never knew it when two other of our then inchoate Bishops were in turn its editors. It is pleasant to be reminded of such a past as your excellent journal has. But it is not of the past I would write; of the present rather. You have come to the kingdom (Est. iv, 14) for such a time as this to do a work and meet a responsibility out of the reach of your gifted and distinguished predecessors when they were on this editorial tripod.

We have about begun in good earnest another year's work for the Master in the South Carolina Conference. Ours is a compact little body, and our railroad facilities are so abundant that it takes comparatively little time, trouble and expense to make the average number of changes that a Conference session obliges. And, then, I think we lead the connection in the number and comfort of parsonages. An important item in this is the inevitable changes. Of the 200 men appointed to work of various kinds; including local supplies, ninety-one are new men—4, e., first-year men. We have only fourteen men serving for the fourth year in the pastorate. It is the rare exception for a preacher to serve out his full quadrennium on a circuit or station in South Carolina. We are an old-fashioned Conference. We believe in the itinerancy, and our faith and practice agree.

I don't know, but that we have made, at least, one new departure recently. We haven't hitherto provided either stalls for giraffes or giraffes for stalls elsewhere. At our last Conference session, however, we sent from one of our very best charges one of our very best men to serve the leading church of our denomination in Little Rock, Ark. I must curb my erratic pen. Dr. Richard D. Smart is no giraffe in any offensive sense of that word. He is as far from being a self-seeking preacher as any man I know. He goes to Little Rock as he went to Charleston, and as he has gone to all his appointments for the past twenty years, at the appointment of the church, which he interprets as the voice of God. Dr. Smart is an educated gentleman. He graduated first at Wofford College, and then at the Southern Presbyterian Seminary in Columbia, our State capital. He is an instructive and edifying preacher, and a first-class pastor. He looks well to all the interests of the church. I take the liberty of prophesying that his present charge will think more of him the end of his fourth year than at the end of his first. He wears well.

I thank your correspondent, in last week's issue, for the most intelligent and satisfactory account I have seen yet of the terrific Sims tragedy. How sad a commentary the whole affair on the possible excesses of unrestrained and un sanctified human nature! From a fervid experience of grace down to the point of the ribald and irreverent caricature of a Christian hymn as one he is launched into eternity at the end of the rope of a band of lawless lynchers—oh! me, the distance is immense; and yet how rapidly it may be run! We speak of such conduct and such crimes as being unnatural. Unfortunately they are too natural. This human nature of ours, let loose on itself, what enormities may it not commit and then justify!

To get back to South Carolina, we had, during the recent session of our Legislature, what, to say the least of it, may be called a moral success for the cause of prohibition. The fight was made largely under the lead of Rev. H. F. Christy, of our Conference. He circulated petitions all through the State. These were numerous signed and presented to the State Legislature. Our Southern Christian Advocate, too, entered the field, and issued a prohibition number, besides urging with vigorous insistence for several weeks the passage of a prohibitory law. The champion of the bill in the House of Representatives was Col. L. D. Childs, a prominent and useful member of our church in Columbia. The bill, though defeated in the Senate, passed the lower House. I was in Columbia the day of its passage, and in the gallery of the House when the vote was taken. It was a clear and substantial victory for temperance reform in South Carolina. I was in conversation with Mr. Childs, the author of the bill (it goes down to history as the Childs' bill), on the afternoon of the day of his victory. I was delighted with his spirit. He feels that the hand of God is in the movement; and so do I.

Be assured of the deep sympathy of the best people of the Palmetto State with the best people of the Pelican State on your lottery issue. May God give success to the right! Your Dr. Palmer is our Dr. Ben Palmer. We lent him to you years ago. We have great satisfaction and delight, and we take pride in the ponderous blows he has been giving to this monstrous and monstrous infamy.

Our beloved Methodism is more and more a success in South Carolina. We have well on to 70,000 white members; according to actual count, 69,283—an increase of 2,200 for the past year. And these numbers mean more and more each succeeding year in the continual improvement of our preachers in keeping the records and making reports to the Conference.

Yours for the Master,
SAMUEL A. WEBER.

"Too Busy Making Money to Make a Living."

The above caption sounds paradoxical, and yet such was the language which fell from the lips of a business man a few days since.

How truly does the sentiment seem to apply to the thoughts and actions of the day! From the bloated bondholder and merchant prince down to the humble clerk and wage earner, the theory applies with equal force. While all agree that a man should "enjoy the good of all his labor that he taketh under the sun; for it is his portion," so great is the greed for gain that the teaching of Solomon is construed to read: "Get money; in all thy getting, get money."

The teaching to be gotten from the busy, thoughtful little ant is construed to mean a life of incessant worry and trickery to secure the "almighty dollar." Our Master's teaching concerning riches is reversed; and, instead of, "Seek first the kingdom of God," is substituted, "Seek first the kingdom of mammon."

In the genial, sunny climate of the South, with its varied soils and diversified crops, where a living can be secured more easily and with less labor than in any other section of our broad country, we find a general neglect of those interests which are essential to success and happiness; and men overlook the small things, which go to make a life of comfort and genuine pleasure, in their greed for the filthy lucre. Instead of the apostle's teaching, that "Godliness, with contentment, is great gain," we have the theory that "Great gain alone can give contentment and secure God's favor." So widespread is this conception of life that the most devout must take heed lest they be caught in the destructive maelstrom. With the vast majority of our people the measure of success is the number of bales of cotton that may be produced on a given territory. All energy is bent to this end. Smaller things are contemptible in their eyes. The very idea of consideration of such is a degradation to their conception of business. The friendly cow in the stall, the happy pig in the sty, and the golden grain in the crib—all give place to visions of happiness to be derived from lazy negroes, broken-down mules and cotton bales. For more than a decade of years our people have seen the folly and apparent ruin in such a course of life, and yet the suicidal policy has gone on until the cotton belt has awakened to the startling condition of threatened bankruptcy and almost famine. But for the money lender, or the ruinous credit system, our farmers could not pluck the crop; and but for the pork and bread of the West, dire famine would stare us in the face ere half the year had passed. I doubt seriously if our people could stand a blockade sixty days, and all this in the boasted garden spot of the continent; in a land admired and wondered at by all who visit it, a land of fertile soil and genial climate, a land of magnificent resources. While this is the condition of our Southland to-day, no one can deny that our cotton crop has steadily increased in all these years. The trouble has not been in the amount of cotton raised so much as in the utter inattention to smaller things.

"Too busy making money to make a living." When I see the cattle shivering in the fence corners, the thousands of mules brought to our markets every year, the farmer's wagon returning from the towns groaning under the produce from the West, while his pigs freeze and starve to death, I say, verily it is true. "Too busy to make a living." When our war closed in 1865, in those sections where the ravages of the enemy were not felt, the condition of our people was better than to-day. Cotton was not planted to much extent, and everybody was busy with the one thought of making a living for the home and for those on the battlefield. At the return of peace and the high price for cotton, the people abandoned these home industries, and thus the tendency downward has resulted in disaster and poverty.

"Too busy making money to make a living" has almost proved our ruin. Strange as it may seem, no one seems surprised at the result; but the solution is sought in some other channel. Farmers' organizations, cries for reformation and reform, Alliance conventions, all look to relief in legislation, cheap money, and sub-treasury schemes. While there may be some relief gotten from these sources, I confess my inability to see any relief, but in a return to a consideration of the small (?) things of farm life. No more can legislation make the poor rich than could it make the negro white—a policy faithfully tried by the nation for years.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. H. Sanders, Sidon circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Jan. 26: "I have been all round my circuit, and visited a number of families, and can say that the prospects are good for a fine year's work. We are still improving our church at this place, and will soon have a very neat little church. We are still growing in numbers, and I hope that we may grow in the spirit and power of the Holy Ghost. We need a revival all over the charge, and we are going to try to have it. We are going to do our best to build one church. Bro. Baohman spent one week with us since Conference, and I am glad to hear him say that the young preachers of our Conference are buying more good books this year than ever before. Boys, we must not only buy and read the books; but we must learn them. I think the ADVOCATE gets better every issue. May the Lord bless you!"

Rev. F. M. Keen, Angulla, Miss., Jan. 29: "I have just received some copies of our Minutes. They are a model of neatness and accuracy. However, I find that South Vicksburg is credited with only $8.45 for education; whereas the assessment was not only paid in full, but $72.50 besides. This latter amount was raised for the purpose of sending Rev. T. J. Roddy to Centenary College."

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, Franklinton, La., Jan. 22: "We are now located in the town of Franklinton. On our arrival here we were met by Bro. Robert Babin and others; received a warm welcome. We are very comfortably situated here; a nice parsonage very well furnished. The good ladies of this town had a supper for us that was a week long. The people are very kind to us. We hope to be able to do a good year's work for the Master."

Rev. D. C. Langford, Benton, Miss., Jan. 30: "Bishop Hendrix sent me to Benton circuit, near my old home, when I was a boy, and we got to our new home on Dec. 23, and was received with a nice, kind and bountiful reception. The good people have been very kind to us. The stewards met at once, and made a liberal assessment for our support. The circuit is repairing the parsonage, garden and yard, and have supplied the parsonage with new mattresses, linen and crockery. This is one of the best circuits in the Mississippi Conference, and we hope to have a gracious revival all over the work. One of the great needs is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. You have a goodly number of subscribers now, and we will try to get you many more."

Rev. T. Cameron, Batesville, Miss., Jan. 28: "The Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference show no report at all from Batesville and Wesley for 1891, and I, therefore, ask space in the ADVOCATE for a statement. Being prevented by sickness from attending the session at Macon, I sent forward my report, as I supposed, in time to be recorded by the statistical secretary; but have learned only this morning that such was not the case. Without troubling you with statistics, I will say, that while the report is not altogether full in some things, yet it shows considerable increase over the report of 1890 in almost everything. I have been the victim of a malignant attack of la grippe, as has every member of my family; and scarcely a family in Batesville has escaped."

Rev. J. A. Randolph, Starkville, Miss., Jan. 26: "We have been at our new home one month. Received a royal welcome, and it lasts. Have preached nine times; visited two hundred of our members. Have had sixteen accessions, and organized an Epworth League with fifty members; will get seventy-five. Bro. W. W. Magruder, a grandson of Dr. Richard Atthey, is our president. Bros. W. S. Harrison, W. H. Chiles and J. H. Connell are our vice-presidents. They are men who have always succeeded. They are busy men. When we want work done, we select busy men. Bro. Geo. R. Stuart will be with us in a meeting soon. Mrs. Randolph's health is better than for years. She is now in Memphis under treatment, and we believe she will be entirely well in a few weeks. Many of our people are suffering from la grippe. We came very near forgetting to say we have one of the best Sunday-schools in the State. Enough for a postal."

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Corinth, Miss., Jan. 23: "The third year of my pastorate here began auspiciously. My people were very kind in their expressions of appreciation for past services and encouragement for the future. Have had five accessions since Conference. La grippe has been very severe in our community. Several deaths already, and a number quite sick now. Bro. F. M. Bell and his wife, Sister Mary Bell, died within five days of each other. He was our mayor; a good citizen, a fine business man, a consistent Christian, and died in the faith. She was a devoted wife and mother, a true Christian, and died triumphantly. United in life, in death they were not divided. Our new church has the roof on. It will be completed in the early Spring. Our people are looking forward to the Conference with much pleasure, and are already laying plans for its entertainment. Bro. Lagfone is at work with his accustomed energy and push. The preachers are all at their posts, and the outlook on the district is promising."

Rev. O. McDonald, presiding elder of Brandon district, Forest, Miss., Jan. 29: "After an absence of three years, I am back on the old stamping-ground, and shaking hands with former friends. Many faces and places look as when I left here. Some of our best people, especially here in Forest, have crossed over the last river in the past three years. The memory of good lives remains with us. Last Saturday and Sabbath I was at Rose Hill. Bro. Thompson is comfortable in his parsonage, and is getting hold on the affections of his people. Money is distressingly scarce. Rev. T. Y. Armstrong, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, lives here. He is in his eightieth year, and is feeble in body, but bright and hopeful in spirit. He is nearing the end with an exceedingly mellow and sweet spirit. Here at Rose Hill is where a certain young preacher is said to have had such a trying time in carrying his saddlebags on his first circuit. It was told me as follows: He put them behind his saddle, and they soon fell off. He tried them again, with the same result. The third time he put them on his arm, and found he could take them."

Rev. J. N. Ware, Clarke circuit, Mississippi Conference: "We arrived at Matherville, on the Clarke charge, Dec. 29, 1891, and met a warm reception. We were conducted to a borrowed house, where we found a comfortable fire and everything in elegant order. The parsonage at the old stand has been sold; and we are building a new one at Matherville, where we have mail every day except Sunday. We have an elegant little house, of five rooms on a two-acre lot, and, when finished, will be an honor to the circuit. The plan for building the parsonage was made by my predecessor, and part of the work was done when we came here. I have filled all of the appointments up to date except last Sabbath, and that was on account of the high water. We find much to be done, such as visiting and praying in the families, as well as other things. Many family altars ought to be erected; many families without any church paper at all. The old complaint is still with the people (Mr. Hard-times), and they are not mistaken this time. With many of them it is hard times, while others have plenty and some to spare. We are not getting much as quarters, but we find some of the young people are still marrying, and we get a nice little fee now and then. We hope to bring up a good report by our next Conference."

Rev. J. H. Evans, Williamsburg, Miss., Jan. 19: "As I have not said anything about my return to the Williamsburg circuit since Conference at Brookhaven, I will try to say a few things about the times and seasons; and as I am sick with la grippe, and just able to sit and bake around a good pine-knot fire, and nurse my aching limbs, and cast a look out at the win-dow and see the falling snow, I can very truthfully say the season is not very pleasant; and as for the times, they are very hard up here in the pine woods. Doctor, they are so hard that we pine-knot preachers have come down to hard-tacks, and it looks like that the time is near at hand when we will have the hard without the tacks; but we have one consolation that two of the largest families of this town have gone, and one more will be out as soon as the snow will permit them, and that will leave a few more hard-tacks for those that are left. As I was sick last Sunday, I did not get to my appointment, which I very much regret. I never missed an appointment last year. I find the work very much like I left it. It is in a strait betwixt two. About money, there seems to be no money in the hands of the farmers. I am doing all I can for the dear old ADVOCATE. I am collecting some, and have got some new subscribers. I send to-day by registered letter $7, and hope to be able to send more soon. We have had a very quiet Christmas; had no dancing in our town. I think we have, through the power of the Spirit of God, whipped the dancing-devil out of this place, and almost off of the entire work. Pray for us, and may God bless you and the ADVOCATE!"

BRIEFS.

The best thing that has been done for the whole country in twenty-five years is the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court upholding the constitutionality of the anti-lottery postal law. We congratulate everybody upon the issue of this celebrated case.

In the death of Mr. Spurgeon the Christian Church has lost one of its greatest preachers and most earnest workers. If within the past twenty-five years the opinion of the Christian world had been obtained as to who was the most popular preacher in the world, we doubt not the verdict would have been largely in favor of Charles H. Spurgeon. After much suffering for a long time, this eminent man went calmly to rest in the bosom of his Father and his God.

The W. C. T. Union of this city held its annual meeting last week in the Coliseum Baptist Church. Gratifying progress has been made in every branch of the work and the members are much encouraged. The lunch house established last December has been a financial success; but we do not believe that it is reaching that part of the community which it was hoped it would benefit. After various reports and speeches, the union re-elected the old officers and started out for another year's work in the good cause of temperance.

Dr. A. H. Mitchell, of the Alabama Conference, says this: "I venture to say that not half the members of this Conference can pronounce the benediction correctly, and it is to be regretted that old men, and even presiding elders, get it wrong; and more, I have known even a Bishop to blunder right here." That sounds very strange to us, especially when preachers are required by our ritual to "pronounce the apostolic benediction" in dismissing the congregation. Can't they learn those few words by heart? Or do they think they improve upon them? Or what?

What "flopsters" the lottery papers are! A few months ago they were letting the world know that the "saints" were preaching revolution and blood, and to a man they deprecated with ghastly horror such a thing. Now, however, they are talking blusteringly about going to the "polls next April with a ballot in one hand and a shot-gun in the other." We respectfully inform them that the "saints" are not, and will not be, intimidated by such bluster. The "saints" have been accustomed to "weapons of war" ever since there were any "saints." They fought their way into Canaan under the leadership of God. They rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah, holding their weapon in one hand and their working tool in the other. And certain "saints" under a certain Cromwell demonstrated to all the world how they could use weapons of war. The "saints" are not scared at the lottery threats.

The last words our Lord spoke to his disciples assured them that when they received the Holy Ghost they would at the same time receive power, and this power would enable them to be witnesses unto him to the uttermost part of the earth. We understand that this promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. The injunction which he had given previously was: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Taking the passage in the last chapter in Luke and comparing it with the one in the first chapter of the Acts, and then looking at both in the light of description of the descent of the Holy Spirit, as recorded in the second chapter of Acts, we can not come to any other conclusion than that this special outpouring of the Spirit was to fulfill the promise and specially qualify the disciples to be witnesses of Christ wherever they might go. Some people seem to think that this was the first time the Holy Spirit ever came to human hearts. Such people have forgotten that there are several persons spoken of in the New Testament prior to this transaction who were said to have been filled with the Holy Ghost. Nor do we think they are correct who interpret the descent of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost Day as the sanctification of the disciples. We interpret the fact by the previous promise. The promise was, that after not many days they should receive power in the coming of the Holy Spirit to do a certain work. The fulfillment was, on the day of Pentecost they received the Holy Ghost and began immediately to do that very work. What those disciples received that day was the witnessing power of the Holy Spirit to the life and work and atonement of Jesus Christ. It was a special manifestation of divine power for preaching the gospel, and its divine origin was authenticated by the results of preaching on that day. The greatest of all power was manifested there in smiting to pieces hard and stony hearts and opening seared consciences. And the history, as it goes on in the Acts, relates how there was always an intimate connection between this power and successful preaching. The two were joined in the promise of the Lord, and they were joined in the fulfillment of that promise on Pentecost, and they have never been put asunder to this day. The special presence of the Holy Ghost accompanying the Word with his power has always resulted in successful preaching; and by successful preaching we mean that presentation of the gospel which arrests and attracts and leads sinners into the great salvation Christ has provided for them.

If these things are so, then no preacher should be satisfied until he has his Pentecost, until the power promised his witnesses by our Lord is realized in personal experience. It is the only way to true success. Any success without this is a sham. The need of the world to-day is witnesses to Christ who can testify with power. It is said of the disciples, "with great power gave they witness of the resurrection of Jesus." And Paul speaks of some who "preached the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." And of others it is said, "They preached the gospel in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." This is the crying need of our times. Men of power—Israelites, men whose hearts are aglow with a Spirit's presence, whose lips have been touched with divine fire—whose tongues are tipped with Pentecostal flame.

Brethren, we can get it! Every minister called of God can verify the Savior's promise! Every such man is in easy reach of the infinite resources of the Holy Ghost! Every member of the church of Christ has this divine and wonderful possibility. The disciples were told to "tarry in Jerusalem" until the great event happened, and they tarried in prayer and supplication and praise and joy until the awful sound of his coming startled the guilty city and the cloven tongues of fire descended and prepared them for their work. Have we to preach on Sunday, then let us tarry a day with God suing and pleading and agonizing for the true preaching power. It is worth more to us in the way of successful preaching than all the learning of all the schools.

Heart-Help in Thinking.

A wise man once said concerning discourse, "Cut it small, place it low, warm it." Difficult, very, to do the first. The supply is so ample that one instinctively desires to dish it out in huge chunks. Difficult, but necessary; for men eat by mouthfuls, not by chunks.

The second is still more difficult. Men have stood on tiptoe and strained for the truths they have—at any rate, they think so. To place these truths on the plane of mere commonplace things, down to the comprehension of the masses, is not difficult only, but humiliating—humiliating, that is, to the man who has been on tiptoe. A seer can do it. He did not strain after the truths. They came to him, drawn as it were by the counterpart of themselves in his own soul. The true seer, whether of perfect and universal vision, as was Jesus, or seeing only "in part," as do all others, has in himself much of what he beholds, and sees outside truths by "the light that is in him." To him, therefore, all things are suggestive of truth, all things symbolic of it. To him, in the best, truest sense, truth is commonplace. What is thought out may be above us; what is seen, whether much or little, is of us, because to see it at all we must be of it. So the seer speaks naturally, simply, unaffectedly, of the most sublime things, and is understood just in so far as his hearers have somewhat within that corresponds with his deliverances. By and by they will understand more of his message—all of it when they come to "be like him."

So the seer never strains after truth, nor is he hard to be understood by those who can understand him at all. As much as we are able to bear of his declarations (he declares, not argues) we grasp at once; for the other we must wait.

But the mere thinkers, you and I, how can we get the product of our thought down where others who have not the time, perhaps not the inclination, to do their own thinking can get it? I answer, "Warm it." A warm thought, one aglow with emotion, and especially with the emotion of love, or its kindred emotions, pity and tenderness, is next in rank to a vision, and, as it approaches a vision in clearness and naturalness, will find natural and simple expression. Thought dipped in the warm current of emotion speaks itself in the universal language. It types itself in all visible things, and when words are wanting tells itself in tones so that the barbarian, aye, even the dumb brute, can comprehend. Warm the tallest peak of icy thought; 'twill trickle down into brook and river, carrying freshness everywhere. At last it will reach the level—the great sea of human needs.

I am not sure that an icy intellect, be it never so honest, can think wisely for the race. Truth, somehow, will not mingle with the fibre of it. Ultimate truths are always spiritual, and spirit is warm. "God is love." He who would think for his kind must throw wide open the door of communication between heart and brain. The current must flow brainward, warm and strong. The cold intellect may think intensely, never broadly nor wisely; nor does its thought touch and move men. Our great thinkers—our Shakespeares and Goethes; our Newtons and Carlyles and Emersons—have all been men of warm hearts. And more plainly this is seen when we regard religious thought and thinkers. Moses was a man of tenderest tone; Samuel was loving and intense; Daniel's heart overflowed with sympathy and so bathed his brain with its affections that his highest thoughts come to us saturated with tenderness. Isaiah and Jeremiah—were they not as broad and as deep in their affection as they were grand in their intellectual powers? "Paul always gives his sublimest discourses, his grandest arguments, a peroration that is a heart-burst of pent-up emotion; while John, whose pure eye saw farthest into the mystery of his Lord's nature, and whose intellectual plummet found the deepest reaches of his eternal purpose, warned his mighty brain against the tender heart of Christ."

[No report from Felicity or Louisiana Avenue, the pastors being absent from the preachers' meeting.]

THE BETHESDA MISSION.

The Bethesda Mission—organized two months ago by Bro. Fred Stanley, and now under the auspices of the Carondelet Street Church, is doing finely. The mission has a large three-story building on Tchoupitoulas St., near Delord. The first floor is used for gospel meetings; the second has rooms of the janitress; general reading room and free dispensary. The third floor is used as a lodging apartment where the destitute may find comfortable quarters and a good bed.

The Mission Sunday-school numbers 90. Thursday night is devoted to gospel temperance work. Religious services Saturday and Sunday night. The average attendance at night meetings is 100. A prosperous sewing-school is conducted Saturday afternoon. Tuesday afternoon is given up to a mothers' meeting. Two men have united with Carondelet Street Church as a result of the work done at the mission. The work is most encouraging. Let all friends of missionary work contribute of their substance.

A Tragedy and a Moral.

The whole country has been shocked by the awful tragedy committed in Memphis, Tenn., last week. Miss Mitchell, a beautiful, wealthy young lady, killed her friend and former school-mate, for whom she had a strange infatuation, using a razor to accomplish her desperate purpose. A more distressing homicide, in all its details, has scarcely been paralleled in a civilized community. The only ostensible reason for this deadly deed of the young murderess was that her friend had slighted her, had ceased to speak to her, and determined to discontinue even an acquaintance. Saying that she could not live with her friend, she took her life, and in the most horrible manner. No doubt her mind was unbalanced; but why that morbid, mental condition? On this subject the Appeal-Avalanche, published in Memphis, thus pertinently speaks:

The case has more matter for the investigation and study of the physicians than for the lawyers and the courts. How came it that this winsome girl was so wrought upon as to become transformed, for an instant, into a maniac, without sense of right and wrong? What books had she been reading? What put the strange fancy in her mind, and why could it not be dislodged? It is a subject which should give parents pause? The child that broods in danger. The best medicine is a change of scene, and the inculcation of new aspirations. Particularly should the parent exercise the strictest surveillance over the literature that comes into the girl's hands. Many of the novels now offered for sale in public places are utterly vile in their teachings. They contain ideas which grow rankly in the minds of the young, and are of fatal consequence oftentimes to the nobler impulses. The poison is not easily eradicated. Its development takes strange phases. False notions of social relations are insidiously cultivated in these books prepared by wicked writers for morbid minds. We do not know that the poor child who now awaits the law's course was given to indulgence in this direction, but it may not be amiss to make these suggestions in discussing the psychological mystery which envelops the murder of Frederica Ward. It may put some parent on guard.

Our Jackson Office.

A branch office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has been established at 220 Capitol street, Jackson, Miss. It is in the same building as the Mississippi Conference Depository; has been nicely fitted up, and many of our best changes will be always on hand. The office is in charge of the assistant editor, who will be glad to see the brethren and friends while visiting the capital of Mississippi. In the absence of the room will be open and the papers arranged for accommodation and entertainment of visitors. A cordial Methodist welcome will be extended all who may favor us with a call. This will also serve notice on our Jackson and Mississippi business men that our columns will furnish them exceptional advantages for advertising. Extensively circulating over the entire State, you will be able to reach a large class of reliable customers, many of whom make frequent visits to the State capital.

NOTES.

There being so much talk about "curing drunkenness," one of our contemporaries gives the naive opinion that "the best cure for drunkenness is to quit drinking." We think the recipe is, at least, worth trying.

It has been said that human nature is about the same in every age. The New Testament we read that certain persons said to Philip, "Sir, we would see Jesus." We do believe that what people want to-day. That alone can satisfy. The question is, we, as preachers and members, are Jesus to those whose hearts are quiring for him?

We think the fraternal play between the two great Methodisms of the country will soon reach the last act in the last act. Some recent utterance of the "Beloved" in higher latitude have decidedly quickened the pace of the farcical drama. Dr. Buckley, the Missionary Committee, and Bishop Mallaleu, in the New York Christian Advocate, have given the final cue as we are listening for the jingle of the rings down the curtain.

At the late session of the Florida Conference a large and fine class of preachers was received on trial—among them Rev. A. S. Whedon, son of Dr. Daniel D. Whedon. We give him welcome for the sake of his father who was not merely one of the ablest theologians that Methodism has produced, but also one of the truest and strongest believers in our people's episcopal polity of whom we have knowledge. Bishop Mallaleu please to take notice of this incident and blow another blast upon his horn. —Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House has recently published in Spanish a volume of Wesley's sermons for special use in its Mexican mission. Each sermon is preceded by a statement concerning the circumstances attending its preparation and analysis and other matters to facilitate the ready understanding of the subject presented. The work, of 1201 pages, of Vanderbilt University, has skillfully done that many Spanish scholars affirm that they read each after sermon without any consciousness that they are translations from another language. The mission look to its spread with great hope and mighty influence in educating and elevating the people by stimulating their preachers to a higher grade of work. —Independent.

Bishop Keener's appointment of Rev. Robt. Harry, as agent for Oak Ridge College, is already bearing fruit. The agent gave us a call last Tuesday and from him we learn that he has already secured several students for next session. Capt. Pharr, of New York, La., has given an additional $500 towards the endowment of the college. This amount raises Capt. Pharr's endowment notes to $10,000. We do not doubt that others will follow the lead of this generous brother. Rev. Harry is much encouraged and confident of large success in his operations. Let everyone help in the great cause.

If any of our readers, who are farmers or planters, pass over Light Bro. Holloman's article on the 10th page, "Too Busy Making Money Make a Living," they will make a serious mistake. That article needs to be read and re-read and then again by every tiller of the soil. It might say to the planters and farmers of this country as Pharaoh's magicians said to him: "Knowest thou that Egypt is destroyed?" The same policy of making much—more cotton has brought the country to the precipice of bankruptcy, starvation, and one more step and we are gone! The only way to remedy this ruinous policy is to reverse it. —Bro. Holloman's article.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

We see it stated that Bishop Merrill, of the M. E. Church, has written a book on Organic Union.

Several of the editor's family "have been down" with the prevailing disease, and the editor has been dodging it, not very successfully, for ten days.

Rev. Thomas Armstrong is now editor of the Alabama Christian Advocate. We extend to Bro. Armstrong the usual courtesy, and wish him great success.

Bro. T. W. Lewis, of Holly Springs, Miss., in a private note informs us that he has raised nearly all his assessment for foreign missions. That is a good start.

We take pleasure in saying to our readers that we have again begun the Sunday-school Lessons, a sample of which is given this week. Bro. LaPrade, of Carondelet Church, will have charge of this department.

The Arcadia (La.) Advance speaks thus of one of our New Orleans boys:

Rev. J. F. Foster, the new Methodist minister, preached his first sermon at the Methodist Church, here, last Sunday, and bids fair to be a favorite with our people.

Rev. J. A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Seashore district, visited Soranton last week accompanied by his family, who will spend a few weeks at Capt. John B. Delmas' residence, on Pascagoula River, previous to returning to the parsonage at Hattiesburg, Miss.—Democrat-Star.

We have received Our Homes, a quarterly published by the Parsonage and Home Mission Society of our church. This first number gives a good promise for the future. Miss Lucinda B. Helm is editor, and it is published by Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn., for twenty-five cents a year.

Our friend, Rev. J. S. Oakley, brings us under new obligations for a copy of the Minutes of the twenty-second session of the North Mississippi Conference. The pamphlet is a handsome one and contains a complete record of the doings of that Conference in Macon, last December.

With the "compliments of F. L. Reid," we have received the Journal of the fifty-fifth session of the North Carolina Conference. In this journal there are two items we think good: one is a chronological roll of the Conference, and the other, a roll of the local preachers in the bounds of the Conference, giving the postoffices and districts in which they reside. Bro. Reid has our thanks.

The Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor of New Orleans will hold a union meeting at the Presbyterian Church, corner Josephine and Prytanee streets, Thursday, Feb. 4, at 7:30 P. M. Dr. F. E. Clark, of Boston, president of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, and founder of the movement, will address the meeting, to which everyone is most cordially invited. Ministers especially are requested to attend.

A letter to the editor from Rev. R. S. Trippett, one of our superannuates now residing in Doncaster, England, says:

My dear wife and self suffer much at times from rheumatism and colic, which was, doubtless, brought on by exposure in our early itinerant days; but if we had life to go over again, I would rather be a preacher in Louisiana than in any other part of the world. I love my brethren and the people of Louisiana. I pray that you may have glorious times this year, and that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified.

We are sure all the brethren in Louisiana will join us in praying God's blessing upon our venerable and suffering brother and his wife.

Rev. J. G. Cammack, Summit, Miss., writes, Jan. 30: "Our dear Bro. Strickland, a superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, who lives here, has been seriously ill for two weeks, and, using his words, 'is nearing his long home.' We can not tell what the result will be as yet. We hope his many friends and brethren will remember him in their prayers. Am glad to say that our precious Bro. Hudson was able to be out yesterday and visited Bro. Strickland. We do hope that God may yet spare him a long time to his dear family, to us and the church. We are moving along smoothly after so much bad weather, grip, etc. Hope to have a pleasant and prosperous year. We have already been shown that this people know how to care for their pastor."

The World's Fair.

The South may claim, without prejudice, to have more than its share of the world's fair. The acknowledged beauty of the ladies of the South is due in a great degree to the use of Creole Female Tonic, the ladies' friend and favorite, and sure cure for all female ailments.

A fire, last week, in the shops of the Queen and Crescent railroad at Meridian, Miss., destroyed $75,000 worth of property.

Tried in the Balance.

Maraden's Pectoral Balm is not an experiment. For twenty-five years it has been "tried in the balance" and was found wanting in its ability to speedily and permanently cure coughs and colds.

Hereafter receipts of money for subscriptions will be indicated by change of date on the label on the paper. If specially requested, receipts will be sent also through the mail.

Notes from Our Jackson Office.

Mr. Hunt, architect of Millsaps College, was in the city a few days ago. He expressed himself as highly pleased with the progress being made on the building now in process of erection.

Rev. J. D. Crymmer, of Flora, Miss., was to be ordained to the eldership last night at the First Methodist Church, this city, by Bishop Galloway, after a sermon by Rev. E. H. Moulter, the new presiding elder of the Jackson district.

We have recently visited Utica, Natchez, Madison, Canton and Pickens. We found all the brethren at their posts, rapidly getting under full headway. In all the works the outlook is hopeful, and in some the prospects are brighter than for years.

We have had quite a host of visitors at our Jackson office for the past few days from home and from abroad. That is right, brethren; the door is open. Come when you can, and make yourself at home. Let this be headquarters for Mississippi Methodism.

Rev. R. M. Standefer, presiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, visited the capital last week, and reports a strong sentiment among the leading planters in the Delta in favor of the temperance law now before the Legislature.

We are pained to learn that Rev. H. C. Brown, of East End, Meridian, lies dangerously ill at his home in that city. He contracted the grippe, which ran into a complication of diseases, and, though not out of danger at the time of this writing, we are glad to learn he is in a fair way to speedily recover.

The Senate has passed the strongest prohibition bill ever before the Legislature. If it passes the House without amendment, it will make Mississippi virtually a prohibition State. The House has passed a bill prohibiting liquor dealers from serving on grand juries, and making the business a cause for challenge on petit juries.

The whisky lobby at Jackson, coming up from Natchez, Vicksburg, Meridian and other places, is strong, active and aggressive; but the temperance forces are united. The whiskyites are resorting to all kinds of subtleties; but the indications are that they will soon be away sadder, but wiser men. The saloon must go.

Our citizens generally, and the Methodist particularly, are gratified that ex-Chancellor Mays, of the University of Mississippi, and his family, have moved to Jackson. Chancellor Mays is a member of the committee appointed by authority of the last General Conference on the ordaining of our church laws. Dr. R. H. Mahon and Dr. Anson West are the other members of the committee.

Hon. Henry Watterson, journalist and statesman, of Louisville, Ky., delivered his famous lecture on "Money and Morals" in the Representatives' Hall, last Thursday evening. A large audience greeted and greatly enjoyed the brilliant lecturer. He was gracefully introduced by Gov. Stone, and for over an hour held the enthusiastic attention of his audience. He is a philosopher, rhetorician, and orator. His discussion of money in its relation to moral character and the moral, benevolent uses of money, was able and philosophical.

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

I commenced mailing the Minutes to the subscribers to-day. I had to guess at the postoffices of some, as I had received no information from them. If any fail to get their quota, let me know and I will try to rectify the matter. I had 1,200 copies printed. They ought to be in the hands of our people, and can be had for ten cents per copy by applying to me.

Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used externally, cures rheumatism; not in a minute, however.

Notice.

I deem it necessary to state in behalf of myself and the good people of Carthage, circuit that I was unable to attend Conference; but sent my report, which I suppose reached there too late to go into the statistical report. Thus the report in the Minutes, which are so far incorrect that I will not undertake to correct them.

The Favorite.

For twenty-five years Maraden's Pectoral Balm has been well and favorably known in the South. It is an unfailing cure for a gripple, coughs, colds and croup in children.

Those of our readers who wish to obtain any of the books published by our Southern Methodist Publishing House or by F. H. Revell, of Chicago, can procure them as prizes for new subscribers by writing this office.

The Far West.

The prosperity of the Western countries is now assured, as the only great drawback that they had was the lack of rain; and now Melbourne, with his mysterious machine, has so thoroughly demonstrated the fact that rain can be had, and obviate the heretofore existing trouble, that the whole section is happy and great prosperity is predicted. Here in Louisiana we do not often need more rain than the good Lord sends us; but we need some of it in a better condition than it is allowed to get into after it is sent us; in other words, we need Coe's Cut-offs (from 101 Camp St.) on every clister, to throw into the waste-pipe all the filth which gets on the roof, and in this way pure, wholesome water and better health can be secured.

A Red Ear Calendar.

Calendars are more certain to fly at this season than snow itself. The crop is always large, but the individuals generally lack utility. One of the very best we ever see comes from N. W. Ayer & Son, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Philadelphia. It is the red ear of the crop. It looks and talks business. Its size is generous, its figures very plain, while it is printed so handsomely as to make one willing to keep company with it the entire year. Like the other productions of the firm, this bears their famous phrase, "Keeping everlastingly at it brings success"—a text which they both preach and exemplify. The calendar is sent by them, postpaid, for 25 cents, and what is again unusual in such cases, it is so packed as to pass through the mails uninjured.

Chinese Matrimony

Is a subject of much general interest. How it is associated with flower culture is told in the attractive advertisement of Peter Henderson & Co., in another column. Ladies will be especially interested in this advertisement—and what interests the ladies will certainly be worth the attention of the men.

Where did you get that sweet-toned piano?

MATTING.

The importations of new goods for the Spring Season of 1892 have now arrived, and never before has the time been as handsome or as low in price. One pattern in particular—a reversible, jointless white, with a small inserted Japanese figure—is exciting a great deal of comment.

Wall Paper.

We are offering a complete line of new designs which can not be shown elsewhere in the State, the manufacturers having made us sole selling agents owing to the quantities of their goods which we handle.

HOME NEWS.

Monroe, La., has lost three of her physicians by death since the year began.

Columbus, Miss., is to have a dummy street car line within the next three months.

Washington county, Miss., has sixty saloons—twenty of which are in Greenville.

The Union Hotel in Meridian, Miss., was damaged by fire, last week, to the extent of $3,000.

The Standard Oil Company have completed the building of an oil depot at Bay St. Louis, Miss.

Cisborne county, Miss., shipped 18,000 bales of cotton this season—that is, from Sept. 1, 1891, to Jan. 1, 1892.

Grand Cane, La., had a disastrous fire last week, which resulted in the destruction of a whole business block.

Abbeville, La., has voted a five-mill tax for ten years in aid of the construction of the Iberia and Vermilion railroad, which, it is expected, will be completed by next September.

Mississippi has 75 counties. Of these 34 are license and 41 prohibition. The license counties contain 206,750 whites and 459,639 blacks; the prohibition counties contain 335,717 whites and 332,540 blacks. We get these figures from the Mississippi Leader.

Moss Point, Miss., has about fifteen saw mills, all doing a lucrative business, a hard-wood factory, two foundries, four ship-yards, one grist mill and some forty stores and shops, churches of every denomination, an academy and several private schools, and a first-class literary society.

The Democrat-Star, Scranton, Miss., is responsible for this "fishy" news:

A haul of 14,000 pounds of trout, averaging one and a half pounds each, was made in front of Pascagoula, and another haul of 1,538 pounds of fish at Bayou Casotte, last week, which was shipped by Capt. John Foster to the different markets. This gives an idea of the abundance of fish in our waters this season.

A rapid-growing, berry-bearing vine of great beauty. It is of vigorous growth, and ENTIRELY HARDY. It begins to bloom in the late spring and continues blooming until frost. Following the flowers, the berries begin to form and increase in numbers until the whole vine is one mass of brilliant scarlet fruit, oblong in shape and about as large as a cherry; they remain perfect as late as February so that from August until late into the winter, it will be a mass of brilliant color. The CHINESE MATRIMONY VINE grows and thrives in any situation either shade or sunlight, and will take root in any soil, in fact, nature has given it all the essentials for wide popularity.

THE CHARMING MEXICAN PRIMROSE

Is the Grandest of all New Plants. It is strictly a perpetual bloomer, as it is in flower at all times of the year, a good specimen showing always from ten to thirty large saucer-shaped blossoms, about three inches across, of a beautiful, bright, clear pink color, veined with scarlet and with a white center. The superb color, combined with its grace and beautiful form, goes to make a flower which is in every garden a great success. Each blossom keeps perfect, many days before fading, and when it drops, others are out to take its place, and this succession of beauty is continued from one year's end to another. The plant is a case of culture with unsurpassed beauty and delicate loveliness, and is truly a plant which has no superior in the open ground. It grows freely and blooms profusely all summer, and, in fact, until winter. It is a plant whose merits of hardiness, ease of culture, perpetual freedom of bloom, and unsurpassed beauty, both in color and habit, are offset by no faults whatever. It is the one most desirable new plant for the home or garden. FINE PLANTS, ALL READY TO BLOOM, BY MAIL, POSTPAID, GUARANTEED. ORDER TO ARRIVE IN GOOD CONDITION, 40 cts. each, 3 for $1.17 for $2. 1892. "Survival of the Fittest."

If Darwin's theory is to be accepted, then the fact that I am the sole survivor in the trade of those who sell will be the same line of business, gives significance to the fact that my sales of seed to market gardeners, well known to be the most critical of all buyers, has increased year by year until it has now reached vast proportions. That I raise my seed with my five seed farms, make two tests annually for vitality, and test novelties, that no one may be imposed on, will explain much to the thoughtful buyer. Invite you to write for my FREE Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue.

OBITUARIES.

CARRUTH.—During the year 1891 many homes were made desolate, many hearts made sad. The ruthless hand of death entered many homes. The Christmas just passed was in many good people a sad day. Among the many homes visited by the hand of death, on Dec. 23, last, was that of my well-tried friend and precious brother, Jno. P. Carruth, of Amite county, Miss. His father, SAMUEL O. CARRUTH, in his eighty-second year, quit the shores of mortality and went home to rest.

Bro. Carruth joined the Methodist Church in early life, in which he lived a faithful and true Christian until death. He was born on June 18, 1810; married to Martha Adams in April, 1836. Sister Carruth died in the faith several years ago. Since her death Bro. Carruth has made his home principally with his only son, J. P. Carruth. They had only two children, a son and daughter, both of whom, together with a host of children and grandchildren, were left behind to mourn their loss. Bro. Carruth was ready, his passport was signed, his work was done, and well done. I have known him long and well. His funeral was preached by Bro. P. Howard, Dec. 25, and he was buried at old Adams Church, in Lincoln county, Miss. A funeral pastor, H. F. Lewis.

STEPHENSON.—From the home of her parents in Warren county, Miss., Oct. 26, 1891, at the age of nine months and six days, NANNIE MAJEL, infant daughter of R. C. and N. A. Stephenson, was taken to our Father's house above.

He who by human birth, life and death, and a glorious resurrection and ascension, hath illumined earth's pathway from the cradle to the skies, said the last time to those parents, "Let this little one come unto me, for I such is the kingdom of heaven."

This short life, which despite careful attention, physician's skill and Christian's prayers, after a fearful struggle closed, by the lessons and experience to the living and by the spirit's return to him who gave it shall glorify God forever. Jesus said to one, "Thou shalt know hereafter." Let us await his revelations in eternal glory. J. Wilson Brown.

JOHNSON.—DAVID BLANKETT JOHNSON was born in Henry county, Ala., Nov. 2, 1858, and died at Ellenville, Miss., Sunday, Dec. 27, 1891. At an early period of his life his parents moved near Winchester, Wayne county, Miss. His early boyhood was marked by that fair dealing and kindly manner that characterized his subsequent life. In 1880 he married Miss Ida Pitts, who with their son, Walter, survive him. That same year he joined the M. E. Church, South.

As a husband and father, none were more affectionate, thoughtful and kind. Blessed with a congenial companion, his was a happy Christian home. His union with the church was not solely for personal benefit; it meant work for Jesus. His pastors were not slow to recognize his consecrated ability, and early in church life he was placed in positions of responsibility. About the spring of 1891 he began to realize that he was in the grasp of a relentless, deadly disease, and the care of his health compelled him to resign the superintendency of Ellenville Sunday-school. The office of steward he held up to the time of his death. The unobtrusive manner of Bro. Johnson would not indicate a superficial observer; any great attainment of the divine life; but to those who knew him his whole life at home and abroad spoke with an emphasis most convincing, even to the ungodly, that his service to Christ was truly loyal.

About a month before his death he sought a more genial climate near San Antonio, Texas; but, alas! it was too late to benefit him. While there he wrote to me, "I always try to keep up with my religious duties and be ready for God's summons at any time he should see fit to take me." On his return home he realized fully that the end was near. Amidst the surroundings of home and loved friends he lingered on to the last Sabbath of the year. He saw the rising of the sun, but as the hour neared for its going down God's messenger came, and, as a babe falls asleep upon its mother's breast, thus gently he closed his eyes; his weary heart radically ceased its pulsations; he was gone to that rest that remains for the people of God.

Our whole community feels bereaved of a true man and Christian brother. God grant that the mantle of the father, in due time, may fall upon the son, Walter. R. B. DOWNS.

THOMAS.—Died, in Raleigh, Miss., Oct. 29, 1891, in full hope of heaven, JOSEPH THOMAS, son of Maria and Elizabeth Thomas. He was born in Davis county, N. C., May 26, 1816; came to Mississippi, December, 1839; was married to Miss Nancy Guthrie, Nov. 21, 1841; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1863, and was ever after a consistent and devoted Christian. He loved the church and her ministry; was a true, kind and devoted husband; good citizen; a friend to all true morality. This writer had in him a true and devoted friend and brother; was his pastor; knew him long and favorably. He was successful in business; therefore, left a competency for his once devoted, but now bereft, companion. No child was born to Bro. Thomas. He reared and educated one or two orphans. Dear brother, rest under the shadow of that great rock until we meet again.

DUSON.—Mrs. JULIA I. DUSON, daughter of Dr. Bennette E. Clark, was born Jan. 19, 1866; was married to W. W. DUSON, April 27, 1882; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite a girl. She was an humble, consistent Christian till her death, which occurred Jan. 20, 1892, in Crowley, Acadia parish, La.

Medical skill and human love and attention could not keep her; God had called her. The crowded church at her funeral attested her influence and how dearly she was loved in the community. Her pure and noble Christian life attested her readiness for a home and mansion above. She was a true, loving wife. Having no children of her own, she was a devoted mother to her little step-daughter. The husband, father, brother and sister, with many friends, feel deeply this loss. God bless the bereaved. JNO. A. MILLER.

BEESON.—Mrs. SALLIE EMALINE BEESON was born March 30, 1852, and died Dec. 21, 1891, aged nineteen years eleven months and nine days. Her maiden name was Jennings. She was married to Harvey W. Beeson in the early part of 1880, and in the fall of that year she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She was soundly converted, and lived a consistent member until death.

She bore her affliction with Christian resignation, and we feel confident that our loss is her gain. She leaves a devoted husband and a little girl eight months old. May the Lord bless the bereaved ones, and help them to live so as to meet the loved one in the sweet life and by! H. A. B.

We, the undersigned, do testify that we have used Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar for years, for all throat and lung troubles, with the greatest success. By Rev. L. L. PICKETT.
200 Pages, Cloth. Price, $1.00.
A Few Good Words.

Rev. S. A. Kien: This is a clear, suggestive, refreshing volume, fully demonstrating that God has given to the world a Book, and that this Book is a treasure of holiness. One rises from the reading of Bro. Pickett's book feeling that the Bible is instinct with the Divine presence, and that, from the first words, "In the beginning," to the last "Amen," it is so pregnant with the idea, and so radiant with the beauty of holiness, that to call it the "Holy Bible" is not a misnomer.

Originated by a physician, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is prescribed by many regular doctors.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption
When death was hourly expected from consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured the only child, and now gives the recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address: ORADOCK & CO., 182 Race Street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Ex-President Cleveland visited this city on Feb. 1, and held a public reception at the City Hall, where he was greeted by thousands who shook hands with him. The distinguished visitor left for home on the evening of the same day.

Representatives of six beet sugar factories met in San Francisco, last week, and formed an association to develop the industry. Three were Californian and three Eastern factories. This year there is sure to be another beet sugar factory established in California, as all three are now paying well.

The official correspondence between the United States government and Chili was transmitted to Congress by President Harrison, on Jan. 28, congratulating the nation upon the successful termination of the negotiations. The President advocated immediate steps toward the final settlement of the affair.

At the session of the National Board of Trade in Washington City, last week, a resolution was adopted requesting Congress to amend the interstate commerce law by establishing a uniform bill of lading for interstate commerce, involving the liability of carriers, as established by common and statutory law.

A large delegation of representatives of the deep waterway convention, held in Detroit, in December last, was given a hearing, on Jan. 30, before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Senate Committee on Commerce. In joint session, these committees having in charge the operation of the regular river and harbor appropriation bill. The maintenance of deep water connections to the sea was urged.

Two thousand railroad men, representing every State and Territory of the United States, met in New York City, on Jan. 31. Conductors, engineers, firemen, brakemen and telegraphers were present, all members of organizations distinct from each other. One object of the meeting is to effect a consolidation of the various orders at no distant day, and to bring about closer and more friendly relations among the members.

The east-bound passenger train on the Texas and Pacific railroad was totally wrecked two miles west of Robeline, La., on Jan. 30. The train ran upon a burnt bridge, and the entire train, consisting of baggage, postal and express cars, two day passengers and one Pullman, was completely destroyed, all the cars save the Pullman having telescoped. The wreck took fire, and soon was a mass of ashes. The engineer was killed, and a young lady was taken from the wreck burned beyond recognition. Many passengers were bruised.

The Peary Relief Committee, of the Academy of Natural Sciences, is preparing a circular estimating that the cost of the expedition will be about $10,000, and though the Academy will contribute liberally towards the relief fund, outside help will be needed. It is expected to find Lieutenant Peary at 77 degrees north of McCormick Bay, about the middle of August, and the only fear of the committee is lest he should have exhausted his provisions, a large stock of which will be carried to last him over next winter, should such prove the case.

FOREIGN.

The Salvation Army, while holding a special celebration in Eastbourne, England, on Jan. 31, to commemorate the founding of the corps, were attacked by a mob, and many were injured in repeated assaults.

A band of members of the Salvation Army met with a highly hostile reception on the Boulevard des Italiens in Paris, on Jan. 31. There were a number of scuffles between roughs and Salvationists, the mob which encouraged the assaults hissing and hooting the harassed band.

The Spanish Minister of Public Works has declared that the government would accept the anarchists' May day challenge. Hitherto, he said, the government had been content with simply dispersing the anarchists on that day, but they had resolved henceforth to deal with them.

Severe floods prevail in the Scottish highlands owing to a thaw which has melted enormous quantities of snow and ice in the mountains. A part of the city of Perth, which lies on the right bank of the river Tay, is inundated, and in many portions of the country the railways have been flooded.

The town of Chimay, in the province of Hainault, Belgium, has been visited by a terrible conflagration, which destroyed fully one-fourth of the entire number of its buildings. The fire, which originated in a church, spread with great rapidity. The firemen, much aided by a timely downpour of rain, succeeded in saving the threatened residence of the Prince of Chimay.

Election riots are reported from many places in Hungary. In a disturbance of this kind at Tiszaelok one person was killed and many wounded. In a riot at Oroszko three persons were killed and fifteen seriously wounded, while Banffy Hanyad was also the scene of a serious conflict. In the last-named town all the members of an election committee and many other persons were wounded, two of them so seriously that they have since died.

18 Pounds of Blood

Is about the quantity nature allows to an adult person. It is the utmost importance that the blood should be kept as pure as possible. Hood's Sassaaparilla has proven its claim to be the best blood purifier.

Chili's apology in the Baltimore affair has been accepted by the United States government, and Secretary Blaine has notified Minister Egan of the restoration of friendly relations between the two countries.

St. Paul's Architectural Figures.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

It is clear that the Holy Spirit permitted the various writers, whom he inspired, to use such illustrations as their education, habits and surroundings suggested, as the best illustrations of the spiritual ideas they were inspired to communicate to men. St. Paul was born in Tarsus, a city of no mean reputation, and was educated in Jerusalem. He visited in his missionary tours most of the principal cities of Asia Minor, Greece, and the Roman Empire. He was familiar with temples, palaces, theaters, town halls and public prisons. He was familiar with the most magnificent structures in the world. The building, the symmetry and beauty of the noble piles readily occurred to him as apt and impressive illustrations. Some fifteen times in his inspired writings he uses architectural figures. Such figures are comparatively rarely used by other sacred writers.

St. Paul often uses the word "edify," from edifice, and to build. He uses it with various applications, and properly so, for we believing men and women are declared to be the temples of the Holy Ghost; and it is declared that believers are not mere materialities of brick and marble, but "living stones built up a spiritual house." So in Paul's Epistle to the Romans (xiv, 19) he says, "Let us, therefore, follow after things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may 'edify' another." The spiritual temple can not be built with discord, nor with impure materials. We are to be careful of our influence. Our good example builds and establishes the faith and Christian character of others.

In Paul's Epistle to the Thessalonians (I. Thess. v, 11), he proceeds to exhort them, from the blessed fact that Christ died for them, to comfort themselves and "edify" one another, even as they also did. In his Epistle to the Corinthians (I. Cor. xiv, 1) he writes: "As touching things offered to idols, that all had knowledge; but that was not their need, for knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth—it buildeth up." Of such excellent material is the spiritual temple to be built. In the eighth chapter to the Corinthians, writing about his spiritual liberty, he says, speaking of this same matter of things offered to idols, "All things are lawful to me, but not expedient; harmless to me, but all things do not 'edify.' He ever keeps in view the importance of building up on Christ, the chief cornerstone. In the fourteenth chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, St. Paul considers the importance of order and discretion in the use of spiritual gifts. He says, "Let all things be done to edifying." No is ever alive to the sound and safe building. So again in Romans, fifteenth chapter, he directs that believers please, or seek to please, their neighbors to "edification."

to building up the spiritual temple of holy character. In addressing those at publicly addressed the people, he uses the architectural illustration—to do so to edification. The unknown tongue and unknown style of speech might "edify" the speaker, aid in building him, but would not help and build up others. In the tenth chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, in speaking of the authority with which he was clothed as an apostle and founder of churches, he resorts to his architectural illustration, and says this authority was not given him for destruction, for any hurt, but help, or, as he loves to express it, for edification. In the fourteenth chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians he exhorts those who had spiritual gifts to seek to edify the "edifying" of the church. This is the great purpose in the bestowment of spiritual gifts; not self-aggrandizement, but the edification of the church, the building it up in all the graces of the Spirit. This should ever be borne in mind in all our writing and preaching. In St. Paul's second Epistle to the Corinthians he says to them, "defending his course of procedure towards them, 'I do all things, dearly loved, for your edification.' And in his first Epistle to Timothy he charges him not to give heed to fables and endowments of genealogies, which minister questions rather than 'edifying.'" we see this spiritual growth and improvement of the church, which was a great desire, led the apostle to use this architectural figure of edifying or building up the church. In writing to the church at Ephesus to grow up into Christ, the Head, he exhorts the church to "edify itself in love." He knew that all other materials were but "wood, hay, stubble," and in the end to be burned. All else apart from love was "nothing," and would "profit nothing."

This figure of the edifice, or spiritual house, built of spiritual living stones, whether applied to individuals as temples of the Holy Ghost, or to the whole body of believers as constituting the great spiritual temple of God, built of better materials than marble or gold, even of living immortal stones, the adopted sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, was, as we have seen in this paper, a favorite and frequent illustration of St. Paul in his inspired letters to the churches. A consideration of this peculiarity of the apostle's style ought to be interesting and instructive.

The New Prohibition Law of Mississippi.

THE MISSISSIPPI SOLONS, now in session in this city, have been paying their respects to the liquor traffic. The House has just adopted with some amendments a bill which originated some days ago in the Senate, based on the dram-shop chapter of the new code, prepared by commissioners appointed by Gov. Stone. This bill contains some provisions which are considerably in advance of all our previous legislation on this subject. The Local Option Law of 1886 is re-enacted with important modifications. In a county which has voted "for the sale," the would-be saloon keeper, instead of simply getting twenty-five freeholders to sign his petition, as per act of '86, must present a petition signed by a majority of the qualified voters of the municipality, or supervisor's district. Moreover, any person may get up a counter petition, and names which appear on both petitions will be counted on the counter petition only. This feature of the bill alone sounds the death-knell of the liquor traffic in a multitude of localities. Saloons are to be open to public gaze, screens of every kind being prohibited. The saloon keeper is not only prohibited from selling to minors, but he is required under heavy penalties to exclude them from his premises altogether. Billiard-rooms and similar establishments are not to be operated in connection with saloons. All license moneys go into the State treasury. This is a very valuable feature of the bill, as the most effective argument of saloon keepers everywhere is the local revenue argument. Saloon keepers are excluded from grand juries altogether, and are subject to challenge on petit juries. The stigma thus put upon the traffic will have a very wholesome effect. The bill retains the provisions of the old law as regards selling on Sunday, selling to minors, and selling to persons intoxicated, and also prohibits the sale to persons who are habitual drunkards.

For a violation of any of the laws regulating the traffic, a saloon keeper's license may be summarily cancelled by any chancellor on complaint of any citizen. Other valuable features of the bill might be mentioned, but these give a general idea of its character. This bill was adopted by the House yesterday evening by a vote of 72 to 23. It now goes back to the Senate. That it will become a law there is little doubt, as the temperance sentiment is stronger in the Senate than in the House. Without claiming the gift of prophecy, I hazard the prediction that this legislation is the beginning of the end of the liquor traffic in Mississippi.

W. C. BLACK.

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 6, 1892.

Letter from the Agent of Centenary College.

When Bishop Keener appointed me to the agency of Centenary College, I was far from being enthusiastic, or even hopeful, over the appointment. I knew that I was undertaking an arduous task, and that, too, under most unfavorable circumstances, this being a year of the, perhaps, greatest financial depression in this and adjoining States since the war; but, after visiting Jackson, La., where the college is situated, and talking with President Hunnicutt, and the faculty, and the citizens, and the boys, and looking at the noble and venerable pile from which some of the best men in our State and Mississippi have graduated, I received an inspiration that, I trust, will, with the help and guidance of my God, carry me on to success. If there is a preacher in the Louisiana Conference who is not heart and soul with and for Centenary, I would advise him to go to Jackson and see for himself; look at the young men there being educated free of charge for the ministry of our church, and our preachers' sons being educated for the different walks in life, besides numbers of others who are being educated at low rates of tuition, who are to play an important part in the future history of our State and country. And with reference to the work that is being done there, let me quote from that large-hearted and loyal Methodist with whom I have been staying since Saturday last, and who has one son who graduated last year, and another who will graduate this year, and still another who will graduate later on—Capt. John Pharr: "I would not wish anything better for my boys than Centenary College. They are being well educated; they are surrounded with moral and religious influences that can not be found in connection with any other school in the State; and I am perfectly satisfied with the result."

This is from a man who knows Jackson and Centenary by heart, and whose word can not be disputed. Another grand feature about it is this: By an act of the Legislature, no whiskey or other intoxicants can be sold within five miles of the town. Think of that, and compare it with the other towns in which are situated institutions of learning, where there is a bar-room almost on every street-corner, and other places of vice which are calculated to ruin our youth. Then let us rally, preachers and people, to the support of an institution of which so much can be said.

I have already received some boys for next session, and Capt. Pharr has generously increased his endowment contribution to ten thousand dollars. I have also made some friends for the college in this neighborhood, who, I am satisfied, will come to our help in the near future. I met a Catholic gentleman, a few days ago, who told me, after I had described the college to him: "That is the place where I must send my boys. I would rather send them there, and pay tuition, than send them to my church schools, and have them taught free of charge."

Brethren, help me, by your prayers and co-operation, to increase the endowment and patronage of this grand old institution, and God will bless us in the effort.

My dear Doctor, excuse the length of this note. I will be more brief in my next, and hope to send you a statement of greater results.

Yours fraternally,

ROBT. HARRY.

P. S.—My address for the present will be 112 Camp Street, New Orleans, La.

Aberdeen District.

The Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference just received. They are neat, well printed, and, as far as examined, satisfactory. The editor and statistical secretary have done their work well, and deserve the thanks of the church. A study of these Minutes, as compared with the Minutes of former years, shows development in many directions. The Aberdeen district makes a good showing, comparatively; but not such as she has ability to make. There was reported from this district to the last Conference for all purposes $6,035.55 more than was reported to the Conference ten years ago. There was reported then 4789 members, and now 7324—an increase of 2,435. The district then had 89 churches, valued at $56,050, and now 73 churches, valued at $69,100. Then there were 4 parsonages, valued at $3,900, and now 12 parsonages, valued at $12,975. Four parsonages built this year will give a parsonage for each charge in the district.

The Aberdeen district reported for 1891 for all purposes $819.90 more than the Columbus district; and, not counting the amount paid the presiding elder and the preachers in charge, the Aberdeen district reported $1,758.94 more than the Columbus district. The Winona district reported for all purposes only $747.82 more than the Aberdeen district; but, not counting the amount paid the presiding elder and the preachers in charge, the Aberdeen district paid $1,305.97 more than the Winona district. The Greenville district reported from all sources $18,840.61; but, subtracting the large sum of $12,356.55 paid to the presiding elder and to the preachers in charge in that district, then the Aberdeen district reported $1,939.25 more than the Greenville district. The Aberdeen is in advance of either of the other districts.

The Aberdeen is the banner district in Sunday-school work in the Conference. She reported to the last Conference 4,192 in Sunday-schools—an increase of nearly 1,500 in ten years. She expended more money the past year (about twice as much as ten years ago) than any other district for Sunday-school purposes, with the exception of the Winona district. Children's Day was generally observed the past year, and the district reported considerably more raised on that day than any other district in the Conference. The district has annually a Sunday-school Conference, which is helping largely to develop the Sunday-school interest. With the presiding elder, and the preachers, and many Sunday-school workers, it is the aim of the district to make a fine showing in this department at the next session of the Conference.

The Aberdeen district reported more baptisms than any other in the Conference. While she is ahead in adult baptism, it is not so in infant baptisms. This may not be a good indication, and should serve to call our attention to the fact that our people neglect the baptism of their children.

As part and parcel of the Aberdeen district, I feel encouraged, and am resolved to unite with presiding elder, preachers and laymen, and the good women, to make this district, in every department, what it should be.

HESLEY.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. O. Black, Jackson, Miss.

"In looking over the Minutes of the late session of our Conference, I find an error in the statistical report of First Church, Jackson. We are credited with $35 paid for church extension, whereas the amount paid was $55—our full assessment."

"The Parson" of Rose Hill, Miss., discourses thusly: "It was Thursday night in the itinerant's home. The 'parson,' seated by a small table under the glow of a pale lamp, was getting from the Bread of Life food for his congregation on Sunday. 'The busy housewife' had ceased to ply her evening care, and had seated herself near the 'parson,' softly humming. In some way or other the Lord will provide. A cheerful fire burning on the hearth was gently 'popping' snow, while all the air a solemn stillness held. The creaking of the yard-gate breaks the silence; the steady tramp of marshalled forces hursts upon the ear; the door flies wide, and in they come with baskets and buckets, boxes and bundles, bags and bottles, until the pantry groaned with its burden. Such was the scene to be witnessed at Rose Hill parsonage, Jan. 28, 1892."

Rev. J. R. Robertson, Sallis, Miss., Feb. 1: "Our new presiding elder, Bro. Burroughs, came over to Newport circuit on Jan. 28, and spent four days with my people, renewing acquaintances and making new friends. He served this work three years in succession several years since, and the people were delighted to have him visit them again. His presence was a delight, and his preaching a benediction to our people. How refreshing to have an humble, meek, unostentatious presiding elder, who delights in consulting with the preacher and people in reference to the best methods of accomplishing the Master's work! He is perfectly free from all affectation or boresness, nor does he seem to think it is his God-given privilege to 'lord it over God's heritage.' We had a delightful quarterly meeting on Jan. 30. Newport is, up to date, ahead of any former year; and I am determined, by the help of the Lord, she shall still be ahead of any former record at the end of the year."

Rev. W. Wimberly, Guthrie, Oklahoma, Feb. 2: "Our first Quarterly Conference was held yesterday, with Presiding Elder Worley in the chair. He preached Sunday evening one of the most unique sermons I ever heard. His text was, 'What is truth?' and it was handled in a masterly manner. The basement of the church was crowded—many standing. The attention was perfect. The Holy Ghost came upon us. We rejoiced together in Christ Jesus. I was greatly encouraged when I found my presiding elder to be an experienced, eloquent preacher, and a man full of the Holy Ghost. Oh, how we need our church finished! If we could complete it in sixty days, our church would come to the front at once, and in six months be far in the lead. Help us, brethren; help us now. One of Bro. Beard's members has sent a small contribution. It reached me the same day the Advocate did in which my letter was published. I am doing what I can here; but our people have contributed about all they can at this time. We must complete the church at once, if possible. Let those who read this make it possible. Send money to me at Guthrie, O. T."

Rev. H. Armstrong, Lafayette, La., Jan. 30: "Well, sir, since we saw you in your sanctuary, we have gone to keeping house in Lafayette. It is cheaper, so considered, for a small family to keep house than to board; but, as 'Gilderoy' intimates in a recent letter to the Arkansas Methodist, it is a troublesome business. In the first place, one usually finds, or we do, the parsonage premises out of repair, and repairing is both troublesome and expensive. Then, after things are passably straight, there is no end to wood-cutting, fire-making, water-drawing, and errand-golog. These things must be done by somebody, and yet, with all these chores, the poor itinerant must visit his people, and have something to say from his pulpit on Sunday. But our condition might be a hundred times worse. We are not like Paul, living in our own hired house; but we are in a furnished one, free of hire. In addition, we are getting a living. Our temporal wants are provided for; but the best part has not been told. We have the sympathy, prayers, and the co-operation of our people. We are not called on by the good sisters alone, as we usually are, but the brethren call to see if we are 'lacking anything.' Many thanks to Bros. White and Miller, the Bishop, and especially to the good Lord, for our pleasant appointment. God bless you!"

Rev. J. W. Malone, Coldwater, Miss., Jan. 26: "Nothing, I believe, has been written you from this end of the 'vineyard' since the session of our Conference at Macon. The Sardis district, one of the best and most compact in the North Mississippi Conference, is composed of fifteen pastoral charges, about one-half of which have been visited to date by the new presiding elder, Rev. H. C. Morehead. Bro. Morehead is taking hold of the work heartily and readily, and is making a fine impression upon both pastors and people. As a boy preacher, he began his ministry some twenty years ago in this district, under the tuition and guardianship of Uncle Jo. Brooks. With such training he entered the work as one from the school of the prophets, and from then until now he has shown himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, filling, with great satisfaction to the people, some of our best appointments. His preaching is earnest, clear, thoughtful, strong; and, as a man of affairs, the peer of any in our Conference. His appointment to the district is a wise and happy one. No charge or preacher will suffer under the painstaking care, counsel and direction of this new sub-bishop. This district was less disturbed at the last appointing-time than, perhaps, any other in the Conference; yet we have R. O. Brown, E. Johnson, C. W. Perkins, T. W. Dye, and W. W. Williams—five new men in the district. These are men good and true. All of them, with the exception of Bro. Dye, are in this section of the State for the first time. Every pastor, whether new or old, has been heartily received. The new year promises well. The old rule that usually obtains in times of financial depression, 'Retrenchment first in the house of God,' has so far miscarried. Every charge that has up to date made an assessment for the pastor's support, has stood by the figures of last year. Not one has even made a motion for reduction; and one, Sardis station—J. Richey, pastor—has made an advance of fifty dollars. The district-stewards' meeting, though the attendance was small in consequence of the sleet and cold, was one of unusual harmony and satisfaction. Rev. Eugene Johnson comes into this section for the first time. He served the Houston and Wesley station for four years, and has just closed a four years' term at Verona. I had the pleasure of being at his first Quarterly Conference at Senatobia. The reports evinced a gratifying and auspicious beginning. T. Cameron is back for the fourth year at Batesville and Wesley. As is his wont, he is moving off steadily and well, and will, no doubt, round up his term with credit to himself and much profit to his people. J. Richey is also serving his fourth and last year at Sardis and Davis Chapel. Sardis has been, for years one of our best stations, and, under the able pastorate of Bro. Richey, it continues to be. His last year there promises to be his best. Rev. R. O. Brown, of the Courtland circuit, has a parsonage enterprise on hand. The parsonage for the work, located at Pope's Station, has been sold, and the proceeds, with cash and subscription to supplement it, will be put into a better building at Courtland. With a good parsonage well located, this circuit will be one of our best. My own charge, Coldwater and Hernando, promises well for the new year. Much of the time since Conference the weather has been such as to preclude the possibility of much pastoral visiting. With few exceptions, however, we have held all of our regular services. Our first quarterly meeting, held Jan. 23, 24, was extremely pleasant, and of unusual interest. The year just closed was a good one, and we confidently expect 1892 to be better still. Now for a revival that will sweep every heart and home."

Rev. Thomas B. Clifford, P. C., Arcola and Hollandale, Feb. 1: "This is my first letter to the Advocate; but, if God spares my life, I hope to write many times in the future. Some of my people who subscribe for the paper have asked why the preachers do not send more tidings from the field than they do. Mr. Editor, this question has often suggested itself to me. I love to read the letters from the brethren telling of their successes. It always acts as an inspiration to me; and if I am not doing as well as they appear to be, I praise God that he has thus prospered them, and I take fresh courage and go forward. I heard some one say last year that it looked egotistical to write of 'one's self' and 'my work.' In answer to that remark, I would simply say, 'Honi soit qui mal y pense.' It is God's work, and let us talk and write about it. This is a double station. Both towns are situated on the bank of Deer Creek, in Washington county, and are on the main line of the L. N. O. and T. R. R., and also branch line of the Georgia Pacific railroad. The church-building at Hollandale, and which has been erected during the past three years, is one of the finest in the Delta, both in point of size and architectural design, and would not look out of place in a city. We have visited about forty homes since Conference, and would have done better than this, but weather has prevented. During the past week we have organized a juvenile missionary society, with thirty-five enrolled members, and more to follow; also a Woman's Missionary Society. Sister Clifford is superintending this branch of the work, and we are praying for and expecting great results along these lines. Oh, that God would revive religion in the hearts of these kind and hospitable people during this year! His arm is not shortened, nor his ear deafened. Oh, for a pentecostal shower! I want to say, Amen! to the closing sentences contained in Bro. L. M. Lipscomb's letter in your last issue. I send you two subscribers to the Advocate; hope to send more later. Glad to note the appointment of Bro. Robert Harry, of the Louisiana Conference, in connection with Centenary College. He is a fellow-countryman and warm personal friend of the writer."

What does the thoughtful preacher think of this, from over the water?

It is sometimes said that facility of expression can only spring from the pre-arrangement of words in the memory. It is not so. Facility of expression comes from the character of the thought that is full of a truth will have a happier utterance than he who is full of words. Sentences ought to be the offspring of thought, not the playthings of a pen, or the dressed-up dolls of a would-be master of marionettes. Indeed, the thought that springs spontaneous in the mind will always make the tongue its humble and obedient servant, but not always the pen.—Free Methodist.

My First Appointment.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTELL, D.D.

The announcement of the death of Rev. C. D. Oliver, of the North Alabama Conference, at Calera, Ala., a few days ago, that reaches me in the Nashville Christian Advocate, has served to awaken in me feelings of profoundest tenderness. Memories of the first year of my itinerant life gather upon me, and there is an experience of a retouching, as it were, vivification unto a re-realization of what, at the opening of my ministerial career, was a baptism from out the ultimate springs of refreshment. I was assigned by Bishop Capers to Montgomery as junior preacher with C. D. Oliver. The negroes who had been served at three o'clock of Sunday afternoon in the "white folks' church," were relegated to a church exclusively for them, and it was arranged for the junior preacher to occupy the pulpit of the white church once a month, and every other Sunday minister to the negroes. His first sermon to the whites (the third he ever preached) was occasion of flattering comments and prophecies. Then came the second deliverance. The text was, "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." In treatment of the theme, I suggested that, in order to fraternize and liberalize the citizenship of the State, it would be a wise policy for the children of all the sects of religion to be associated in the same schools, forming their friendships for life in a natural, unrestrained manner of course. In order to this, I suggested the State should project the wisest educational system for all her children, effectively consummating the enterprise through unstinted appropriation of money in securing of the most approved teachers. I had just graduated in a State institution in Charleston, S. C., and was all aglow with what the author of "Eccle Homo" terms "the enthusiasm of humanity." I had an ideal of citizen solidarity, and of a genius of aggressive, progressive civilization that would effectually, through educational agencies, lift society forward into a more compact, organic membership of her children, securing whatever special benefits the several organic developments called church might yield in the make-up of a unity heightened all the more through the varieties. Some criticisms in the sermon of the tendency to narrow and to flush with passion or lust for merely sectarian propaganda, were with emphasis, in ingenuousness of supposition that the whole range of speculation was free to such as, in pulpit or elsewhere, chose to speak tentatively in respect of the questions at issue. I hadn't the remotest suspicion I had contravened ought to which I was committed by being appointed to preach. Alas! Joseph, it was thought, would do less harm to confine his ministrations chiefly, if not wholly, to the negroes. And so the year passed without his again appearing before the congregation of whites in Montgomery, Ala. His opportunity to hear the senior every Sunday, morning and night, was duly improved. Services at the negro church only in afternoons.

But the junior brother was somewhat in requisition in neighboring towns, Wetumpka and Benton particularly. At Benton, Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, then stationed at Selma, would have the young preacher to alternate with him through a two weeks' siege. Think of it! A mere beginner to take it time about with one of the most gifted and experienced of the pulpit of the land! The gratefulness I've carried through all the years for the consideration and courtesy shown me, in a manner void of all patronage, by that most admirable gentleman, has served to soften and assure.

Dr. Oliver was acceptable at any point in the Conference. He served at Demopolis, Tuskegee, Montgomery and Mobile; and his congregations never ran down at either point. There was no malevolence in his nature. Mrs. Oliver was a woman of more than ordinary intellect, and every memory of her is pleasant. The little boys, her three sons, were of special interest and refreshment to me.

It is a great temptation to me to elaborate reminiscences of the opening years of an itinerant life that I entered upon (from Tuskegee, Ala., where I had hurried my wife just one week before the session of the Alabama Conference) at Marion in the Fall of 1852: Walter C. Harris, F. M. Grace, Jas. A. Peebles, Patton, Bolton, Cox, Mark S. Andrews, and enough others to make up a class of thirty-four or thirty-five, joined at that Conference. Friendships form themselves; and, in forming themselves, they form us. Inspiration of confidence and admiration that leads another to be wrought with our conscious being, as of sap and substance thereof—what is of greater wealth?—greater enrichment? Of course, I do not hint a limitation of friendship to these of my own class—Wm. M. Motley, Shores, Angus Dowling, W. L. Norton, Ben Selman, Ethelbert Smith. These, with A. J. Briggs, L. M. Wilson and Frank Brandon, have been carried along, with others, in most grateful regard, sustaining the springs of life as I've meditated their worth. It is neither exaggeration or affectation when I say the name and memory of each of these is a charm. A. J. Parker, too; to omit his name were a wrong to one of my most fervent friendships.

F. M. Grace and I correspond. Bishop McVeyre and I used to discuss him. I was associated with him intimately; was his pastor at Tuscaloosa; had opportunities of studying him under most trying circumstances; and I now write it in deliberation: Take him all in all, he is the most admirably touched and tempered, and the most finely drawn character I have ever been associated with among men. As Bishop McVeyre remarked in nearly the last interview I had with him: "His style of writing is Addisonian." I deemed it a compliment to Addison. Grace is one of the exceptionally few I've known, who, in honor, prefer others. I am fully aware of the unseemliness of gush and effusiveness in our expressions of personal regards in the papers; but I have had a fall on the ice that came near passing me over to the majority, and lest another such should finish up the work, I have ventured, in this, to dip my pen into my heart and write with as little refrain as if I were talking to Motley, at Judge Pullum's, or Dick Powell's, or Thredgill's, in Union Springs, as in '66 and '67. The cream of life is the love it yields; and what luxury above that of contemplating men in the clear depths of our souls—the image of them—like seeing fishes in Silver Spring, Fla!

Corley's Lives of the Apostles.

Having been called upon to examine (with a view to handling it) the above-named book, I take this opportunity of paying it my respects, as I shall certainly leave to others the task of selling it.

The writer manifests decided ability as a third-rate pettifogger in a country justice's court. Symptoms also crop out characteristic of a one-horse preacher of rather novel theological views. This mixture, backed up by a fair amount of egotism and a small smattering of information, has enabled him to get out a book. And such a book!

I shall make a few extracts from its pages. From the Introductory: "I deeply regret that so important a part of the very foundation of our plan of salvation as the lives of its authors has been so long neglected, that there is now but little known of them." That the lives of the apostles constitute an important part of the very foundation of our plan of salvation, is certainly a piece of information reserved to be discovered in these last days by one D. B. Corley, of Texas. Again: "The Virgin Mary, who was the daughter of Joachim and Anna." Ex cathedra! That settles it! We know now who was the father and mother of Mary! And thus is history made!

Again: "Numerous traditional histories describe his (Jesus') birth in divers ways. But our best scholars are inclined to regard them as spurious productions. It may be that some one of them is correct. I have selected that one which I consider the most likely to be correct, and here submit it to you. My reason for placing more confidence in it than any other is a two-fold one. First, because it was accepted as the truth for the first three hundred and twenty-five years after it happened by those people who knew more about it than anybody else." Accepted as truth for three hundred and twenty-five years! Indeed! This is certainly news to students. And it is asserted with a positiveness and an air of authority that seems intended to carry conviction to young and ignorant minds. I continue the extract—

"Second, it sounds like persons would have talked under the circumstances. It is common sense." He seems to know common sense when he sees it!

Then follow several chapters from the old silly apocryphal gospels, known by every scholar to be utterly void of truth, and too indecent and vulgar to be read in the family circle, and too silly for even the amusement of children, and in which the Virgin Mary is made to swear to a lie in the first chapter given in the book. And this he calls sense!

The lives of the apostles that follow are largely made up of traditions that learned scholars have generally agreed are unworthy of credence. And yet these things are told with an assumption calculated to convince the young or immature reader that they are well-established truths. Of this character are the statements about Mrs. Procla Pilate, and others as to the parents, relatives, etc., of the apostles.

I give one (of several) examples of the specious pettifogger. Trying to clear Peter from the charge of lying, he says: "Take the instance in John xviii, 25, where they ask him this direct question: 'Art thou also one of his disciples?' He denied, and said, 'I am not.' Now we all know that Peter was a disciple of John the Baptist and an apostle of Jesus Christ. It might have been his idea, as it is mine, that he could not be a disciple of both. If this was his idea, as I maintain that it most likely was, then he did not tell a lie by saying, 'I am not.' How is that for a plea? Then follows:

"Again, take his statement in Matthew xxvi, 74, 'I know not the man.' Might it not be that Peter meant by this that it was impossible for him, a poor, weak man, to comprehend the deity of the man sullenly to say that he did know him? In fact, could he truly say that he did know him? There is a broad difference between knowing a man and being acquainted with him."

Could Jesuitical casuistry go farther than that? As an instance of silly and uncalled-for effort to belittle the reverence and sorrow of the worshippers of our Lord when witnessing or considering his crucifixion, it seems to me the following will do: "We often hear a great deal said about the Virgin Mary and the deep sting of her sorrow and grief as she stood and gazed upon her Son writhing upon the cross; but to me and my mind it was not so sad a scene as this of poor Marianne," (on witnessing the death of her brother).

Of this book it may well be said, "The new things in it are not true things; the true things are not new things." The original part is silly, and, on the whole, the book is calculated to do little or no good and considerable harm. It has no literary or historic value, and may well be classed with the trashy and pernicious of its kind. But I am told that one hundred itinerant preachers, in one Annual Conference each took a copy. I was not told how many members of the same Conference failed to subscribe for it. I have mingled freely with my itinerant brethren in several Conferences, and have decided that each Conference has some sensible men in it. I am glad to believe that this was the case with the one under consideration.

Warning from a Local Preacher.

MR. EDITOR: As it has been a long time since I contributed to your columns, and since which there has been a great change in my environments, perhaps a few words from me will not be amiss.

At the session of our Annual Conference at Jackson, Miss., December, 1890, owing to the ill health of my wife, I felt, at the time, that I should locate, in order to provide for my helpless family. Accordingly, at my own request, a location was granted. Afterwards I cast our lot among the people I last served; purchased a piece of land, and began to improve it for our use. We are situated in the community known as "Woodland," Amite circuit, Mississippi Conference. Here we find about all that can be desired to make one healthy and happy. The country is high and dry; not too rolling, but sufficient to drain the land of all surplus water. It abounds in the long leaf yellow pine, so valuable for lumber; white oak, beech, some few magnolias, hickory, dogwood, and other varieties which indicate a lively soil. We have the purest of water, and in abundant quantities for man and beast, in the form of rivers, creeks, rivulets, springs and wells. Our land will grow any kind of crop known to Southern farmers. In former years wheat was grown in this climate.

Woodland is situated seven miles east of Gloster, Miss., on the upper Gloster and Liberty dirt road. We have here a Methodist Church; a large and flourishing school, ten months in the year, under the able management of Pres. R. T. Zeard, who is also a citizen of this place; a saw and planing mill of sufficient capacity to furnish all the lumber of every description needed for the surrounding country; and, better still, the best people, in many respects, I have seen my good fortune to be acquainted with. Several years ago the citizens of this county arose, put their votes on the neck of the monster whiskey traffic, and banished it from the county; so we have a sober people. Several years ago Rev. W. W. Simmons was called to assist in a revival meeting at this place, and was successful. In God's hand, of the conversion of many people, which grand work has been continued from time to time by various preachers and godly laymen laboring here. So we have a religious community. Baptists, both Primitive and Missionary, and Presbyterians as well as Methodists are represented at or near Woodland, and to my certain knowledge for the last two years universal peace, harmony and good-will have prevailed among us. No unchristian criticisms, uncalled-for epithets, and the like, have gone forth from any of these pulpits or pews, which to me is simply marvelous. Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists all worshipping in the respective churches together, and a stranger could not tell which is which. So we have a peaceable neighborhood. In these and other respects this people are in advance of any neighborhood within my acquaintance.

Under these circumstances, it does seem that anyone could be religious and enjoy the life which God has been pleased to give. But to one called of God to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, these environments are lost. If I know my own heart's desire, it is to obey God. How pleasant it is to do his will! But, alas! how hard to suffer his will. I had rather be a humble minister of Christ in charge of a work than to have all the temporal wealth and honor of this world. If my short experience could be of any avail to any itinerant preacher, I would say "be content" where you are. To locate to better your financial circumstances, will not make the lines more pleasant to you, but will bring with it corresponding cares and spiritual unrest, which will more than counterbalance the comforts of home life. "Be not weary in well doing, for ye shall reap if ye relax not."

Bewelcome, Miss.

Arbor Day at Topisaw Camp Ground.

In olden times men were accounted mighty as they lifted up axes against the thick trees; and they continued to lift them up until the forests were destroyed and the Holy Land became a desert.

In some parts of the Orient it is now considered an act of piety to plant a tree of whose fruit others may eat, and under whose shade the stranger may repose.

No doubt, as the wise man saith, there is a time to plant and a time to pluck up. Howbeit, our people, young and old, turned out at the camp ground, last Saturday, not to out down the groves that are already there, but to add to the goodly company. Trees were set out and named for the sainted dead, for relatives and friends, and for many worthy and illustrious of our Zion, from our beloved Bishop down to this or that rider. The boys named their trees first, each for his bright particular; but their names were known to their true hearts alone. Nevertheless, the secret was discovered by guile. The grave and wily belignors afterwards planted trees for their daughters; and as each tree was named for a particular girl, whoever had named a tree for her was obliged to confess it, whereby the hearts of the young men were as an open page before their elders.

I think people should plant out trees more than they do. Every country church should have its grove, and I hardly think a judicious effect of light and shade would interfere with the ecclesiastical architecture of cities. Perhaps some of them would be none the worse for a gentle obscuration. With a little disinterested care every preacher might literally dwell under his own vine and fig tree, and every parsonage might present, at least, an external air of quiet and repose. All visible, natural things are so many shadows of the unseen, eternal. A tree is not all wood—the wood is merely the body from which a beautiful soul looks out; therefore, plant out trees.

J. HERBERT WOODWARD.

Geology and the Bible.

Geology or the Bible is in error with regard to the creation of the world. The science of geology teaches that the world was not created in six literal days, but that each day represented a long period of time (it may be a thousand years or more); hence that the six days in Genesis represent six periods of long duration. The Bible teaches that in six literal days God created the heavens and the earth, and all that in them is; or else the sacred historian intentionally, or otherwise, used unintelligible language. So one or the other theory is evidently wrong; and I shall believe, until convinced to the contrary, that the Bible teaches the six literal day theory—geology, with its advocates, and infidelity to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, if I am wrong, I would be glad to be set right, as I am an earnest seeker after the truth; but if I am right, then some one else is wrong, and hence ought to give up their theory or the Bible. A man ought not to go about with the Bible in his hand preaching and teaching that it is God's Word, and written by inspired men, and then contradict it, or say that it does not mean what it says, when the language is so plain and unmistakable. And I believe that the man who does will be a failure, so far as winning souls to Christ is concerned, and will be an instrument in the hands of Satan and infidelity in overturning the truth of God's Word, impeding the progress of the church of Christ, and endangering the salvation of souls.

Now, a man may be ever so learned, and may preach ever so eloquently, and draw and hold audiences for years, and yet I do not believe that his ministry will be honored of God in the conversion of souls or advancing the spir-itualty of the church. "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." "And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life," etc. (Rev. xxii, 18, 19.)

Now, I would like for some of the advocates of the geological or evolution theory to rise up and explain, tell us how long the periods were, and why they think they were more than twenty-four hours. If they will, the common people like myself will hear them gladly. If I am wrong, doubtless a large majority of the people are wrong, as I believe a large majority of the people believe in the six literal day theory; so it would be a great kindness for some competent one to show up the true theory. A. D. MILLER.

Barlow, Miss., Jan. 22, 1892.

"Evangelism."

Under the above head, Bro. Enoch has given us an article which, it is to be hoped, will set many to studying the subject. In Smith's Bible Dictionary I find that the term "evangelist" signifies "publisher of glad tidings," and that "in the New Testament the evangelists appear after 'apostles' and 'prophets,' and before 'pastors' and 'teachers' (Acts xxi, 8; Eph. iv, 11), and their work was the proclamation of the glad tidings rather than the pastoral care of those who had believed and been baptized; and that the name corresponded to our term 'missionary.'" Certainly, every Christian will welcome such as these, and cry, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" But if devout, earnest followers of our Lord Jesus Christ find something to object to in the methods and "fruits" of the so-called evangelists of to-day, shall they be deemed as enemies of the cross of Christ? If they are pained by a want of purity of language in the pulpit; by theatrical strainings after effect; by Sabbath desecration in the running of trains, driving of hacks, and selling of tickets at camp ground on Sunday; by the general tone of levity which too often characterizes these meetings; by the selling and using of song books in defiance of the Methodist Discipline, which requires "the use of our own hymn and tune book in all our congregations;" by the reproach often brought that these men are preaching for money, and often make more in one week than some hard working pastors receive in a year—if, I say, some of God's people are grieved at these things, does it not behoove the church to inquire into them? "But," some will say; "what is the remedy?" It seems simple enough to the writer. Let us borrow an idea from the Presbyterian Synod of Mississippi, which keeps five evangelists at work in the borders of this State, all paid from a fund subscribed by the churches for that purpose. Let our evangelists be regularly commissioned by the Conference or Conferences, or by the General Conference; let them be paid a stated salary like other missionaries, and let them be subject to the authority of the appointing Conference and to the Discipline of the church. This will do away with the reproach under which they now labor: that of using the Methodist Church for their own aggrandizement, while defying its authority and violating its discipline. FANNIE M. MONTGOMERY.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Feb. 14, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LAPRADE.

Jeremiah xxxi, 27-37.

TIME.—B. C. 600. PLACE.—Jerusalem.

Bengel says: "A lesser and a greater event, of different times, may answer to the single sense of one passage of Scripture, until the prophecy is exhausted."

Evidently Jeremiah, throughout this chapter, refers both to the restoration from Babylon and to the spiritual restoration through the coming Messiah. In verse fifteen reference is made to Ramah, where Rachel was buried, and in which she is represented as weeping at the scattering of her children (the Ephraimites), whom Nehzarsadan collected, with the other Jews, and carried in chains to Babylon. Matthew quotes this in connection with his account of the massacre of the babes by Herod, thus connecting the prophecy with the coming of Christ. So in the lesson for to-day the repositing of the wasted country of the Jews, accomplished by deliverance from Babylon (vers. 27, 28), and by such rapid increase as is indicated by the words, "I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man and with the seed of beast," prefigure the greater deliverance and upbuilding under the Christian dispensation. The faithfulness of God in chastising his sin is made the measure and pledge of his care for their coming prosperity (ver. 28), and so also for the establishment of the spiritual kingdom of the Son.

A proverb had arisen, probably among the children born in exile. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge," expressing not only trouble, but complaint of wrong. (See Lam. v, 1.) This proverb, the prophet affirms, shall no more be used. Personal responsibility is, always has been, will ever be, the basis of rewards and punishment. All suffering is not punishment. (Read Ezek. xviii, 2-5, and Gal. vi, 3, 7.) No one was ever punished for the sins of another; many have suffered because of them.

Vers. 31, 32. We are to understand that the attitude of God toward his holiness, toward repentance and grace, has never changed. The Jews had broken the former covenant with God, which was, in effect, on their past obedience to his revealed will, on his past protection from their enemies, and their general prosperity. The new covenant involved the same principle; but the law, by the work of Christ, should be written in their hearts. The Spirit's law of "life is Christ Jesus" should control; the knowledge of God should become universal; his mercy should be made manifest; obedience through love would be seen to be better than obedience through fear.

Vers. 35, 36, 37. God here makes the continuance of the laws of nature through his power and wisdom constantly put forth, the pledge of his faithfulness to the covenant. The continuance of Israel as a nation rested upon fidelity to the covenant. Not the destruction of racial peculiarities, but of national existence. The continuance of them as a distinct body was clearly implied.

Israel did depart from God; he longer has distinct nationality; but, in a wonderful manner, through centuries of persecution and amid all changes of habitation and conditions of life, he preserved as a separate people. All the "seed of Israel" have not been "cast out." In the Jews of to-day the prophecy is fulfilled. St. Paul (Rom. xi, 1, 2) shows that while, as a nation, they were cast away, a "remnant," according to the "election of grace," remained—that is, by the provision that "by grace through faith" all who accepted Christ were saved. And he argues further that "all Israel shall be saved" (see Rom. xi, 26)—that is, the Jews, not in their national, but in their individual relation, are included in the plan of redemption through Christ, and will finally, as do the Gentiles, accept Christ as the Messiah.

The leading thoughts of the lesson are:

First. God's faithfulness to those who are true to him.

Second. His provision for our spiritual enlightenment.

Third. His great mercy and pitying patience.

Fourth. That obedience on our part is the condition of continuance in his favor.

If you are building a church and want a little help, the publisher says, if you will procure five new cash subscribers at the regular rates, you may put the ten dollars on your church-building account. Perhaps a good many will subscribe under these conditions, seeing that the money does good in two ways. Try it and see how it will work. Of course, this only applies to pastors and churches in the bounds of our three Conferences!

Bro. Carradine has our thanks for a copy of his little book, "Church Entertainments: Twenty Objections." It is gotten up in good form and published by A. W. Hall, Syracuse, N. Y. We have always thought that on this subject Bro. Carradine was very sound. We have never read an argument in favor of church entertainments to raise money for church purposes that had any soundness in it. If a church is necessitated to resort to such methods to raise money to perpetuate its existence, then it has no good reason for existing. If you have any doubts, get this book and read it and your doubts will be dissipated.

The Standard says:

A hymn, too, is often more than a sermon. It should never be imagined that singing is just for the sake of variety in the service. Gospel song may be the very best kind of gospel testimony; the heart's closed door may open to the singer where it was fast shut, locked and bolted against the preacher.

So, "brother, if you can't 'preach much,' learn how to sing! How wonderful sometimes was the effect of a song from the pulpit in the days of our fathers. We have seen it save many a sermon and sweep everything before its resistless tide of victory! Learn to sing with 'the spirit and with the understanding,' and your preaching will rarely fail.

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association, of this city, was held last week. There was a large crowd of ladies and gentlemen present. The meeting was opened with religious services conducted by Dr. Markham, of the Presbyterian Church. S. S. Prentiss, the president of the Association, presented his address, which was an interesting history of the organization from its inception to the present time. The Committee on Membership reported 375 members, divided as follows: Active, 168; associate, 47; active and sustaining, 25; subscribers, 135. New members elected—active, 46; associate, 46; total, 92. Managers and trustees were elected for the coming year. Good work in various ways has been done, but the Association finds itself limited in its operations by lack of means.

Anent the Revenue Amendment.

Last week Mr. Morris, the lottery chief, published in his organs this document:

New Orleans, Feb. 3, 1892.

To the People of the State of Louisiana:

In the Spring of 1888 I was, at different times, approached by a number of prominent Democrats of Louisiana, who urged upon me the propriety, in the interest of the finances of the State, of submitting to the Legislature a proposition for a constitutional amendment, which would grant me and my associates a lottery privilege for twenty-five years in consideration of a license sufficiently high to be of material assistance to the State. It was urged upon me by these gentlemen that my associates and I should be willing to give to the people of Louisiana an opportunity of obtaining, proportionately, as great a material benefit from the proposed charter as the holders of the existing charter have obtained from the current one.

I was assured, moreover, that the proposition would meet with little, if any, opposition under such conditions; for the opposition to the present charter was said to be based mainly upon the fact that the amount of license paid was entirely inadequate in the light of the needs of the people in the prevention of increased taxation, or to the reduction of present taxation by providing for charities, schools, levees, etc. These suggestions prompted me to announce to the people of the State of Louisiana that I would apply for such a charter, and would give the sum of $500,000 per annum as a license tax. Until I had announced that I would make such a proposition to the State, there had been no opposition manifested toward the continued existence of a lottery in Louisiana.

After I had publicly submitted my offer to the people, and had committed myself to its terms, to my surprise some of the prominent men who had approached me on this subject, and who had urged me to make such a proposition, became opponents of the project, and aided in organizing public hostility against it.

At the solicitation of a number of gentlemen who still favored the proposition, and whose property had suffered from overflows of the Mississippi river, I increased the amount that I had originally offered to pay as a license tax for the privilege of a new charter to $1,000,000. This latter amount was increased still further by the Legislature to $1,250,000 per annum, and in this condition the amendment was ordered to be submitted to the people by the requisite two-thirds votes of each branch of the Legislature.

Then began a crusade on the part of those opposed to the proposition; inside and outside of the State, for the purpose of preventing the adoption of the revenue amendment, and of making the management of a lottery as objectionable to the people of the United States as possible. The fact that $1,250,000 per annum license tax, which was to be paid to the State of Louisiana, would be derived from a business which would countries, brought about the enactment by Congress of what is now commonly known as the "Anti-Lottery Postal Law." It was charged at all times that it was my object to have the revenue amendment passed by negro votes against the wishes and desires of a majority of the white people of the State of Louisiana; yet, on all occasions, I had strongly urged that the amendment should be submitted to the white people at a primary election, so that they could pass upon the question whether they wanted the amendment adopted or not, as I had no desire to be connected with the proposition unless it received the approval of a decisive majority of the white people of the State of Louisiana.

After the passage by Congress of the Anti-Lottery Postal Law I was informed by a number of eminent and able attorneys, whom I consulted, that this law was a violation of the rights of the State and of the freedom of the press, and such would be, in their opinion, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Accordingly test cases on the question were made up and submitted to that court for determination. From the institution of the test cases until now the opposition to the revenue amendment has intensified in its bitterness.

Realizing thoroughly, my associates and I, that we have been incorrect in our opinion of public sentiment on this question of a new charter, and not desiring to see the people of the State of Louisiana involved in strife over this question, I hereby declare on my part, and on the part of my associates, that we would not accept or qualify under the amendment, even were it to be adopted by the people at the general election of April, 1892.

As the Supreme Court of the United States has decided the Anti-Lottery Postal Law to be constitutional, it is my purpose and that of my associates to respect that law and abstain from violating it in any manner.

Our offer was prompted as much by a desire to benefit the people of the State of Louisiana as by the prospect of profit to ourselves from the grant as a business proposition. My associates and I are closely identified with the interests of the people of Louisiana, as we own much property within the borders of the State.

Convinced that the granting of another lottery charter in the State would be the cause of continued agitation and discontent upon the part of a number of the citizens of Louisiana for the entire period for which such a charter might be granted, we would be unwilling to accept such a charter, even though it were given to us without the payment of one dollar of license tax.

JOHN A. MORRIS.

The lottery papers published this document under flaming headlines, and their editorials make the impression that the revenue amendment is withdrawn from the people by this letter of Mr. Morris. That is a wrong impression.

"WITHDRAWN! WITHDRAWN!"

pression, for neither Mr. Morris nor anybody else has the authority to withdraw the proposition that is now before the people to be voted on next April. Mr. Morris does not say that he withdraws his proposition. He says this:

I hereby declare upon my part, and on the part of my associates, that we would not accept or qualify under the amendment, even were it to be adopted by the people at the general election of April, 1892.

And he closes his letter with these words:

Convinced that the granting of another lottery charter in the State would be the cause of continued agitation and discontent upon the part of a number of the citizens of Louisiana for the entire period for which such a charter might be granted, we would be unwilling to accept such a charter, even though it were given to us without the payment of one dollar of license tax.

The proposition is before the people by an act of the Legislature, interpreted by the Supreme Court, and it will take something more than "displayed type" and "flaming headlines" and "letters to the people," no matter by whom written, to effect a "withdrawal" of that proposition. Mr. Morris may "withdraw" his support from that side of the question, but that does not affect the question at all. It still remains to be voted on by the people at the coming election.

There is one thing Mr. Morris does say, to which we call special attention. He says:

Realizing thoroughly, my associates and I, that we have been incorrect in our opinion of public sentiment on this question of a new charter, and not desiring to see the people of the State of Louisiana involved in strife over this question, I hereby declare, etc.

Here is a plain acknowledgment of defeat three months before election day! He gives it up because he "realizes" thoroughly that he has been incorrect in his opinion of public sentiment on this question! Seeing defeat staring him in the face, he exercises the wonderful magnanimity to say that he "will not accept or qualify under the amendment." But what do Mr. Morris' sayings on this point amount to? Didn't he once say that he would not ask for a re-charter of his company? Is not the present hub-bub in Louisiana the direct result of his violation of that promise? What gives him the right to expect that the people of Louisiana regard him as a sincere man in his sayings when he talks about his lottery? We are disposed to look upon Mr. Morris' letter simply as a ruse de guerre. Mr. Morris will convince the people of Louisiana of his sincerity only by withdrawing his candidates from the field!

The way some of the papers refer to this matter is really ridiculous. The staid old Picayune, in semi-lugubrious leader, lifts up its voice and wails mightily. Listen at this:

Louisiana must hereafter depend on her own resources for the maintenance of the great interests which the large revenue proposed by the amendment were intended to conserve.

Every decent man will agree with us when we say, a State that has not manhood and honesty enough to "depend on her own resources for the maintenance of her great interests," deserves to be kicked out of the brotherhood of States, and a paper that will publish such a pitiful whine ought to pray for grace enough to be ashamed of itself.

Listen to the Picayune's commendation of Mr. Morris' patriotism:

Mr. Morris has soted in a spirit of patriotism, which deserves commendation. He sees that a proposition, which he believed, and a majority of voters believed, would bring substantial benefits to the people of Louisiana, has been the means of precipitating them, through the ravings of fanatics, into turmoil and bitter contention, and, therefore, he withdraws it.

Mr. Morris' shrewdness to discover defeat and to try to avoid it is the "spirit of patriotism." Many such patriots there are in this land. After what has been done by this nefarious business in the way of corrupting political and social and home life for twenty-five years, it is an insult to all the people to talk about the "commendable patriotism" of the head sinner of the whole concern. There was no patriotism about it. Mr. Morris himself gives the reason for his action, and that reason is, his thorough realization that he was incorrect in his opinion of public sentiment on this question. The Supreme Court of the United States shut him up to Louisiana, and, having already drained her nigh unto death, he found his "occupation gone." No, Picayune, not patriotism, but barked covetousness! That's all!

Quoth the Picayune, "The mission of the Anti is ended!" Why, bless your simplicity, "lay not that flatteringunction to thy soul!" The "mission of the Anti" is just begun. Mr. Morris' letter is nothing to the Anti. It is as idle wind. They have nothing to do with it. They have marked out their course and will listen to no siren songs nor heed any offers of compromise on this great moral question. They have a duty to perform to themselves, to the State and to the whole country, and they intend to do it. To compromise now, when the general-in-chief on the other side publicly acknowledges defeat, is to show themselves unworthy of the cause in which they are engaged, and to commit an outrage upon the moral sentiment of the land, which has shown itself so plainly in their behalf. The Anti will be more active, more earnest, more vigorous, more enthusiastic in pushing the campaign that has been forced upon them, than ever before. No, no; "the mission of the Anti is not 'ended'" yet, and the Picayune had better turn over to that side before the "days of grace" are ended. After those days, there will be no place for repentance. There will be only the unavailing tears, as of one "who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

"The Perfecting of the Saints."

This phrase occurs in one of Paul's long sentences in the Epistle to the Ephesians. For a long time we puzzled sorely over this whole passage without getting any definite or clear idea of its real meaning. Naming the different offices or officers of the church, the common version makes the apostle say, they were given "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Our difficulty was in the words, "for the work of the ministry," being in that particular position in the sentence. It always seemed like a tautology, and we could not believe that an inspired writer could be guilty of saying more than was necessary. Finally we got hold of Dr. Whedon's Commentary and the matter was made plain, even to our dull understanding. Dr. Whedon translates the sentence thus: "He gave some to be apostles . . . in order to the perfecting of the saints for a work of service and for the building up the church." His note on this passage is: "This perfecting or fitting the saints is for two things: first, for a (not the) work of service (not an official ministry), so as to be a true working church in all temporal, benevolent and spiritual matters; and, second, for the building up the church, so that it be at once a strong edifice, and that edifice the body of Christ. The figures of architecture and of anatomy are blended." We find upon examination that this exegesis is substantially sustained by Jamieson's, Olshausen's and Lange's Commentaries on the passage.

It now seems to us a very clear and very beautiful and very forceful passage. According to this passage, the work of the ministry means something more than saving souls from sin. That is a most wonderful work indeed; but a ministry is not successful that ends with that work. Here is the point where its greatest failure. We have been so eager to carry the good news to perishing souls that we have paid too little attention to the "perfecting of the saints," that have been made by our preaching, "for a work of service and for building up the body of Christ." The consequence is, we find ourselves today a great body of Christians with a very small number of trained workers. The proportion of workers to the whole number of members is ridiculously small! And we are beginning to see and feel the evil results of this policy, especially in our cities. Our ministry has reached the condition of the farmer who has cleared more acres than he can cultivate. With a population rapidly increasing by natural law and immigration, and with the necessities of people rapidly growing in many directions, there is not one of our ministers who does not feel the need of men and women "perfected for a work of service and for building up the church." What we specially need now is to train our members for service. One of the comments referred to above is this: "The task of the official persons is the perfecting of the saints for ministration. The first link in the chain of congregational activity is the officers, the second is every Christian in healthy activity at his post, and thus the joyous upbuilding of the whole is advanced; which reacts on the ministers and individual members of the church. Thus it goes from above to below, from the ministers in immediate rapport with the Lord to the individuals, the church, the whole, and from individual to individual, and through them to the whole, and from this back again to the individuals. The lay element must be cultivated, set in motion, sustained, animated and guided." The work of our ministry, in the particular direction in which we have wrought, has been so successful in gathering members and adherents, and there has been so little training for service, that our church resembles more an undisciplined horde of raw recruits, than a trained army of veterans. And because of this we not only don't fight well, but we fail to achieve victory and not infrequently suffer defeat. So, brethren, train your members for service and for building up the church. According to Paul, this training is a part of the minister's work; and how can he neglect it and be blameless?

By Force of Arms.

In addition to the indignities which, in the course of twenty-five years, the Lottery Company has heaped upon the people of Louisiana, the last act is the crowning criminality of all. Having come to the conclusion that it will be defeated at the polls next April, if something extraordinary is not done, it has determined to carry that election by force of arms! There has been shipped to this city from New York several cases of Winchester rifles, consigned to the chairman of the Campaign Committee of the McEnergy faction. This chairman does not hesitate to say that these rifles are for use at the polls, and that other consignments will follow this! This surely manifests the animus of the Lottery Company and the McEnergy faction: No one can be in doubt any longer as to what is intended. It is simply this: "We will carry this election, if we have to shoot down everyone who opposes." Do the men of Louisiana need anything more to open their eyes to the purposes of this wicked faction and the corruption that is behind it? Will the men of Louisiana submit like whipped curs to such monstrous demonstrations as these? Will brave and honorable citizens who have the honor of the State on their hearts be cowed by such exhibitions of murderous intentions? After having, by earnest efforts, awakened the moral sentiment of the whole land against this concern and its supporters, will the heroic men of Louisiana quail before the threats of a sullen and defeated foe?

If they do, they will deserve to wear the badge of the lottery infamy forever. But we are clearly of the opinion that the Winchester, imported for the purpose of fastening the lottery upon the State, will make more votes for the Anti than anything else that could be done. So let every man stand in his place and do his duty and he will see visited upon this lottery and its supporters a retribution as dire as any ever recorded upon the pages of history.

NOTES.

"Many a public speaker cuts short his influence by failing to cul short his address."

"The universality of the grip seems to point to that Scripture which represents the seventh angel as pouring out his vial upon the air!"

Here is a sentence from W. T. Stead, which we commend to the thought and practice of every pastor: "You do not know the quantity of good that can be done by judicious wire-pulling; it is quite phenomenal." Try it among your members, brethren.

The model layman never hires on his part of the public services in God's house. He is always at his post, doing his own singing, speaking and praying himself, no matter how many pious singers there are in the choir, nor how gifted in prayer and eloquent of speech the pastor may be. And the churches of to-day need more model laymen.—Religious Telescope.

People ought never to cherish or even tolerate the habit of imitating evil of others. It is the sure evidence of a deceitful heart, for the proverb says: "Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil." By the way, reader, is it not about time that you were refreshing your memory about what is contained in the Book of Proverbs? Suppose you sit down next Sunday afternoon and give that book a going over!

Human wisdom can not devise any method by which the favor of the absentee element can be won to the church. The obligation resting upon every church is to strictly adhere to its divine charter, making no concessions whatever to the world, and earnestly employing itself in evangelistic efforts to seek and save the lost. The church which is pervaded by the missionary spirit will never have cause to complain of nothing to do, and will probably find, as a result of its efforts, that its enemy news are gradually filling up with people who want to hear the gospel. It is along this line that the solution of the absentee evil lies, for consistent, aggressive Christianity will make its influence felt among all classes.—Mid-Continent.

President Dutton, of Olin University, in the Western Christian Advocate writes in favor of three colored Bishops for the colored Conferences of the M. E. Church. In regard to a colored Bishop who would be universally acceptable in that church, he says:

The election of a colored Bishop who can represent the church anywhere is an interesting theory, and I am as willing as anyone to have it done; while the church is waiting for the modification of sentiment and the development of the full-orbed colored man who would be universally acceptable to fill this office, our shepherd-stocks will have been so shorn and scattered that his services will not be needed.

In the meantime the colored brethren won't wait for the "modification of sentiment," nor for the "development of the full-orbed colored man!"

How fruitful are the ways devised to "raise church funds!" We clip from Zion's Herald:

One day Rev. Mark Guy Pearce, a tramp through Cornwall, came to a little village in which a tea meeting was going on. Mr. Pearce entered the little chapel and joined in the service. He was in the most unbecoming of his part, but during the process of one or two of the "leaders" managing to recognize him, and said in an anxious whisper: "Be you the Rev. Mark Guy Pearce?" "Yes, I am," answered. "I thought as how you was. Now, do you see, we want to raise a little money, and a thought have struck us. Now, do you see, we want to put 'ee in a vestry and we will go into the church and say: 'The Rev. Mark Guy Pearce, author of Daniel Quorn, is in the church and can be seen at threepence each the proceeds to go for the good of the cause!'"

Notes from the Assistant Editor.

Rev. W. M. Stevens, of South Warren, gave us a delightful visit a few days ago. This is Bro. Stevens' third year on that work. He reports everything in a good condition.

Our office in Jackson, Miss., now being in good working order, we have invited our brethren and not only invite our brethren to visit us in person, but when this is impracticable, let us hear from you, through the mails.

Rev. J. S. Oakley, of Columbus, has our thanks for a copy of the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference, which was held in Macon, Dec. 27, 1891. Bro. Oakley has served as secretary of that body for a number of years. We take this opportunity of returning thanks also to Bro. R. G. Porter, of Pickens, for a similar favor.

In the last three or four years our work at Ulica has grown from a circuit of five appointments, paying for ministerial support $450, to one station (Ulica), paying to the pastor $750, while the four remaining churches raise for the same purpose $550. The membership has increased in like manner, while churches have been built and improved.

While visiting one of our subscribers in Pickens, a few days ago, we were made to feel the great importance of personal contact with them; for as we left the house, our hand was given a hearty grasp, with the remark, "I feel drawn nearer the ADVOCATE because of this visit than ever before." Such words of appreciation make us feel that the efforts we are putting forth to make our paper a household necessity are not in vain.

From the Minutes of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, just out, we glean the following facts, which will be of interest to many of our readers:

In the two Conferences we have 343 local preachers, 79,273 members, giving us a total membership of 79,615. There was raised last year for ministerial support, $143,217.83; for missions (foreign and domestic) $17,674.50, and for all purposes, including the above, $266,504.17.

While on a brief visit to Vicksburg, last week, we were glad to see the lumber on the ground for the North-east Vicksburg Church. The outlook at this point is as promising as was that of any of our second churches. A room has been rented, and weekly services are being held in still another part of the city. This last is the third mission which has been projected by the Crawford Street Church within the last few years. The parent church has not swarmed either; it has simply gone out and occupied the waste places.

When the Times-Democrat reached Jackson, on last Thursday evening, the fourth instant, and the letter of John A. Morris was read, in which he announced his withdrawal from the lottery contest now waging in Louisiana, stating, "I hereby declare on my part, and on the part of my associates, that we would not accept or qualify under the amendment even were it adopted by the people at the general election of April, 1892," a resolution was offered in the House of Representatives congratulating our sister State on her prospective riddance of that foul blot which has tarnished her fair name for so long a time. The resolution was unanimously adopted by a rising vote, amid great applause, both on the floor of the House and in the galleries.

In speaking to one of the brethren, a few days ago, about some ADVOCATE subscriptions, now due, within the bounds of his charge, he replied, "Don't give yourself any concern about them, for I propose, as soon as I get better acquainted, to take as much time as is necessary and make a house-to-house canvass, putting the ADVOCATE into every family on my work." This brother did that very thing last year. Result: Every family in his former charge now receives the ADVOCATE weekly, and subscriptions which had been due for two and three years were collected, and without a compromise.

Another brother remarked to us not long ago, "I will be glad to see you at any time and will give you all the aid possible in your work, but you can hardly be more faithful in looking after the interests of our paper than I try to be. Every two or three months I take a copy of the ADVOCATE into the pulpit with me, call attention to it, and urge subscribers to pay their subscription, and those not subscribers to take the paper."

If all would do as these two brethren do—and there are others just like them—we could soon put our paper into nearly every one of our fifteen thousand Methodist families in the State. Brethren, let us do it this year. There are hundreds of people who would gladly take the paper, if asked.

The safest and best remedy that can be found for family use is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Rev. W. B. Palmore, business manager of the St. Louis Advocate, is on a trip to the West Indies.

It has gone out of fashion to say, "He has the grip." You now say, "He has the 'great prevailing'."

Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Seaboard district, gave us a pleasant and appreciated visit last Monday.

Rev. B. St. J. Fry, D. D., editor of the Central Christian Advocate, of St. Louis, died, last week, in his sixty-eighth year.

The postoffice address of Rev. J. I. Hottel, presiding elder of the Alexandria district, Louisiana Conference, is LeCompte, La.

The Youth's Companion, of Feb. 4, is a double number, and is notable for its articles of special interest and for its distinguished writers.

The Virginia Conference has lost another eminent man in the death of Dr. Leonidas Rosser. He died, Jan. 24, in his seventy-seventh year.

The more a man has to do the better he does everything; that is, if he is conscientious. We are getting notes from the brethren and sisters in every part of our territory, and nearly all of them have this short, but encouraging sentence: "The ADVOCATE gets better and better." If the brethren will push the collection for past dues and send the money along, and the grip will let us alone, there is no telling what we will do. Help us, brethren and sisters, by work and prayers in our behalf.

Wesson, Miss., now has a Board of Trade whose objects will be to advance the commercial and industrial interests of the town; to restrain, to modify and control the credit business; to look after the construction of roads and bridges leading to the city; to encourage manufacturing and other industrial pursuits, and to look after any and all other material interests of Wesson.

Mr. J. W. Crump has finished his contract for enlarging and repairing the levee from Point Lookout to Wilcox, on the Louisiana side. President Maxwell, last Monday, let out the contract for enlarging and repairing Lower Ashion levee, in East Carroll parish, and for some new work on the same line, to Mr. E. P. White. It is estimated at 60,000 cubic yards and will be built by James' convict force. President Maxwell reports that all work in the district is progressing well, and that he had no fear that high water would find any of it incomplete. Vicksburg Herald.

A Mistake Corrected.

We are glad to be able to publish the following, which corrects an unintentional error:

MR. EDITOR: One of your Mississippi items of last week says: "The druggists of Hinds county have been indicted for the unlawful retailing of alcohol."

While it is true that many druggists in Hinds county have been indicted for retailing alcohol, there are druggists in the county who have not been indicted, and among the latter is Geo. W. Harper, druggist, of Raymond.

A Correction.

I find in the Minutes of our last Annual Conference, held at Brookhaven, Miss., that North Wilkinson circuit is not credited with one cent of the collections ordered by the Conference. The assessments were paid in full on my part of the work, with $11 for special missionary; $3.50 for foreign missions by the Bethel Sunday-school; $5.85 collected on Children's Day. Raised for other objects, $40. I don't know that the secretary is to blame for the mistake. The assistant pastor in charge can speak for his part of the work. W. M. SULLIVAN, P. The World's Fair.

The South may claim, without prejudice, to have more than its share of the world's fair. The acknowledged beauty of the ladies of the South is due in a great degree to the use of Creole Female Tonic, the ladies' friend and favorite, and sure cure for all female ailments.

The Far West.

The prosperity of the Western countries is now assured, as the only great drawback that they had, was the lack of rain; and now Melbourne, with his mysterious machine, has so thoroughly demonstrated the fact that rain can be had, and obviate the heretofore existing trouble, that the whole section is happy and great prosperity is predicted. Here in Louisiana we do not often need more rain than the good Lord sends us; but we need some of it in a better condition than it is allowed to get into after it is sent us; in other words, we need Coe's Cut-outs (from 101 Camp St.) on every cistern, to throw into the waste-pipe all the filth which gets on the roof, and in this way pure, wholesome water and better health can be secured.

The Key to Success

in washing and cleaning is Pearline. By doing away with the rubbing, it opens the way to easy work; with Pearline a weekly wash can be done by a weakly woman. It shuts out possible harm and danger; all things washed with Pearline last longer than if washed with soap. Everything is done better with it. These facts but a small part of the—Why women use millions upon millions of packages of Pearline every year. Let Pearline do its best and there is no fear of "dirt doing its worst."

OBITUARIES.

NORWOOD.—Mrs. ELIZABETH S. NORWOOD was born in East Feliciana parish, July 16, 1822, and died in Point Coupee parish, Jan. 18, 1892. She was married to Capt. Samuel J. Norwood, Nov. 2, 1842, and soon after, with her husband, moved to Avoyelles parish, and remained until just before the late war, when they moved to Jackson, La., to educate their children. In 1852 they returned to Avoyelles parish, and finally became residents of Point Coupee, where she was called to exchange this for the heavenly world.

Forty-nine years she walked by the side of her husband as his support and comforter. She was the mother of nine children, eight of whom are still living, one (a daughter) having entered into rest while young. She was the center of attraction to her devoted husband, and to their eight children. No wife and mother had a stronger hold upon her household than she. In the home circle her social and Christian virtues shone in the most beautiful and consistent life.

She became a member of the M. E. Church at the age of fourteen years, became an active member in advancing the cause of her blessed lord, and continued so until death cut short her faithful work. Her pastors were always welcome guests at her house, and some of them found a home beneath her hospitable roof as long as their pastorate continued. Her pastor for the present Conference year was not permitted to visit her but once, and this was to witness the last fearful struggle for life. He asked her but three questions with regard to her spiritual state. Said he: "Do you have peace?" and, in a whisper, she said, "I do." "Does the grace of God support you?" "It does." "Have you comfort of mind?" and she made the same response. After fifty-six years of service in the church of Christ she fell peacefully on sleep. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." J. F. SCRLOCK.

TATE.—On Jan. 10, at 3:30 o'clock, one of the sweetest flowers of our cherished group and brightest jewel of our family circle, nourished in our inmost affection, STELLA K. TATE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kent, and wife of L. T. Tate, was ruthlessly taken from us when least expected, and transplanted to those celestial realms, there to enjoy the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power forevermore. Her days on earth were thirty-three years.

In her eighteenth year she joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. Ira H. Robertson, and was ever faithful to her vows. In 1862 she was married to L. J. Tate, and in mutual loving devotion lived a genial and happy life. "Oh, what a hard struggle it was for him to give up his precious wife—all that was nearest and dearest to him on earth! In 1883, believing all branches of the Lord's church grew from the same trunk, and all pointing heavenward, wishing to act in harmony with her husband's desire, and to encourage him on the way to salvation, she joined hands with him in the Baptist Church, and with him kept the faith until her death. She was a pure, consistent Christian, a devoted wife, and always loyal in her filial affections, loving everybody, and loved by all who knew her.

Her afflictions were extremely severe; but she bore them all with patience and resignation. Only a few hours before death she said she had no fears; was resigned to the will of God, and that there was not a shadow of doubt between her and her God; then, raising her feeble hands, and in weak ejaculation, with eyes and face all aglow with the heavenly radiance, exclaiming distinctly and earnestly, "Oh, precious, sweet Jesus; come down and relieve me of my suffering!" She did not crave to live, but with patient resignation, submitted all to the Lord. Sweetly she sleeps in the arms of Jesus. Good-bye, sweet, precious daughter, till we meet again. F. AND M.

TOWNSEND.—Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to call from our midst our beloved brother, R. W. TOWNSEND, who was born in Hickory county, Ala., on Jan. 26, 1821, and died Sept. 28, 1891, in his seventy-first year, he joined the Methodist Church in 1840, and lived a consistent Christian life until his death. He was a steward about twenty years, and always one of the chief supporters of our preachers in the churches where he lived.

Resolved, By the Chester Circuit Quarterly Conference, that in the death of Bro. R. W. Townsend we have lost one of our best members. Resolved, That we tender our sympathies to his bereaved family. Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his wife, and to the New Orleans Advocate for publication. Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of our Quarterly Conference. Done by order of the Quarterly Conference. S. S. SMITHURCK.

NOTESTINE.—DANIEL VALENTINE NOTESTINE was born in Allen county, Ind., Feb. 14, 1850, and died in Calcasieu parish, La., Jan. 2, 1892, of typho-malaria fever, after a lingering illness of five weeks.

He was soundly converted to God and united with the M. E. Church, South, January, 1881, in Pawnee county, Kans., and on Oct. 7, 1888, married Miss Clara Lee Funk, of the same county.

From the time of his conversion Bro. Notestine seemed to be fully consecrated to the service of God, and was always ready to perform any work required of him by the church; a good steward and Sunday-school teacher, and ever at home in the prayer meeting. The fire upon the family altar was always burning, and his communion with God constant and sweet.

During his long life the spirit of Christian patience and submission kept his mind at rest, and his many clear and cheerful statements of perfect peace with God and bright prospects of heaven leave no doubt upon the minds of his surviving friends about where to find him in the world beyond.

He leaves a wife and one child, also his parents and brothers and sisters, all of whom, we believe, expect to meet him again in the house with many mansions. J. L. GIBSON.

LIGHTFOOT.—DR. ROBERT LIGHTFOOT was born in Washington county, Ga., Dec. 13, 1808. He married Miss Elizabeth Perry in 1825, and came to this State in 1839, where he lived up to his death. After the death of his first wife he married Mrs. M. A. McClellan, in 1865, who still lives. He was the father of eleven children, five of which are still living.

He joined the church when he was eleven years of age, in his native State, of which he remained a member all his life, growing riper every day, and getting ready for the Master's call. The Doctor was ready to die, and ready for heaven, and was willing to go. The Doctor had a clear understanding of the plan of salvation, and knew what it took to make a Christian.

Bro. Phillips and myself held the last protracted meeting the Doctor ever attended, and that was the last time he was able to attend church, for he was taken sick soon afterward, and never recovered. He practiced medicine fifty years. His sickness lasted five months and seven days. He died Jan. 21, 1892, making him eighty-three years old.

We buried him at Jordan's Chapel, in Holmes county, Miss. The Doctor leaves many friends and a good wife, who miss him. W. H. SANDERS.

HERNDON.—Sister ANNIE E. HERNDON was born in Guilford county, N. C., Oct. 31, 1819; died Jan. 21, 1892. She professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, in Columbus, Miss., in 1847. She lived for that time from that day till the day of her death.

She was truly a good woman, full of faith, living a consecrated life. She died a triumphant death. Her remains were followed to the cemetery at Columbus by many weeping friends, where she sleeps to rise triumphant at the great day, while her spirit has gone to the God who gave it. K. M. HARRISON.

St. Paul's Military Metaphors.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

No one can carefully read St. Paul's epistles without being struck with the use of metaphors, figures and illustrations drawn from military life. It was much more familiar with soldiers than we. An American tourist in France, Germany and Russia is surprised by the number of the soldiers marching and marching through the streets, the large barracks in every considerable town, every strategic point fortified, and frequent parades. With all this St. Paul was familiar. Syria alone was garrisoned with an army of 60,000 men to keep its restive and turbulent population in subjection and in order. That St. Paul was continually reminded of armor and military life; so that his frequent use of such illustrations of the Christian conflict is the most perfect harmony with the laws of thought. Even heathen poets and philosophers, from their own experience, had represented virtue as a contest with temptations, to vice. The soldier camped out-doors, marched through all changing conditions of weather, had almost no luxuries and few comforts. So the apostle exhorts Christians, and especially Christian ministers, to "endure hardness as good soldiers." He exhorts them to be clad in the "armor of light," of righteousness; to put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil; the soberly pose and self-possession that reveals panic and alarm at the bluster and strategic wiles of the enemy of all righteousness.

It is noteworthy that all our armor, defense, with one exception—that is, the "word," but the divine Author of inspiration is careful to have it written that it is "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." And why are our weapons not carnal? Because we wrestle not against flesh and blood; a spiritual warfare against a spiritual enemy. We are "to be girded with truth." The military belt is not a silken sash, or soft and delicate morocco, but a strong leather girdle, strengthened with thin metallic plates. This is selected as the first piece of armor because truth is the most and most essential element of character. Lacking truth, all else is vain. It encircles, braces and sustains all else. Having on "the breastplate of righteousness," the most vital parts of the heart are secured with a strong, polished metallic plate. Whether this means "the righteousness of faith," which "counted in God's gracious redemptive scheme to us," for righteousness, or the righteousness of walking in the commandments of the Lord, is immaterial. It is the grand protection of the conscience and affections, and makes the man inwardly strong in the word and in the power of his might. And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." The Roman legionaries that Paul was accustomed to see in his long missionary journeys were accustomed to long marches, unknown to these days of railroads, steamships and railways. It was essential that they should be shod. Otherwise the sufferings of Valley Forge, or the snowy retreat from Moscow, with their horrors, could often have been endured. Then, when branches were driven through the crumbling walls and burning timbers, the feet had to be well secured against the roughness of the fiery passage. So the Christian soldier, in his marches over the rough ways of life, needs to be well shod. But see, with the preparation of the gospel of peace he is shod; always peaceable, and conquering by peace, and conquering a peace. "Taking the shield of faith." This polished metallic guard is on the left arm, and defended the whole person from the sling, bow, well and sword-cuts of the enemy. This is the Christian's defense against bullets, discouragement and fear. Some of the darts were so constricted that they took fire in the swiftness of their flight, or through concussion, when they touched the object at which they were hurled or discharged; but, striking these metal shields, the flame was quenched; so it is "our faith that overcomes the world." And take the helmet of salvation. This was a species of brazen cap sufficient to turn the edge of the sword and blunt the arrow. "Salvation"—a consciousness of being saved from sin—and, fearing God, the Christian soldier has nothing else to fear. Taking the sword of the Spirit—not a carnal and flesh-mangling weapon, but the Word of God—

"It is a sword of double edge,
And heavenly temper keen."

Three times the tempted Saylor thrust the great enemy with this heavenly tempered blade, and Satan fled from the fight. At the close of many campaigns, and near the close of the last battle, Paul exclaims, "I have fought a good fight."

From the East

In California means that one is from beyond the Rockies. Maine, Virginia, Georgia, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, are all East. So is Texas and Minnesota. Scores of friends in our Southern-East and along the Mississippi Valley country, wish me to tell them about California. And I ask the ADVOCATE to help me answer inquiries. I can't do it all at once. It is not easy to tell people who have not been here—and out into the country at that—about this coast. It is so big, so manifold in its developments, so unique, so surprising, that one can hardly tell the truth without endangering his reputation for veracity. One should be here much longer than seven months—we got to this fair city the last week in June, 1891—to be entitled to opinions on most subjects cognate to this marvelous State.

The South has suffered so much and such cruel injustice from hurry-graph notes on its people—the observers peeping through Pullman car-windows and getting their information from the "porter"—that a man once resident in the South will not rush into print with his own conclusions on most matters. A few things I know. I find, as I see it, a beautiful country, fertile beyond all Eastern conception, with a matchless climate. During the "dry season" there is no rain, and this season is most charming. During the "rainy season" it rains about as often as it does in Middle Georgia during the Winter.

From the front porch of the parsonage I see to-day great fields of snow on the Sierras, say forty miles away. In the yard the young blue grass is growing; geraniums, calla lilies, violets, pansies and roses are blooming. In the hall, away from fire, the thermometer was, at sun-up, 58 degrees; at noon, 62 degrees. This is about what it will show, they tell me, till Spring. Last July we needed a blanket—at least, every night. The climate can not be exaggerated; it is simply matchless. In Dudley Warner's beautiful book, "Our Italy" (Harper & Brothers), which I read over and over before moving, and after having decided to come, I find not one exaggeration.

Men ought to live out their full term here. As a matter of fact, but for invalids who come too late, our annual death-rate would be so small as to be hardly credible. In Los Angeles, 1891, the death-rate was, per 1,000, 12.75; and of 174 who died of pulmonary troubles, only 20 were natives; the others came too late for cure. But I met very many who have been made sound and well in this great sanitarium of nature.

This country is all alive and full of push. The people are energetic, and have a certain instinct of victory. They expect to succeed, and, for the most part, they do. Twice I have been into the territory of the Pacific Conference (am to make other gospel raids into that fine region very soon), but, so far, my observations have been chiefly in Southern California.

California is a very big State, to begin with; in size, next to Texas. For diversity of climates, soils, productions, perhaps no country can equal it. It is hard to think of anything that can not be grown somewhere in this wonderful State. Indian corn, all the small grains, grow to perfection, and show yields incredible to most States. And as to fruits, nature seems to have concentrated her energies here to make gardens and orchards.

Stock-raising is a big business; horses, cattle, sheep find, in abundant grazing in season and cheap and nutritious feed out of season, the finest opportunity. The Winters are never cold enough to check growth. A horse, as well grown here at three as in cold countries at five. I believe the principle holds good as to children. Sixteen-year-olds here are nearly full grown.

The California free schools run ten months in the year, and their grade is very high. It is purely secular education; but of its sort I believe it to be the best in the United States. They cost in 1891 considerably more than five million dollars. A poor man's child can get as good an education here as anywhere in the world. I doubt if he can do so well anywhere else.

Everything seems to be well planted out here but the church. No church is strong here. The world is strong, and the world only. Religion is not opposed by most people; it is simply ignored. All sorts of opinions are entertained; but the people, as I have found them, are tolerant, cheerful, open-hearted, amiable, and easy to get acquainted with.

But they are intent on making money, and more people succeed than in any country known to me—especially working people. It costs more to live here than in the older States; but earnings are greater in proportion. In the cities the professions are crowded; the surest incomes come out of the ground. And why not? A good, faithful farm laborer may count on from $25 to $30 per month and his board. A good man cook in this city can easily get from $25 to $30 per month. A little German girl wanted $20 from us. As there never was slavery, and as there are few negroes here, white people don't mind doing their own work. And they know how to do it conveniently. As it seems to me, the most comfortable and independent people I ever saw are those out here who own farms of from 20 to 30 acres, or orange, walnut, apricot, or other fruit farms of from 5 to 10 acres. The yield is to an "Eastern" man fabulous. For illustration, I copy from the Los Angeles Herald, of Jan. 1, a few statements said to be absolutely reliable every way. The reports were made by the owners of the places.

Oranges.—G. P. Yoakum, Vernon, 7 acres, produced 1,000 boxes; sold for $1,000; cost of production, $140; net profit, $860; trees 7 years old.

F. Q. Story, Alhambra, 25 acres; product sold for $13,500; cost of production, $3,200; net profit, $10,300; trees 8 years old; land in 1883 a barren waste.

George E. Prentiss, Downey, 10 acres; product sold for $4,350; other fruits paid expenses.

E. J. Baldwin, Santa Anita, 75 acres, produced 80,000 boxes; sold for $104,000; cost of cultivating and irrigating, $1,105; net profit, $102,895; one-half orchard in old and one-half in young trees.

And many like these.

Apples.—T. D. Leslie (one mile from Pomona), 1 acre, produced 10 tons; sold for $250; cost of production, $60; net profit, $190.

George Lightfoot, South Pasadena, 2 acres, produced 11 tons; sold for $260; cost of production, $20; net profit, $240.

Prunes.—C. D. Ambrose, Pomona, 12 acres, produced 77 tons; sold for $3,850; cost of production, $150; net profit, $3,700.

Berries.—Benj. Norris, Pomona, blackberries, one-half acre; produced 2,500 pounds; sold for $100; cost of production, $5; net profit, $95.

Onions.—Charles Louler, Downey, 1 acre, produced 113 sacks; sold for $842; cost of production, $50; net profit, $592.

And three columns of the same sort, these reports being from the country roundabout Los Angeles.

In this part of California—and I speak of it because I now know something of it—population increases fast. In Los Angeles county—and it is a big one—the population in 1880 was 33,381; in 1890, 101,454.

They are from all the States and from most all countries—English-speaking people predominating and controlling everything.

Our church grows heartily and steadily. In 1883, as Bishop McTear's History tells us, there were in our church in California 4,480; 1891 showed 8,222—a rate of increase much beyond the average of the whole church.

Yet some people think we have no business here, where the great majority of the people have no church relations, where no church is strong. We are as surely needed here as in any part of the world, for these thousands have souls, and we have the best and purest form of Methodism in the world to-day.

There are now going on many genuine, old-fashioned Methodist revivals in our church in California. The people are awakened, convicted and converted as in the days of our fathers, when they were planting Methodism in what were then new, but what are now the older States.

Brethren, pray that the work of the Lord may prosper in our hands.

ARTICUS G. HAYGOOD.
The Parsonage, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Missionary Debt.

Very much has been said on this subject, and several plans of relief have been suggested, and yet the debt is not paid and the cause of Christ suffers. Now, will you allow me to say a few words, and then to suggest a plan? To whom do we owe that debt, and for what purpose? We do not owe it to any individual, corporation, or bank. The Board of Missions said, as our agents, that our church should contribute so much money for the extension of the kingdom of Christ, and we failed of that amount, and now there is a debt; that is to say, we failed to pay all we promised to pay to the cause of Christ, and now we are in debt to Christ. Suppose a bank did trust the church, and advance the money, and now holds a promissory note from the Board, that does not and can not relieve our original obligation to Christ. Then who owes this debt? The Missionary Board? Not by any means, only as the agent of the church. I owe it, and every other member and friend of the Southern Methodist Church owes it. It is our debt, and we owe it to Christ.

Then, how is it to be paid? Evidently by those who owe it, and by no one else. It was very kind and generous of Bishop Keener and others to offer to be one of so many to pay that debt. But was it just for these brethren to pay our debt, and would it be honorable in us to allow them to do so? Who among us is willing for Bishop Keener or anyone else to take his crown by paying what we owe to Christ? I am sure I am not, nor will I suffer it. Now, I propose that every pastor present the matter in a special appeal to his people, and to himself, and never cease presenting it until he has his collection for missions in full, and a little over to pay the interest on what we owe to Christ, and the debt will be paid by those who owe it.

I know some will say money is scarce, and the people are so distressed I have not the heart to press this matter. I beg our preachers not to be moral cowards in pressing duties upon the church she owes to Christ, nor to attempt to hide themselves behind an excuse that can never exist. What would such men have done had they been in the place of the prophet, as recorded in I. Kings xvii? They would have agreed that times were hard, and, falling to ask for the first cake, would have gone away hungry, and the poor widow and her children would have starved because the preacher thought it was hard times, and refused to enforce duty to God. After all, may this not be the real cause of our hard times? Read and pray over Malachi iii, and Matthew vi, 24-34, and tell us what you think about it.

Let us prove the Lord by paying this debt before the May meeting of the Board, and see what the Lord will do for us in the year 1892.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss.

J. M. WREMS.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Wilson Moore, Bayou Choctaw circuit, Louisiana Conference: "We arrived on our work in time to see the new year ushered in upon us, bringing with it new responsibilities and new relations. Though the weather has been inolement, we have filled nearly all of our appointments, and the congregations have been very good. We made one trip that we will never forget. Our horse had to break his way through the ice as he went. When we got out of one pond, another was in sight. We went along cheerful, however, believing no sacrifice too great to preach the glad tidings of great joy to a lost and ruined people. We reached our destination in time to preach to a people that have heretofore been almost destitute of preaching. We are greatly encouraged, and hope that we may be instrumental in the salvation of many souls. We are trying to build a parsonage at this place; but the work has been retarded for the lack of funds."

Rev. J. W. Ellison, Satarlia, Miss., Feb. 9: "I send you a note from Mt. Olivet circuit. I and family, with baggage, arrived here the day after Christmas. Since then we have had some very cold weather. On Jan. 30, Bro. Mounger, our presiding elder, held our first quarterly meeting at Bentonla. There was a good attendance of the officials. They made a good report, and all seemed encouraged and pleased with the outlook for the year. We hope to do a good work here this year. We have been kindly received by all."

Rev. C. McDonald, Forest, Miss., Feb. 12: "Please send my ADVOCATE to Forest, Miss. My family reached the district parsonage safely on yesterday, and had a pleasant reception. The good ladies of Forest were represented by Mrs. Wootton and Mrs. Gardner. The dinner was very nice, indeed, and beautiful. La grippe prevails generally, so far as I have traveled. I learn that in the Polkville section of country there have been many deaths. Fourteen persons buried there in ten days' time."

Rev. W. T. Currie, Live Oak, La., Feb. 8: "I have just finished my first round. My people are very kind to me. I have done a good deal of visiting. I expect to see all of my people. The Lord has wonderfully blessed me at every appointment. I am expecting a grand time this year for the blessed Master all along the line. I have five churches on my work. I found all of the Sunday-schools had gone into winter-quarters—as usual in the country. I am going to try and get one hundred subscribers this year for the dear ADVOCATE. Pray for us."

Rev. J. R. Roy, Lower Coast Mission, Daisy, La., Feb. 9: "There is a distance of 112 miles south of New Orleans where the need of gospel effort is very great. I may safely say that in this whole distance there are not so many as 100 Christian people. I am the only Methodist preacher, and this is my first year in the traveling connection. I have on this Mission forty-eight members, one of whom I received since I came. When we look at the satanic powers in this country, the prospects are gloomy; but when we look at the spiritual agencies that may be employed against those powers, we believe great good can be accomplished. Our Savior has said, 'Ask, and ye shall receive,' and I believe his word. Yesterday I made seven pastoral visits, preached four short sermons, and sold $14.10 worth of religious books. I have secured nine new subscribers to the ADVOCATE, and hope to get more soon. I am a young preacher, with little experience, and, therefore, ask the brethren to pray for me, that the Lord may bless my efforts to give this needy region the pure Word of the Gospel."

Rev. J. F. Scarlock, Simsport, La.: "I took the steamer Warren at New Orleans, on Jan. 13, and reached this place on the fifteenth. The whole trip was made during the coldest weather of the season. Fortunately, no ill effects from it have been felt since. Next morning I was up early, even before the alarm of the clock apprised me of the hour, and, satchel in hand, I went to the mail carrier's house, took a cup of coffee, and by the earliest dawn set out in a gig, one wheel of which was in a precarious condition, and promised no safety to my journey's end. But I was here, and ready for work; and as it was the day on which the Baptists held their regular services, and inasmuch as the town was not large enough to furnish two congregations at the same hour, and as I wanted to throw no obstacle in the way of the pastor of our sister denomination, and as I had a strong desire to cultivate a friendly relation, I went my way rejoicing. The ground was frozen, the air was cold, and our progress was slow, on account of the wheel, which was 'dashed in' instead of out. After nine miles of the trip was accomplished, we came to a postoffice, where we warmed; but, as my feet were like oakes of ice, it took half an hour, or more, to thaw them, and for the heat to diffuse itself so generally as to render them comfortable. Twelve miles brought me to Mr. Bentley's, where I was kindly received. As there was little time to circulate an appointment, the congregation was small, even though it was the holy Sabbath, numbering, I think, as many as Noah had in the ark. But they sang well, and gave me their undivided attention, which is often requested by ministers going to proclaim the words of eternal life. At this point Bro. Alexander, of precious memory, organized the society, and his name still lingers in the minds of the people as a priceless treasure. On Monday I returned to Simsport, to witness the last hours of our lamented Sister Norwood, the oldest member in our church. Her death was a victory, grand and peaceful, present and everlasting, over the enemy of our souls, over fear and over sin. While the pastor can but feel deeply her loss, yet such was her triumph that he can but rejoice that she now rests from her labors, and her works do follow her. Whilst her family feels, with grief-stricken hearts, the final conquest of death, and the church mourns, with tearful eyes, the stroke which has torn one of her members from the body, tender and loving as it is, yet they are comforted with the blessing she left behind, and with the strong and glorious consolation of the gospel. She was hurled in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends. Thus sleeps our believing sister in the tomb until the resurrection of all things, when she will rise to meet the Lord in the air. Our first quarterly meeting is past. Our presiding elder, being down with la grippe, could not be present, and the Conference and the services devolved upon the pastor, as in many cases during the past. As the people expect something more than at the ordinary services of the church, it is not according to our liking to stand in the presiding elder's shoes. Our feet are not unfrequently too small to fill them, and even if they could, that would not satisfy the people. Sunday was very cold, and the congregation small; yet the services were not entirely destitute of interest. I have a horse furnished me; one which Rova, Dunstan, Foster and Evans have all backed and used in their itinerant labors here. He is a good traveler, a willing worker, and one which has the endurance needed for such a work as this circuit imposes. He knows the places he has visited in years gone by; and does not willingly fall, when an opportunity presents itself, of calling upon his old friends. He seems to feel that he is called to aid in disseminating the truth of the gospel as an itinerant co-laborer. He has been four years in the work, and is now entering upon his fifth, with renewed energies. He is modest, sober, dignified, and withal, quite gentle and courteous. He has passed through many afflictions, and on one occasion came near dying. He deserves the kindest treatment for the services he has already rendered. The good he has done can only be properly estimated when the final accounts of all men shall be settled. No overflow is anticipated this year in this region. The anti-lottery men are rejoicing over the failure of the Lottery Company."

Rev. R. A. Burroughs, P. E., Kosciusko district, North Mississippi Conference: "The new district starts off well; the preachers all at the post of duty, and doing well. We have held nine Quarterly Conferences, and of the nine, five have made much larger assessments for the support of the ministry than they made last year; the other four remain at the old assessments; so we have made some advancement in that way. The presiding elder and family are comfortably domiciled at Durant. There being no parsonage for the presiding elder, the good people of Durant got together and rented a good house, and furnished it with the very best furniture of every kind a family needs; so, while we have no parsonage, the presiding elder is not forced to the necessity of renting and furnishing his own house. The reception given us when we arrived was all a preacher could wish. Many of the ladies were awaiting our coming with a fine supper, good fires, good beds, and, in fact, all we had to do was to hang up our hats and feel at home. When the ladies had gone we soon discovered in the larder a good supply of such things as make glad the prosaizer and family—enough to last for many days. The people of Durant are anxious for a district parsonage, and we are going to have one ready for the next presiding elder—that is, for the presiding elder next year. In my place I hope to do much for our church papers this year."

WHAT MIGHT BE DONE

BY CHARLES MACRAE.

What might be done if men were wise,
What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
Would they unite
In love and right,
And cease their scorn for one another
Oppression's heart might be subdued
With kindling drops of loving kindness,
And knowledge pour
From shore to shore,
Light on the eyes of mental blindness.
All slavery, warlike lies, and wrongs,
All vice and crime might die together,
And wine and corn
To each man born
Be free as warmth in sunny weather.
The meekest wretch that ever trod
The deepest dungeon, guilt and sorrow,
Might stand erect
In self-respect,
And share the teeming world to-morrow.
What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this, my suffering brother—
More than the tongue
E'er said or sung,
If men were wise and loved each other.

Are We Evangelizing the Masses of Our Cities?

BY REV. JOSEPHUS STEPHAN.

There is a class of good people who are exceedingly optimistic in reference to the success of the church in the world, and who refuse to recognize anything but its brighter aspects. They point, with manifest pride, to the progress of Christianity in the world, at large, the advance of the church in its social position, its increasing wealth, its learned ministry, its costly edifices and its multiplied organizations. Such is a natural conclusion amid our enthusiastic gatherings, and in a superficial and hasty view of our missionary operations. But if we would see things in their right relations—especially in the centres of population—let us walk the crowded thoroughfares, count the thousands of saloons and other gambling agencies of the Evil One. See the power of the world on its votaries; behold the awful grip of mammon on its worshippers; follow the crowd of pleasure seekers; visit the hovels of the suffering and irreligious poor, the homes of the unchurched workmen, and the multitudes of practical heathen; witness the sins and crimes of those districts abandoned by the church; then, when we contemplate the fact that we are failing to influence these classes, our glowing optimism is greatly modified. It is true that our church, in some of the great cities, has been awakening to the demands of the masses; but are we really doing our duty and entering the open doors of opportunity in any of our cities? Are we making efforts worthy of our past history and achievements in this mission of reaching the masses, which has been the glory of Methodism? It is very evident we are neglecting these classes, when we honestly and fearlessly begin to look into the facts connected with our individual surroundings and the question in its general bearings. A very enlightening pursuit would be to consider the small proportion of churches and missions established to the increase of population in any one of our large cities.

It is a very commonplace fact that our cities are growing rapidly, and becoming the chief centres of evangelizing agencies. This growth comes from every section and almost every nation. The unevangelized element are also usually in preponderance in this increase. The ratio of increase in population is greater in the cities than in the country, notwithstanding the influx of the foreign elements. About one-fourth the entire population now of our country is massed in these centres. But with this marvellous increase, the churches have fallen behind correspondingly in their work of reaching them. It is unnecessary to produce the figures here which are conceded by all as pronouncing us, "Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting." Let me give simply a sample of a city of over 600,000, where Southern Methodism has had a grand opportunity. Our church has been operating there for seventy years, and among the first to begin evangelistic work. What is the result? After all these years, and in a constantly increasing population, there have been only eleven societies organized—two of these in the last three years, and one transferred from the adjoining country. This would make only about one organization for every six years. When we consider that most of these churches do not touch in any way the non-church-going and vicious classes, nor have an aim in that direction, it is significant. We feel sure this example can be uniformly applied to all our cities as a type.

The results of our churches in the cities, as a rule, have been meagre in actual conversions among the masses. It can be shown that a very small per cent. of the membership of our churches come from this class—the positively non-religious and the non-church-going, what may be called raw material.

To use the same city as an illustration: During the past two years there was added to the church by letter 973, 906 by ritual, and a net gain of 848; this result being the work of churches aggregating nearly 4,000 souls, and at a cost of about $65,000. How few of that result were really original conversions and from the class that we usually agree ought to be reached. When we consider the $46, net gain over one-half are by letter, and the other remnant is largely a second-hand result. Investigating the religious pedigree of these people, we shall find that nine out of every ten were church-raised or church-going people before, and many of them had once been members of the church in the past.

While the preacher's heart is elated and his church applauds, and others congratulate on their seeming prosperity, some other congregations are suffering a corresponding depression. At this rate we are paying a large price to convert souls, and the very ones we are sent and profess to reach are not being affected. The work of winning to our churches and to Christ the stragglers, the haughty and the religiously trained is a very necessary field to be occupied. But we are not exempted from the distinctive work of the church as embraced in our Lord's last command, to reach every creature. This I consider the real test of the character of our city evangelism. "By their fruits ye shall know them." We are not truly evangelical unless we evangelize.

What large populations in all our cities which are practically left to themselves and the devil! Sections open to the church; but in their extreme destitution and vice they are neglected. The question is, Who is responsible for these people? Certainly, somebody. If our church is not, then who is? If we shift responsibility, then all may. It is a very easy matter to quiet conscience by considering the magnitude of our individual church fields; but on this ground we might also exempt ourselves from all responsibility for the heathen.

Is it right to surrender, for example, the slums and other unchurched districts to undenominational missions, the permanent efficiency of which may be questioned? The fact of the business is that, on the whole, undenominational work does not amount to very much. They usually fail in getting the people fully indoctrinated and to realize real identification with the church. There is always an undefined and irresponsible sort of feeling experienced by such persons. It is certainly the wisest plan to work among these classes right in the lines of a church organization, even if it must be in a hall. If we stand for anything distinctive as a church, we ought to carry it to everybody. The charge against the church among these very classes is that the church is withdrawing itself from them in its sympathy and its operations. How can it be otherwise when they contrast the magnificence of the work and expenditure of the church in the cultured side of society and the pitiable ventures—if any at all—among the poor and unfortunate? An undenominational mission says to a man when he is converted, "You'd better join some church." But to get him to join a church is a hard task. He naturally wants to join where he has been converted; and if he does join a church, the people fail to take hold of him without some misgivings and coldness because he comes from a missionary district. Instead of our churches standing where they originally started, they have left these fields, and now to successfully reach, as a church, these people, it means aggressiveness and sacrifice.

It is evident from the foregoing facts that our gospel in the cities does not sufficiently verify itself as the power of God. Methodism has done wonders in the country, and it can do the same in the city if faithful to our trusts and the conditions of power.

There is everything in the city to try the adequacy of the gospel in its power to meet human wants and to break down the strongholds of Satan. The population is usually cosmopolitan; every nation is represented; people of every creed and no creed at all. Formalism, Romanism, infidelity, superstition, ignorance, vice, the saloon and every conceivable error and opposing force here meets the gospel face to face and challenges it to prove its adaptability and its power. Our failure to cope successfully with these elements and classes is a practical confession of the failure of our Protestantism. It is just as good as saying that our religion and our gospel is very good for the cultured or for certain nationalities, but not for the human heart. Church and religion has been demonstrated over and over again to reach the extreme conditions of society, and it will always do so when properly directed. We are partially responsible for the vicious neighborhoods and for the just charge against a powerless gospel in the cities.

If you ask me which is the real hereditary sin of human nature; do you imagine I shall answer pride, or luxury, or ambition, or egotism? No, I shall say indolence. Who conquers indolence will conquer all the rest. Indeed, all good principles will stagnate without mental activity. Zimmerman.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Feb. 21, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LAPRADE.

Jeremiah xxxvi, 19-31.

TIME.—B. C. 606. PLACE.—Jerusalem.

Wickedness and Folly of Jehoiakim.

Jehoiakim was a son of the good king, Josiah. It will be remembered that in the eighteenth year of Josiah's reign the Temple copy of the Book of the Law (Pentateuch), which had been lost during the reigns of Manasseh and Amon, was found by the high priest Hilkiah while he was engaged in repairing the Temple. Josiah immediately arranged that the people should be made acquainted with its teachings; and, both personally and as a ruler, brought himself into conformity with its requirements.

Jehoiakim must have known these things; but, so wedded was he to wickedness, that he was blind to the good results of his father's conduct, and hated anyone and anything that rebuked sin or threatened punishment.

During the fourth year of his ungodly reign the Lord said to Jeremiah, the prophet: "Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of Josiah, even unto this day. It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin."

The prophet immediately called his amanuensis, Baruch, who "wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book."

Afterward Jeremiah—who, for some reason, was prevented from going into the Temple—sent Baruch to read the prophecies in the hearing of all the people. This Baruch did, and especially during an extraordinary fast that had been appointed by the chiefs at the suggestion of the people (not by order of the king), in order to avert a threatened invasion by Nebuchadnezzar. The princes (or chief men of the court) having been informed of the contents of the roll, sent for Baruch and required that he read the prophecies to them, and also that he should state to them the exact circumstances under which he had penned them. These princes were evidently impressed with the importance of bringing these things to the attention of the king; but, being friendly to the prophet and to Baruch, first suggested that they hide themselves from the anger of Jehoiakim (ver. 19 of lesson).

Ver. 20. Having placed the roll in the royal archives under charge of Elishama, the court scribe, the princes made known to the king what they had heard.

Ver. 21. Jehoiakim, at once sent a servant, Jehudi, to bring the roll; not that he wished to honor God by hearkening to the words of the prophet, but that, having first assured himself of the truth of the report brought by the princes, he might take vengeance of Baruch and Jeremiah for their fearless exposure of his wickedness.

When sin is protected by authority, or by custom, he who rebukes it will be hated. The man of God, layman or preacher, who denounces the dram-shop, the devices of the gambler, the impurities of fashionable society, the violation of the Sabbath and the time-serving practices of those in authority, may look for the ill-will of the wicked.

Ver. 22, 23. Jehudi read to the king as he sat in his winter apartment in the palace in December (ninth month), warming, as was the custom of the land and time, by a brazier of burning charcoal. As the reading proceeded, Jehoiakim, with the childish anger so characteristic of the obstinately wicked under rebuke, cut the roll into strips as it was unwound, throwing the fragments into the fire, until all was consumed. The cutting was done with the pen-sharpener (the pens were of reed), which had, doubtless, been brought with the roll.

This action seems silly. So it was. Sin is always silly. It is unwise in the nature of it; it resents correction; it hates the light. (John iii, 19.) But men can not alter facts by refusing to see them, nor escape consequences by being indifferent to them. (Read Prov. i, 24-33.) Babylon did, as Jeremiah had prophesied, invade and waste the kingdom of Jehoiakim. God's word stands, whatever men may do.

Ver. 24, 25. Sin hardens. A quiet conscience is no proof of innocence. Sin warps the judgment, and makes the sinner blind to the enormity of his own deeds.

Ver. 26. (Read also Matt. xiv, 3-5.) God always cares for his messengers; but he does not always save them from persecution and death. Death is not the worst thing that can come to men. We are to be right, whatever may be the consequence. But God was not ready yet for Jeremiah to die.

Ver. 27, 28. The truth of the prophecy would have remained even had the roll not been rewritten. Burning Bibles does not turn truth into ashes; God looks after that. He is not defeated by the silly anger of the wicked—not even of accepted and crowned wickedness.

Ver. 29, 30, 31. Jehoiakim had simply added to his guilt, and, therefore, to his punishment; all Jerusalem with him, because they, partners in his guilt and impotence, were included also in the threatened punishment.

The practical, pertinent questions of the lesson are:

First. Have you heard God's Word?

Second. What have you done about it?

Third. What will you do now?

To the Women's Christian Temperance Unions of Mississippi.

Beloved Sisters: In the beginning of this new year it has seemed to me right that I should send you a greeting and a message of cheer. Perhaps some of you think there is reason for discouragement; but to me there are more signs of hope for the future than ever before. One great and abiding blessing is that the cause is God's cause, that Christ is the leader of the temperance hosts, and that the White Ribbon army of the world is gaining recruits daily. In our State work we have met with a great loss in the removal of Mrs. Kells to Chicago. Miss Willard writes, however, that we should rejoice in the transplanting of our editor; that it is distinctly a promotion for the South to have a Southern woman at the "center of things," and that she has long wanted one of our brightest and best on the Union Signal. It is but right that you should know that the suspension of our paper, which has seemed a consequence of Mrs. Kells' departure, was not unforeseen by your Executive Committee, and the editor for our dainty White Ribbon was always too expensive for our resources, and we would have been compelled to call a halt in any case. If other Southern States had come to our help, as we hoped, with money for stock and goodly lists of subscribers, we could easily have gone on; and even yet we hope to resume publication on a reduced scale with a common organ for several States.

In the last circular from your Executive Committee, the unions were asked to say what should be done about the lot in Jackson which was purchased as a site for State headquarters. Thus far very few have responded, and these are not unanimous. In my judgment, we should keep the lot and carry out our original plan. We can do it. The property is rising in value, and we can borrow enough money on it to pay the balance due our creditor. My plan would be to divide this balance into three annual payments with interest, and these smaller sums can be easily raised each year. It does not seem just to those unions and individuals that have entered so heartily into this plan to give it up now. At any rate, we should wait for the action of our State Convention in May.

It should be a source of pride and gratification that three of our State workers received national appointments at the Boston Convention. Our Mrs. Kells was made one of the editorial staff of the Union Signal, the official organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U. Our State evangelist, Mrs. M. McGee Snell, was made a national evangelist, and our Y. president, Miss Belle Kearney, was enrolled among the national organizers.

Both these latter are constantly receiving calls to other States; but their hearts are with Mississippi, and they have pledged me to stand by the State Union at this time. Mrs. Snell has gone for a brief while to Washington by invitation of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., because so few of our local unions have responded to my recent letter concerning her work. She hopes on her return to find favorable weather and a list of calls that will enable her to make a tour of the State with as little travel and expense as possible.

Dear sisters, you do not realize what you lose in not calling her to you. She is not only eloquent and gifted, but the power of God is with her, and her heart is full of burning zeal for the redemption of Mississippi. Send in applications; any union can pay her expenses from the last point; and if this is all you can do, she will not complain. She only asks to work for us, though our neighboring States offer her great inducements.

Do not forget that our superintendent of juvenile work and medal contests, Miss Anna Simonton, is at the service of any union that desires her assistance in preparing speakers for medal contests, only asking entertainment and traveling expenses.

In conclusion, let me urge the members of our unions to wear the white ribbon, observe the noonday prayer, and contribute toward the State work according to the plan recommended in the circular from Executive Committee. Faithfully yours,

LAVINIA S. MOUNT,
President Miss. W. C. T. U.

Christmas in Japan.

The Japanese are a mirth-loving people. Kind, gentle and friendly, light-hearted, gay and joyous, they have cultivated for centuries the social side of their natures. Their calendar shows a list of eleven annual holidays, on each of which Japan gives itself to pleasure. In addition to these, each neighborhood has several matseurs, or festivals, during the year in honor of its particular god or temple. These are great occasions, and generally last several days, and are attended by large concourses of happy people. It has been a problem to missionaries in Japan how to direct the social element in the lives of the native Christians; how to furnish a substitute for the heathen celebrations they surrender when they become Christians, which shall be at the same time profitable and harmless. One plan that has been adopted—perhaps the favorite and most successful one—is what is called a shimabakkwai (heart-love assembly), or social meeting held in private houses, at which games are indulged in, tea and cake are served and speeches are made. These are always opened and closed with religious services of a simple nature. These meetings are very profitable and result in good to the church, socially and otherwise. In all our efforts in this direction great care has been taken to inculcate a reverence for the church as a sacred place, and I am sure the lesson has been so well learned that the Christians here would, one and all, be shocked if I should throw our church open for amateur theatricals, concerts, fairs or oyster suppers. This precaution on our part is all the more necessary in view of the fact that the Buddhists seem to have little or no idea of sacredness connected with their temple-buildings and yards. They will rent them for any purpose, moral or otherwise, provided the rental is sufficient. Only last summer I attended a Christian Conference which was held in a temple, and it is no unusual sight to see all sorts of shops, even saloons, menageries, etc., within the temple grounds.

But, pardon me; I have drifted away from my subject—Christmas in Japan. There is only one service not strictly religious, which we permit in the church-house, and that is our Christmas exercises, and we always aim not to have anything inconsistent with the character of the place or the event celebrated.

The Japanese Christians take great interest in Christmas and participate in its festivities as though they were to the manner born. They are essentially an aesthetic people, and some of the most artistic and beautiful Christmas decorations I have ever seen, both as regards conception and execution, have been here in Japan.

Our celebration this year occurred on Christmas night, and was attended by, at least—two hundred people. The programme was excellent throughout, a marked feature of it being its religious character. I have no doubt but that good seed was sown and that impressions were made which will tell for eternity. At this distance, both as regards time and place, the items of the programme have no particular interest; but I must refer to two of them at least—parts taken by the youngest and the oldest of the flock. Plature, if you can, eleven boys and girls, from five to twelve years old, reciting, without missing a word, the account, by St. Luke, of the birth of Christ and an entire Psalm in Japanese, and then singing, "Jesus loves me, this I know," in English, and furnishing three dialogues in the same tongue, and you can have an idea of what Mrs. Lambeth's class of children did. I have never seen children at home do better. The last thing on the programme was a "Christmas hymn" by the "aged sisters." Five of our oldest lady members, ranging in age from fifty to seventy years, sang, with trembling voices, "There is a gate that stands ajar."

Mr. Editor, I am certain that if you had been present, you would have felt your heart growing mellow and your eyes becoming moist, as mine did, while listening to these aged disciples of the Master, all of whom four years ago were in the darkness of heathenism, singing their "Christmas hymn" of "good tidings of great joy," of a salvation that has been provided for all. The piece wasn't very artistically rendered, and by the rules of the schools I am certain that it would have been condemned; but there was heart in it, there was worship in it, and I am sure that the angels listened to the music thereof, for they heard that which was but a continuation of the song which they themselves had sung while hovering over the plains of Bethlehem on that still December night, nearly nineteen hundred years ago.

Think you, my brother, that the angels when they behold a company of people who have been made glad by the coming of that Savior, whose birth they proclaimed, ever regret having left the holy courts of heaven to proclaim to this sin-cursed world their message of "good tidings of great joy?" "No!"—a thousand times "no!" Think you not, my brother, that they behold with surprise and sadness those who, professing to love the Savior, refuse to give of themselves to help carry this message of great joy unto "all people?" If the angels ever weep, it seems to me must be when, hovering near earth, they see such a travesty of the Savior's name and spirit as this. "Christians" would be out of place in heaven, for up yonder, they believe, foreign missions. If you have any of this kind among your readers, my brother, they had better examine themselves whether they be in the faith, for if I understand the teaching of the Book, they have not the spirit of the angels nor of Christ, which is essentially one of foreign missions.

Kobe, Japan, Dec. 30, 1891.

To the Ministers of the Mississippi Conference.

Brethren: Your Joint Board of Finance presented a report, at the recent Annual Conference, which you adopted without a dissenting vote. This report, among other things, requested the taking of the "Conference collection" early in the year, and that should be taken upon its own merits.

Now, brethren, the Board calls on you to do as you have agreed. All you now know your assessment, and you expect the Board to carry out the plan you have adopted for the quarterly payment of the Conference claimants, you must do your part of the work.

If there is any obligation that ought to rest heavily upon the heart of the church, if any one claim ought to be more stressed than another, this is that claim. It provides for the care and comfort of her worn-out soldiers who have stood in the battle front, faced the enemy until stricken down; it furnishes aid to the widows and orphans of our soldiers, old and young, who have died in the service of the church.

Now, brother, let me tell you, if you have to do is to ask your people for this money, and you will get it. The most close-fisted man you have will give you money for this cause, you know he will.

Make your collection, and be sure that you don't mix up some other collection with it. Get it all cash if possible; if not, get as much cash as you can and promises for the remainder, with a definite time for payment. Send the amount you collect to the treasurer of the Board, William M. Thornton, Lake, Miss. This money must be in the hands of the treasurer by the first of April, so that the first quarterly payment can be made. In making your remittance to him, send draft on New Orleans or New York or postoffice order on Jackson, Miss. State the amount of your assessment, giving your work and district; and when the entire amount is not remitted, tell Bro. Thornton when to look for the balance due.

The secretary forwards this week to those preachers having claimants upon their works a blank form to be filled out and forwarded to the chairman of the Board, Rev. John W. Chambers, Enterprise, Miss. Please fill up this form at your earliest convenience and mail it.

Now, brethren, we give you as little work as possible. We send you a printed form, put in an envelope already stamped and directed. A list of our preachers have never seemed to understand the necessity of furnishing the Board with information. By the resolution of the Conference no claimants can well be considered unless the reports are in hand.

Some of our claimants live in Louisiana, Alabama and Florida. Let them write to the secretary at once, so that a blank may be sent them. Get your pastor to sign it. Should any of our preachers fail to receive a blank within a week from the time this notice appears in the ADVOCATE, a postcard to the secretary will receive immediate attention.

BRIEFS.

"The stream of Christian song rising out of the faith and love of the first ages has, with the growing centuries, widened and deepened, fed from a thousand different sources, until it now has the breadth of an ocean, and its voice is as the sound of many waters." And it is now said that by actual computation there is in existence 400,000 hymns in 200 different languages!

The last thing written by Dr. Fry, late editor of the Central Christian Advocate, was this:

There can be no truer description of a disciple of Jesus than he who busies himself in helping his fellow-men. No one need be careful as to the line of work that opens before him, for Christ's work is of equal honor and brings equal benefit to the soul that engages in it. We miss the largest blessing of this life by failing to do little things, or those which seem of least importance.

To the true-hearted disciple of Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ is both Life and Lord. He who is saved by being made partaker of the life that is in Christ, is saved in order that he may serve and glorify him whose life he shares. All that the disciple does, is all that the Lord does, is of Christ and for Christ. It is not for the disciple to be Christ's for one purpose, without being his for every purpose. A divided heart, or a divided life, is inconsistent with the very idea of Christian discipleship. Nor is it for the disciple to count one phase or sphere of Christ's service the pre-eminent phase or sphere of that service. Christ is not divided. He who shares Christ's life and serves him where and as he would have him serve, is in the best possible sphere of service that he could be in, or that Christ could assign him to. And only he who does share Christ's life and is serving as and where Christ would have him serve, has the right to count himself Christ's or to feel that he is truly in Christ's service.—Sunday-school Times.

It takes an expert to explain the commonest thing. It seems that the thing we are doing now—writing—is a most complicated process. Hear an expert on the subject:

The number of muscles put in action when a person is writing is prodigious; and it is probable that, in beginners, every muscle of the body must yield its assent before the graphic symbols trickle from the pen. The fingers, wrist, elbow and shoulder must all be held steady. The spine must be rigid and fixed below as well as above. The pelvis must be firm, and to this end the child often gets a support by its feet from the legs of the chair. The thorax is more or less rigid, and its movements are determined more by the work of the hand than the respiratory needs. Lastly, the knitted brows and protruding tongue are unconscious muscular acts which serve to mark the effort, both of body and mind, which the child undergoes when learning to write.

If the child knew all that before he began to learn, he would be so overwhelmed with despair that no amount of coaxing or authority would suffice to induce him to begin. We have often wondered what it was that tired us so when we went home from this office, but that is plain enough now. Brethren, give us your sympathy.

In every avocation and profession and calling there is nothing so important as positive knowledge. Imperfect knowledge is the parent of doubt and distrust and uncertainty. In our education, the elements of every study must be mastered before progress can be made with any satisfaction. He who does not master the multiplication table can never succeed in mathematical studies. This he must know, or he will fail forever. It is the same in every pursuit. The elements must be absolutely known.

It is just so in religion. If there is anything in which positive knowledge is requisite, it is in religious knowledge and experience. The most unhappy Christians are those who are not well grounded in the elements of Christian faith and knowledge. The most unsatisfactory church work is the work done by those whose religious experience has not brought them to the firm ground of knowledge of divine things. There is scarcely anything positive about the Christianity of such people. When they give their testimony for the Lord, there is a certain flavor of hesitancy and a decided lack of heartiness, which go far to neutralize the good effect of that testimony. When they do anything for the Lord's cause, there is manifested a lack of that spiritual abandon which carries the whole being into that work with an enthusiasm that refreshes the hopes of those for whom the work is being done and infuses courage into the hearts of the co-workers. Such workers soon become routinists, and their work mere routine work, and little real advancement is accomplished.

There are too many such Christians in our churches to-day, and they need immediate attention from the pastors. Their limping, hesitating faith needs to be looked after. Their imperfect knowledge needs to be corrected and supplemented. They must be "turned back" to the first "principles of the doctrine of Christ," and have them ingrained into their spiritual being by personal experiences with the Holy Spirit. They must, by those experiences, come to know Christ and the power of his resurrection before they can witness with power to that resurrection. Imperfect knowledge of Christ is the cause of a weak faith in him, and this weak faith is the reason for so much poor Christian living and so much poor Christian service! When we know Christ as we ought, we will believe in him with heartiness and we will serve him with enthusiasm.

The early Christians manifested no such hesitating faith as is common to-day. They gave it no countenance whatever. They accepted the gospel as the greatest of all facts, and their sturdy faith exhibited itself, not only as a vitalizing power in their own souls, but as a moving force in the church and community around them. They did not deal in "theories" and "suppositions" and "ifs," but they said emphatically: "We know whereof we affirm;" "We know that we know him;" "We know that he abideth in us;" "We know that we dwell in him;" "We know that we love the children of God;" "We know that we have the petitions desired of him."

That's the kind of religion needed to-day to counteract the effects of doubt. We want Christians who can speak out like John, and say, "We know," and can re-enforce that testimony by heroic deeds for Christ's representatives, even the needy sinners at our very doors.

The greatest need of the times is a positive Christianity, a Christianity that believes with the heart and speaks in the power of that belief and works up to the fullest measure of that belief.

Another Good Example.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate, of Jan. 27, has this cheering piece of news in regard to Trinity College:

We have often heard it said that when a man does one handsome thing, it opens the way for him to do another. He feels so good over the thing he has done that he wants to feel that way again, and so he does another good thing. This seems to be the case with that big-hearted man, Mr. Washington Duke, of Durham, N. C. He has made another handsome donation to Trinity College. Last Friday the members of the Executive Committee of the Trustees of Trinity College were in session at Durham, and were trying to devise ways and means to complete the "College Inn" and the other buildings on the grounds. Mr. Washington Duke proposed to donate fifteen thousand dollars more in cash, and to give to Trinity College the property of Louisburg Female College, which Mr. Duke owns, provided the Methodists of the State would equip the new main building of the college, now nearly completed, and raise fifty thousand dollars endowment for the college, in addition to what it now has. The committee promptly accepted this generous gift and promised to comply with the proviso placed upon it.

We sincerely hope that somebody will be found to meet Bro. Duke's proposition. It is certainly a generous offer and ought not to go by default.

We have some painful memories and experiences along that line which do not to a great extent encourage hope. Three years ago a member of our church in Mississippi made a proposition to the church in regard to Centenary College somewhat similar to Mr. Duke's proposition to the Methodists of North Carolina. He offered to give $25,000 to the endowment fund of that college, provided the church would raise an equal amount! We threw up our hats and shouted, for we really thought the proposition would arouse intense and universal enthusiasm. We knew several parties who were abundantly able to meet the proposition and expected to hear them gladly accept the challenge; but, alas! the proposition seemed to fall upon listless ears, and no one seemed specially called to answer. The college lost $25,000 and the church a great opportunity.

Another member of our church in Mississippi, about the same time, offered to give $50,000 to the endowment of a college to be built for the Methodists if the church would raise a like sum. Indications were soon observable that this proposition had aroused very little feeling among the Methodists of Mississippi, and had not Bishop Galloway made a most vigorous and untiring canvass of the State, aided by Agent Watkins and others, this proposition also would have fallen dead. Bishop Galloway and Agent Watkins saved the $50,000 by raising the additional $50,000, and the new college is going up and will soon be open for the reception of students.

The one proposition failed because it was not vigorously taken up and kept before the people; the other succeeded because that very thing was done.

Our North Carolina brethren can learn from us the way to failure and the way to success! May they choose the latter!

The Missionary Debt.

I have adopted the rule of giving, or rather paying, one-tenth of my income to the Lord, and after a careful examination of the past year's business, I find that I have still on hand some of the Lord's money. There are so many "good causes" that I can hardly decide how to apply this balance.

But as we are in debt, I have decided to send you another contribution for the missionary debt. Enclosed find draft for twenty dollars, which will increase the list somewhat, and still hope to see a long list in the Advocate for this purpose.

There is no doubt in my mind that this is an honest debt, and while I have always had a horror for debt-making, am not in favor of making debts, yet this debt has been made and ought to have been paid long since. May the time soon come when it may be said the missionary debt is paid.

A Neglected Anniversary.

The Discipline has the following:

"§338, Art. XIII. The Conference Board (of Missions) shall arrange for holding anniversary meetings within the several presiding elders' districts of the Conference in the interests of missions.

If this law has ever been complied with, such a fact escapes our memory at this time. Our impression is that this law is a dead letter, and the "anniversary meeting," which it commands to be held is a perpetually neglected meeting. Now, as presiding elder of the New Orleans district, I call upon the Louisiana Conference Board to "make arrangements" for holding this anniversary meeting "within" this district. The presiding elder and preachers and official members and private members will co-operate with the officers of the Board to the extent of their ability and influence in making such anniversary a success. It is not, perhaps, for the elder to say when such meeting shall be held, but he will suggest to the Board that he thinks the best time will be during the session of the District Conference, which will be held in this city, April 7-10. If the Board will make the necessary preparations, I doubt not the Conference will allow it an evening during the session for such an anniversary, and great good will be accomplished. Now, let the Board act immediately, one way or the other, upon this suggestion. There is no time to lose.

The Business-Man's Pastor.

We commend to all our pastors the following clip from an article in the Nashville Christian Advocate. We believe the suggestions made are wise and can be carried out by the judicious pastor and will result in great good. Let us try every means to reach the busy people with the gospel of rest and comfort.

The business man must have a pastor, and love him. It is not an uncommon thing to hear a business man speak of certain clergymen as "my wife's pastor." Why? Does he not belong to the same church as his wife? Yes, but the clergyman is not a pastor to both. He has visited the family, and is known and loved by the women and children of his flock. They become personally acquainted with their pastor, have seen him as he is, and love him as they should. But how different with the husband of the house! He could not be at home when the pastor called there. The pastor never was in his office; press of business forbid that, perhaps. He passes his wife's pastor on the streets, but feels that the preacher does not know him personally; and what is, alas! too often the case, thinks the preacher does not care to know a business man at all.

A little attention and vital effort on the part of the pastor will change this state of things. Let the pastor be sure he knows where every male member of his church is employed, and what the nature of his business is. Then at an hour best suited, go and spend a few moments with each one. Talk with him, if it be not objectionable. Where this can not be done, stand by the hero of toil and show him by pastoral presence that he is not forgotten. A simple grasp of the hand, the exchange of a few brotherly words, are worth more than can be told.

How refreshing it is to the taxed nerve of a business man to see some one come in who has a smile on his face and love in his heart. A thousand times per day there enters the door of an exchange or bank those whom the proprietors know come for the express purpose of driving a sharp bargain, of collecting bills, etc. Like a watch-dog the teller stands at his window, the clerk at his desk, to prevent some rascal from taking an advantage of the house. Would not such a one rejoice to see one person come in who does not have it in his heart to get an advantage if he can?

A few friendly visits, not too long, nor frozen to death by religious dignity, but radiant with sunshine and brotherly love, will do more to fill the pew with business men on Sunday morning than all of flaming advertisements and "star preaching."

Let persons love their pastor, and they will be found faithful at church worship, and stronger elsewhere. How can you truly love one whom you do not know personally? A business man would love his pastor and gladly hear him preach if he had the slightest chance ever to become well acquainted with him. It is due both the pastor and his flock that an intimate acquaintance should exist between them. It is the first duty of a pastor to know every one of his flock—the business men not excepted.

A pastor must ever work at an immense disadvantage until this acquaintance does exist. Most men of to-day care but little about the discussions of vast theological problems, or for glittering rhetoric. But what they do thirst for and appreciate is sympathy and love—the evidence of the fact that their pastor is in soul-touch with them in their trying life. Make the business men love their pastors, and they will soon learn to love Christ and his cause. They read the message of Christianity in the life of their pastor. Get the business men to love their pastors, and the great question of the evangelization of money is solved.

C. H. BUCHANAN.

To the Preachers and Lally of the Meridian District.

Dear Brethren: At the request of the Joint Board of Finance, our last Annual Conference directed that the collection for the benefit of the Conference claimants be taken early in the year and on its merit—separate from all other collections. Let this matter be attended to at once, notwithstanding the stringency of the times. "Prove the Lord herewith."

Eleven out of the nineteen pastoral charges in this district were in arrears on this assessment last year, and some of the arrears were disheartening. Let us determine that there shall be no deficit this year in this collection or in any other required of this district. Let us work together to bring our district to the front. We have the means, the membership and the preachers to do it. All together, brethren!

Our District Conference will probably be held in April, and I do most earnestly entreat that every charge report this collection as well as that of foreign missions paid in full.

Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLE, P. E.

Meridian, Miss.

A good movement was started in this city, last Sunday, by Bro. A. E. Clay, our pastor at Dryades Street Church. It was the incipient organization of a society for the prevention of cruelty to children. Quite a number of prominent ladies and gentlemen have enrolled themselves as members of the society, and as there is abundant room for the work of such a society, we are sure that it will do a good work among a class of people which have been heretofore sadly neglected.

NOTES.

Hugh Price Hughes says: "We Christians must be prepared, if necessary, to die rather than worship the devil by lying and obeying behind a counter."

Wesley's desired outfit for the illumination of the world? "Give me preachers who fear nothing but God, and desire nothing but God, and I can not a straw whether they be clergymen or laymen; such alone will shake the kingdom of hell and set up the kingdom of heaven upon the earth."

Bishop Goodsell's article in the New York Advocate, last week, "Concerning the Negro in the South," is, in every way, a very different production from Bishop Mallalieu's article in the same paper, several weeks ago. These two Bishops have resided for several years in the South, and yet how different an impression made upon each!

The world's work and the church's work are accomplished by men. These men may not see the visions, but they make real what the rare souls prophesy as the possible. There is nothing so limited a man's work as the endeavor to be that which he is unqualified. Browning says this when he cried, "Make no more giants, Lord." It is a grander thing to face the common lot and the daily task right manfully than to dream of the great and ovel positions we could never attain even if raised to them.—Free Methodist.

We need a religion that is a thorough nuisance to those who want to be wrong; with an eye like an eagle for anything that is not straight, and making a hideous noise about it such as will set the Pharisees grumbling indignantly. A courage that can do but can not be put down; that can be laughed at and starved, if need be, but can not do other than the right and speak other than the truth. There is much faith to-day, but we want the courage to go right on to live, to dare, and endure—in one word, we want a great enthusiasm for Jesus Christ.—Exchange.

A vast deal of unbiblical sentiment is discovered in the talk about a "Macedonian cry." Some men can only hear such a cry in London, China, or Africa. St. Paul's "Macedonian cry" came from the proud, rich and most enlightened cities of the civilized world. The man of Macedonia beckoned the apostle to climb a hill, Philippi, Berea, Athens, Corinth and Eternal Rome were pointed to by that pale sentinel by the Bosphorus. The call to American Methodism is day is first to the great cities and the newer commonwealths of its own land. It is also to the heathen, but to the former not the less, therefore.—Free Methodist Advocate.

To-day religion is not so much a battlefield as it is a hospital for sick and disabled folk; it is very often only a round of poultices and plasters and nourishing diet, where the talk is of troubles and trials and what we have to go through. I have met religion looking very unlike the warrior of the maiden martyr. A forlorn, coughing, feeble apology for its existence, and timidly promising not to get into anybody's way if it will only let it alone; that abuts its eyes for fear of seeing what is wrong, and holds its tongue for fear of giving offense; a poor, sick, ailing thing that can do nothing in the world but sit down by the fire nursing itself, creeping very occasionally into the sunshine when the wind is not in the east.—Exchange.

The members of a congregation, as a rule, are quick to discover indifference and laziness on the part of their pastor in the preparation of his discourse. Many an able and once highly appreciated minister has allowed his grasp on his church to become loosened, his usefulness to be largely destroyed by indulging in the luxury of idleness during the week, and then bringing a poorly-expressed extemporaneous sermon into the sanctuary on Sunday, instead of the well-beaten oil to which the people were entitled, and with which God is honored. Nor can he compensate for this lack of preparation by loud and fierce declamation. The opponents of the pew are much to be shrewd and penetrating to be fooled in this way more than a few times, if at all.—Christian Union.

Dr. S. A. Steel, pastor of McKendree Church, Nashville, gives in the Advocate his view of the value of the pastorate in this paragraph:

We are all sorry over here that Dr. Coke Smith will not remain among us. I do not wonder that a man of his gifts and of such character prefers the pastorate. It is the field of greatest usefulness, the freest and widest sphere of work accessible to a Methodist preacher. I used to think our countrymen had the biggest field; but I have changed my opinion. A pastor's charge is the best position of all. It don't mean the McKendree, or the Centenary, or the fine first churches of our large cities only; but I mean our smaller stations and circuit-riding. The wide-awake, capable pastor is more needed now than any other class of preachers.

The publishers of The Century Magazine have issued a pamphlet entitled "Cheap Money," containing the articles on "Cheap Money" and "Experience" which have been appearing in "Topics of the Time" of The Century during the past year or more. Single copies cost ten cents each, postpaid. The pamphlet will be supplied in packages by the hundred, at five cents each, distribution. This is an exceedingly valuable pamphlet, giving the thoughts of the editor of The Century on the various phases of this important subject. We read these articles with interest as they came out in successive numbers of that periodical, the publishers have done well in gathering them all in one pamphlet.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The postoffice address of Rev. R. P. Howell is Athens, Claiborne parish, La.

Dr. Anson West, of the North Alabama Conference, is writing the History of Methodism in Alabama.

The Board of Missions will hold its annual session in the Mission Rooms, Nashville, Tenn., Friday, May 6, next.

Rev. J. R. Roy, who has charge of our Lower Coast Mission, has sent us in nine new subscribers since he took charge. That's good missionary work.

We neglected to state last week that we had received a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Mississippi Conference, for which we are under obligations to the efficient and courteous secretary, Dr. C. G. Andrews.

If this present issue of our paper is not "good to the use of edifying" our readers, we are greatly mistaken. And we are not "bragging" when we say they have not had such a treat in a long time! And yet they may look for something better.

Rev. W. B. Austin, formerly of the North Georgia Conference, passed through New Orleans, Wednesday, Feb. 10, accompanied by his wife, en route for the Pacific Conference, to which he was recently transferred by Bishop Key, at the request of Bishop Haygood.

HOME NEWS.

Wiggins, Miss., up to date has received this season 11,000 bales of cotton.

The Public School Library of New Iberia, La., will be formally opened on the twelfth instant.

A new paper—"The Concordia Democrat"—has been started at Vidalia, La. It supports the Foster Anti-Lottery ticket.

Ellenville, Miss., is making preparation to build a large school-house for a graded high school, and expects to have it ready for the next term.

The Shreveport (La.) Mill and Elevator Company has erected a fine building and will begin business in March. The works will have a capacity of 700 barrels of meal daily, and a flour mill will also be operated next year.

The City Council of Alexandria, La., has levied a tax of ten mills, apportioned as follows: Four mills for waterworks, one and one-half mills for improving public school buildings, and four and one-half mills to the general fund.

The Lake Charles (La.) American, referring to improvements in that city, says:

"The sound of the saw and hammer is heard on every side, and buildings are starting up in all parts of the city, and yet there is a great scarcity of houses. Surely Lake Charles is rapidly pushing ahead."

We are glad to learn that Bolton is rising from the ashes to which she was lately reduced, with redoubled strength. The frame buildings that were destroyed by the fire are being replaced by handsome brick structures. This is greatly to the credit of the town, and shows how much can be done when there is a will to do it. We congratulate Bolton upon its enterprise.—Clarion.

This dispatch from Franklin, La., shows a good beginning for the year: "Plantation work is progressing most favorably, the weather being all that planters could desire, and the seed can be sown in many years. The stubble has, it is thought, suffered no injury from the severe weather of last autumn. The prospect for the season of 1892 is very promising, and planters are very hopeful."

A dispatch from Alexandria, La., says:

"L. W. Kennedy, of the firm of Kennedy & Stone, who have the contract of completing the Kansas City, Watkins and Gulf railway to this place, has arrived here, and says that said line was completed this morning at Spring Creek, twenty-two miles from here. He has sixty carpenters at work on the bridge and he expects to cross with his train before the middle of next week. Work is being pushed rapidly."

Articles of incorporation have been filed with the Secretary of State for the Alabama and Mississippi railroad. The incorporators are a number of gentlemen from Columbus, Miss., and Plokesville, Ala. The proposed road is to run from Plokesville, in Plokesville county, in a northwesterly direction to the Mississippi State line, where it will connect with a road to Columbus, Miss. The capital stock of the company is $10,000, divided into 100 shares of $100 each, and it is said that the road will be built as soon as possible.

A dispatch from New Iberia, La., says:

"Mr. E. B. Cushing, of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, accompanied by his corps of assistants, arrived here yesterday, and will begin a survey immediately of the country between this place and Abbeville, to establish a line for the New Iberia and Vermilion railroad, which is to be constructed by the Southern Pacific Company, in view of the passage of special taxes for that purpose by this place and Abbeville. The road is now a certainty, and will receive every encouragement from the people, who are now unanimously in favor of the road, which will tend to build up the valuable territory lying between its termini."

The Minutes.

I have been requested to correct the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference in regard to several matters in the Soashore district. A few other works have corrected the Minutes for themselves.

In the first place, the Minutes can not be corrected; and hence it is folly to write.

In the second place, with all the matter which goes through the hands of your secretary, and again through the hands of the printer, and the proof reader, without mistake, you might reasonably look for a few errors, especially as the responsible parties work for nothing and pay their own board.

In the third place, a history of these errors would not, as a rule, reflect credit on the pastor in charge. Our Carthage brother gives the facts. He failed to make a report. Who is to blame? Our brother from Jackson, Miss., does not state that he did not know what his report was until after the statistics were made up. Our brother from Franklinton fails to state that he was at Conference ready to report as pastor in charge, without knowing anything as to what his junior preacher had done. Our brother from Rolling Fork would have been in trouble if the Board of Education had arrested his character until he had made good the amount reported for education.

As to the brethren who have kindly written to me in regard to inaccuracies in the published reports, I trust that this article will be considered a satisfactory explanation. We need a new question in the order of business of an Annual Conference, a question to be asked and answered on the first day of Conference, viz: "Have all the preachers handed their reports to the statistical secretary?" Your brother,

JOHN W. CHAMBERS,

Statistical Secretary.

Woman's Work.

The ladies of the New Orleans Woman's Indian Association met on Wednesday, Feb. 10, in the parlors of the Christian Woman's Exchange.

The ladies have undertaken work among the Seminoles of Florida, a tribe for whom nothing has yet been done. They are the victims of the whiskey sellers, who take all, and give in return what will ruin soul and body.

The ladies have already sent the Seminoles a complete and acceptable Christmas box. Now they are anxious to build for these neglected people a chapel, where they may learn of the Great Spirit, whose children they are. So far $35.12 has been collected for the chapel, many children contributing of their pennies. Contributions will be received by Mrs. E. John Ellis, president, 304 Jackson avenue, New Orleans, La.

All money received will be promptly acknowledged by the treasurer. Give as the Lord shall prosper you, "good measure pressed down and running over."

"The Ethos of Marriage."

I wish to call the attention of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to a book which I have recently read with interest and profit: "Ethos of Marriage," by H. S. Pomeroy, M. D., Boston, with a prefatory note by Thomas Addis Emmet, M. D., LL. D., of New York, and an introduction by Rev. J. T. Duryea, D. D., of Boston. The book was published in 1889 by Funk & Wagnalls, New York, and costs $1. It is a timely book and deals with important social and civil questions as well as with those more nearly involved in the marital relationship. It deals vigorously blows against the "American sin."

Encyclopedia Britannica.

Rev. D. L. Mitchell, 112 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

Dear Brother: A set of "Revised Encyclopedia Britannica," just received, lies before me. After a very brief examination of same I respond to your request for my opinion.

I confess that the marvelously small price ($7.50) was the occasion of some distrust when I sent you my order. But I assure you that a hurried examination quickly banished all irresolution. It is a marvel of neatness (for paper cover), and will easily last a preacher twelve or fifteen years. The publishers have done us a great service in placing this invaluable work within reach of the financially short-armed, small-salaried preacher.

Accept my sincere thanks for making this liberal offer in connection with our Conference organ.

Yours in love of Christ,

Rev. D. L. Mitchell, 112 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

My Dear Bro: The set of "Revised Encyclopedia Britannica," consisting of twenty volumes, has come to hand. How in the world so valuable and exhaustive a work can be issued at so little cost surpasses my knowledge. I find the work excellent, and the maps are so well executed that I would not give them for a return of the money. The whole world is represented in the ninety-two maps. Please accept my thanks. Yours truly, etc.,

Dwyer Brothers.

The above enterprising firm, successors to König & Dwyer, who established a wholesale jobbing-house in 1882, are compelled by the large increase of their business to obtain more space for their immense stock. The buildings they occupy are at No. 62 Canal, extending through to Common street; also No. 12 Magazine street. This property is owned by the Tulane University, and is to be replaced by an elegant eight-story structure, 125 feet high, which will be more lofty than any building in New Orleans.

This firm deserves the prosperity that has enriched them, being honest, attentive, courteous business men. They have won their position by their indefatigable energy and industry. They conspicuously manifest the result of pious parental training. The publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has known the Messrs. Dwyer from boyhood, and cheerfully recommends them as first-class merchants.

WANTED—Old U. S. or Confed. States stamped envelopes. Will pay cash for same.

OBITUARIES.

MCINNIS.—It becomes our sad duty to record the death of one of the most lovely, amiable and companionable young ladies of Ennis, Miss. CARRIE HANNAH MCINNIS was a native of Greene county, Miss.; born May 27, 1873; died Nov. 10, 1891. Consequently she was eighteen years five months and thirteen days of age at the time of her death. She was the second child of Mr. M. and Mrs. M. E. McInnis. She lived with the M. E. Church, South, when quite young, and ever afterwards lived a consistent Christian life. She came from college in Mississippi to Ennis, Texas, where her mother and only sister lived, full of life and hope for the future. She united with the M. E. Church at this place by letter. She was always full of life; cheerful and kind to all she was thrown with. Soon after her return to the happy family circle, her only sister married Mr. L. M. Rivers, of Hillsboro, thus leaving Miss Carrie alone, to comfort and assist her mother in the duties of life. Hence she became a closer companion than ever, if possible, and was always ready to cheer her mother by her cheerful face and hearty laugh, and, embracing her in her arms, would imprint upon the careworn face a kiss, and go off with the sweetness of a deer, and cheerful song of one of the sweet warblers of the grove, whose voices were tuned by God's infinite wisdom, and the whole house would reverberate with the sweet notes as she would sing: "I need Thee every hour, O Lord, my God, my Father in heaven, tell of his love in the book he has given." But with all its sweetness that voice is hushed on earth, to sing in the heavenly choir. The sorrowing mother and weeping sister sit "How can we give her up?" Listen, sorrowing ones, and hear the voice of Jesus, though "a still small voice" it rises above all the roaring waves of sorrow, saying: "Let not your heart be troubled; you believe in God, believe also in me." "I am the way, the life and the truth." "Peace, be still."

All that loving friends and faithful and learned physicians could do was done to arrest the fell destroyer, but in vain. How faithfully the doctors labored; what anxiety of mind and sympathy of soul were depicted on their countenances, not only for the sick one, but for the mother and sister. They were faithful. During the long and painful sickness of weeks not one murmur or complaint escaped her lips. It was the writer's privilege to be with her often during her illness; and when her body was racked with pain, she never complained or "heaved God foolishly."

How deeply would our hearts sympathize with the dear mother as she would ask, "Can't she rest well and remain with me?"

"One sweet child was our Carrie, Always full of life and mirth, Far too rare and fair a flower, To remain with us on earth; So the angels came at noonday, Whispering softly, 'Carrie, come, Thou art needed by the Master, To praise him in his heavenly home.'"

Near mother, Carrie is only transported from this earthly home to a home in heaven, changing the perishing and decaying house for a mansion "eternal in the heavens;" her lot for a "crown of life," her robe for a "robe of Christ's righteousness."

Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. We weep not only for those who have no hope; for Carrie is only "asleep in Jesus—blessed sleep;" and her body being still united to Christ, shall rest in the grave till the resurrection; and then she shall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment, and "made perfectly blessed in the full enjoying of God through all eternity."

W. H. W.

GUNNING.—At a meeting of the officers and teachers of the Jefferson Street M. E. Sunday-school, Natchez, Miss., held on Jan. 10, 1892, a committee of resolutions was appointed and submitted the following, which were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, and no doubt, for some wise, loving, and merciful purpose, to call from the sorrow and suffering of earth our sister and co-worker in the church and Sunday-school, Mrs. CORNELIA R. GUNNING; And, whereas, Her long, faithful, zealous and untiring devotion to church, Sunday-school and benevolent work—for which she has, we feel sure, already received from her divine Master the pleasant greeting of 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,' and, 'Inasmuch as ye have done unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done unto me'—demand from us such recognition as her life, character and work among and with us, as is right and proper, and which is so eminently due her worth and memory; therefore, be it Resolved, That while bowing in humble submission to the dispensation of divine Providence, our hearts are none the less saddened, and we mourn, most of all, because we shall see her face no more until this mortal coil is shed and she has also put on immortality and we are reunited in the 'better land.'"

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Gunning our church, Sunday-school and community have lost one of their most zealous workers, faithful teachers, consistent Christians and devoted members."

Resolved, That our warmest sympathy and condolence be extended to her bereaved husband, the superintendent, and to the family of our deceased sister, with the assurance that we share, in no small degree, in their sorrow and bereavement."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate."

Resolved, That the sod rest lightly, the winds blow gently and the flowers bloom sweetly over the last resting place of our loved and lost, and in the morning of the resurrection call, without the loss of one, be reunited where we all sorrow, suffering, pain and death are laid and feared no more!

Servant of God, well done, Rest from thy loved employ; The battle fought, the victory won, Enter thy Master's joy.

Through sorrow's vale by weary pilgrims trod, The pathway lies that leads us up to God, And hope's bright bow most beautiful appears On clouded sky, beheld through falling tears.

Mrs. G. J. BAHIN, for Com.

GREEN.—We write with much sadness, as well as a feeling sense of inability to do justice to this memorial, of two grand, worthy and godly Christians, Bro. A. S. GREEN and his wife, Sister NANCY M. GREEN, who have left us and gone to glory; the husband preceding the wife only a little more than a month.

Bro. Green was born Oct. 9, 1812; was converted and joined the M. E. Church at the age of twelve years; was made class leader at the age of twenty years; served the church as an official member for sixty years, and passed into his "inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away" on Dec. 22, 1891.

Sister N. M. Green was born May 13, 1823. Unto the church to early life, she did the duties and enjoyed the blessings of Christianity in youth, womanhood, motherhood and old age; and here it was, being rich in experience, full of good works, strong in faith, and ripe for heaven, that God took her on Feb. 1, 1892.

What a number have enjoyed their hospitality, received their encouragement, and been the beneficiaries of their prayers!

Bro. Green was a steward until his death, and was regular in attendance. He believed in Saturday meeting, and when all others failed to come save himself and the young preacher, it was their worship and blessing together.

I spent the Sabbath eve and night with him, and on Monday morning he asked me to write his will for him. This being done, I took the Bible, read him some of God's Word, and then we all prayed together, he praising the Lord. The words of blessing that he pronounced upon my life and ministry, as also his prayer for me, I shall never forget. Thank God for such fathers and mothers in Israel!

BEN. P. JACO.

FOREKA SPRINGS, MISS.

JONES.—Bro. JOHN JONES was born Dec. 24, 1839; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, about eleven years ago, under the ministry of Rev. Robt. Davis, at Shiloh Church, and died near Tirza, Miss., Dec. 10, 1891.

He had been an acceptable member of our church at Tirza for seven years, and during our meeting last summer his zeal for the church was manifestly increased, so also his spiritual life was quickened greatly. He was intensely desirous to see all his children converted to God.

His illness was short. Being attacked by severe pneumonia, he was able to withstand only a few days. May the Lord bless the bereaved family, and use their bereavement for their spiritual good, hastening the time when the whole family shall become Christians!

BEN. P. JACO.

ENRICK SPRINGS, MISS.

DURRETT-FANNIE JENNIE. youngest daughter of Rev. John D. and Mrs. Sallie Durrett, was born near Prairie station, Miss., Feb. 12, 1854, and, after an illness of twelve days, fell quietly asleep in Jesus on Thursday, Feb. 4, 1892, at the home of her parents in Aberdeen, Miss.

Medicinal skill, human love and attention and Christian prayers could not keep her, for the Savior had called her to that home immortal. This was the fifth time he had said unto this family, "Smile little children to come unto me; and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved family in this hour of affliction, and help them to submit to the will of him who doeth all things well! CHARLES A. DAVIS.

MOODY.—Resolutions passed on the death of Rev. J. T. Moody by Durent Sunday-school, Durant, Miss.

"Whereas, God, in his wise providence, has seen cause to remove from our midst our beloved pastor, the Rev. J. T. Moody; therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Moody the church has lost one of its truest and most faithful ministers. Ever a warm friend to the Sunday-school, we testify to his worth, and express the pain felt at his sudden death."

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory of our dear departed brother, and the pleasant associations with him during his pastorate of this church."

Resolved, That we extend to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and assure them of a happy reunion in the land where there is no suffering and death."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate."

COMMITTEE.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and so family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Hold fast upon God with one hand, and open wide the other to your neighbor—that is religion; that is the law and the prophets, and the true way to all better things that are yet to come.—George MacDonald.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1892.

WHOLE NO. 1853.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. LEWIS, Ass't Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. L. W. Wood, Moss Point, Miss., Feb. 15: "After my spell in New Orleans, we reached our work on New Year's Eve, stopping with Bro. Everett that day, and came out to Zion on Jan. 1, and for two weeks we were pleasantly entertained at the home of the whole-souled Methodist, Bro. W. Rhodes. The good people on Scranton circuit received us with open arms. I have visited thirty-eight families, preached fifteen times, held five prayer meetings, baptized three children, and had three accessions. Congregations large. Truly God is with us."

Rev. T. S. Randle, Opelousas, La., Feb. 15: "I have not been well for the last week; have been laid up with la grippe, but was able to preach three times Sunday, and am feeling tolerably well this evening. My work is increasing upon me. I find, after looking over my field and the demands made, I will have to do more preaching and harder work than last year. God giving me strength and his grace, will accomplish the work. The year opening very favorably, and we are encouraged. The Lord is working in the minds and hearts of the people, and moving some into the church. Some of our best, most influential people are coming into the church."

Rev. W. T. Woodward, Ponchartroula, La.: "We are located in the town of Ponchartroula. The parsonage is about one hundred yards west of depot. We moved into the parsonage Jan. 21. I have been on the work ever since Dec. 8, 1891, and have visited all of my appointments, and am well pleased with the work. We find the people of Ponchartroula a very generous people, indeed. I am the first preacher that ever lived in their town. They seem to know exactly how to treat a preacher and his wife. My Wesley Chapel people will equal any people in providing for their preacher. They have given us potatoes, pork, molasses, pickles, preserves, eggs, and a quilt. Bro. Jeff and Robert Howes and Bro. Wells filled my loft with provender. Bro. Walter Boyes has put plenty of nice food in the parsonage yard, enough to last several months. We are getting along well with our subscription toward building a church in Ponchartroula. We have enough lumber; part on the ground. We want to commence the building within two months. We have good prayer meetings at Ponchartroula and Wesley Chapel; both well attended. As yet, I have but one objection to the work, and that is, I have all the water to stir or sun before using. One accession to the church; two new subscribers to the ADVOCATE. We hope to do a great work for the Master this Conference year." sixty, and increasing. Everything portends a good year for the Lord. The burden of souls is upon us, and, with God's help, we will reap a glorious harvest. All praise and honor and glory unto him!"

Rev. J. H. Brown, Many, La., Feb. 17: "I have been looking over the reports from the brethren in three or four numbers of the ADVOCATE. One writes: 'Arrived at the parsonage, found a barrel of flour, a whole hog,' etc. Another: 'We were met and conducted to the preacher's home, where we found the table groaning,' etc. Another: 'We are in the parsonage at last; the ladies stormed us,' etc. Another: 'Domesticated in the parsonage all alone.' Another: 'We were conducted to a borrowed house. The old parsonage sold, and building a new one.' Another complains (?) of having much work upon him, but congratulates himself that he is not like Paul. Lives in a furnished house. Being strong, as both name and appearance indicate, in my humble opinion that brother should not worry about the chores. I, too, am domesticated—not all alone, however, though truly like Paul, in one sense—in my own hired house, and that six miles from my nearest appointment, and about thirty from furthest. No parsonage on my charge, though one vacant on this—Fort Jessup. Not only have no parsonage, but so far I have failed to get possession of a hired house within the bounds of my charge. I frankly admit that I have not had as much experience as many; have not seen and heard as much as some. To be somewhat specific, I have not lived in a furnished parsonage, like Paul, alone, or like others, with wife and children. Neither did I ever see or hear a table groan, though I have seen some quite heavily loaded. I am making an effort to build a parsonage for the Many circuit; but I shall be fully satisfied to have the house unfurnished. These are an appreciative people; but the preacher's situation, as is apparent, is very unpleasant, but hope it will be better soon. We have not, as one brother writes, been reduced to 'hard-facts'; have plenty of whole hogs, and some deer—not deer—meat in this section."

Rev. B. H. Rawls, Montrose, Miss.: "I am entering on my third year's labor on Montrose circuit. It is true, money is scarce, but the people seem hopeful, and that encourages me. The high school of Brandon district is located at this place. The district has been realizing the necessity of a school of this kind for some time. The first year I was on the work I succeeded in securing a deed to two acres of land, and a good house that was built by the citizens. For some time they have had a good school, which was taught by Prof. W. B. Massey; but, in the Fall of 1889, Prof. Massey died, and the Board of Trustees employed Prof. L. D. McLaurin as principal. Having obtained a deed to the land and appurtenances thereto, we offered it to the district, and it was accepted. Last year we added to the building we had at an expense of $500, and built a good music hall. The seating capacity of the main building is about 500, and is divided into three rooms by two removable partitions. The building is heated by stoves, and is very well supplied with seats. We have a corps of five teachers and 160 pupils enrolled, which is a very gratifying increase over last year, which did not reach 115. The school is for males and females, and proposes to prepare young men and young ladies for a collegiate education. The president is a member of the Methodist Church, and an excellent Christian gentleman who has gained much esteem by the work he has done in the school. Miss Angie Patten teaches the music, and is a very efficient. She is very much appreciated for her piety and devotion to the church. As to the health of the community, it is comparatively good as long as la grippe stays away; but, as the world is its parish, we have our part of suffering people; but there is no local cause of sickness. I am glad that I can report such a large increase over the patronage of last year, which shows that the school is on the advance. We call upon the brethren throughout the district to patronize the school. For full information address Prof. L. D. McLaurin, Montrose, Miss."

Rev. C. B. Carter, Crowley, La., Feb. 12: "I find that I have a circuit of four appointments that are filled in four Sundays, and Crowley has two Sundays in the month. As yet, I am in a nomadic state—not going from house to house exactly, but yet without any continuing abiding place. The subject we are now discussing is the building of a house sufficient for my accommodation, that will serve as an L for the parsonage when we are ready to build. I think this will be done. The prospects, from first signs, seem very fine, indeed. We are going to have a pleasant and profitable year, and do a great deal of good in this place. We had our first quarterly meeting last Sunday, and paid up the elder in full, and raised nearly all of the missionary assessment for this charge. This augurs well, for this is the hardest collection to raise here. There remain some unflinching touches to be put on the church, which will be done shortly, and then we will have one of the best-appointed churches in this part of the country. By some carelessness on the part of somebody, in the building of our church it was not properly braced, and the result is that it is spreading, and we will have to put rods through it to keep it from falling down on us. Aside from the inconvenience and consequent discomfort of not having a place to stay, I have been kindly received, and had large and attentive congregations here. Crowley is a young and growing town, the parish seat of Acadia, situated on the S. P. R. R., 166 miles from New Orleans; has anywhere from 600 to 800 inhabitants; the market for a large section of this rice-growing country, and laid out on a magnificent scale. Here is a nice court-house, centrally located, which you approach from north and south by a wide avenue. About four blocks north, on the same avenue, is the large and imposing building of Acadia College, which was built by citizens of this vicinity at a cost of $12,000. This school has a good patronage; about 135 pupils enrolled at present. The town is building up in all directions. Most of the houses being erected are for people now on the ground. This is a good showing for a place just five years old. Everybody here has great faith in the future of Crowley. I believe we are as strong, if not stronger than any other denomination in the community. There are two churches in course of erection—Baptist and Northern Methodist. A Catholic Church is also projected. We have a large public school beside the college. Our Sunday-school numbered eighty-one last Sunday, and it is growing all the time. I expect soon to have one of the best Sunday-schools in the State. As in nearly every place with which I am acquainted, there is here a great scarcity of Sunday-school teacher timber—Why is it so?"

Rev. G. W. Gordon, Coffeeville, Miss., Feb. 18: "This is our third year on Coffeeville circuit. The two years which have gone before were full of work, and this one is equally so. We are working hard, and have met with a degree of success and trust that the future may be more abundantly successful. Our first Quarterly Conference was held Jan. 9 and 10. Dr. Sullivan, our new presiding elder, was at his post, and did his work faithfully and well, in and out of the pulpit. Dr. J. W. Price was on this district during 1890 and 1891, and was quite popular with us and our people. Dr. Sullivan is filling his place well, and we are delighted with him. Finances are short, and the prospect is that they will be shorter. Preachers will have to economize more this year than in many years—not that preachers are extravagant, for, as a class, we believe preachers and their families are as economical as any people in the world. There is a universal cry for retrenchment. This is right. But where shall we retrench? The trouble is, the most people begin at the wrong place—at the church. If we would retrench in the things which are of no benefit to us, it would be a righteous act, and we would be able to do as much as ever, if not more, in the things which are beneficial. If we would chew less tobacco, smoke fewer cigars, drink less whiskey, dress less extravagantly, and not throw away our money in attending shows, theaters, etc., and turn these amounts into the treasury of the Lord, it would be a blessing to us and to the world. Speaking of shows and theaters, the people of our town are a clever folk, but they have a weakness for such things. They will attend anything of the kind from a dime minstrel to a circus, inclusive. Are the people that way everywhere? Some are so feeble they can't attend prayer meeting; but a show seems to have a curative effect on them, and they hie away to the show. Some such say they have religion. Well, if so, it is in quite small spots. The spiritual condition of our work is not what it should be; yet we are not such as the Lord says he will spew out of his mouth. We speak of the church as a whole. There are some, we fear, who have already had the sad experience. We need a deep and thorough revival all over this land. May it soon come upon us! Our prayer meetings are doing very well. Our Sunday-schools are improving, and we expect to have a revival in that line of church work soon. We have two Women's Missionary Societies, and one juvenile. The women are not doing much at this time, but the children (God bless them!) are working beautifully, and have had an increase in their membership recently. They began last May with ten members; now they number twenty-two. They are going to have an entertainment the fourth of March. Come up, Messrs. Editors, and we will guarantee you an enjoyable time. The temperance sentiment is growing in this country. The people are looking upon the liquor traffic as not only against the country, viewed from a financial standpoint, but as the greatest enemy to God and the church. We hope our Legislature, now in session, will give us great relief on this question."

MATTERS AT BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

We are hard at work in our Lord's harvest-field, and feel that our efforts are not in vain. Mr. Weems' health is improving, and he works as he is able, and finds our members ready to co-operate with him in every effort for the good of the church. When he is not able to preach, we have Dr. Murrain to fill his place in the pulpit; and all who have heard him preach, know what a treat our people have. He is to us a kind brother, who is ever ready to help us. President Fitzhugh, who stands at the head of Whitworth College, is the able superintendent of our Sunday-school, and he is a fine officer, both in the college and in the church. A truer Christian gentleman I have never known. He is aided in the college by as fine a corps of Christian teachers as I ever saw. They are attentive to church duties, and ready to lend their help to the pastor as he may need it. Our college is filled with girls who do credit to the teaching in that Christian home. I'm sure no Christian parents need fear to place their daughters in the care of President Fitzhugh. A lovely lady in charge of the Hall told me that the girls have prayer meeting twice a week—Wednesday and Saturday nights. She says they conduct it themselves, and on two or three occasions at our regular church service some of the college girls have asked for prayers, and during the week been happily converted. I mention this to show the influences by which they are surrounded. We are free to go in and out among teachers and pupils, and I can truthfully say, Whitworth College is a model Christian home, where the blessed Savior is a welcome guest—welcomed, not alone by president and vice-president, but by teachers and pupils as well. It is a pleasure to work under the shadow of such a college. I have now fifty "Little Workers" in my missionary society. The members range in age from fifteen years down to little Willie Murrain, who is a little more than two years old. They conduct their meetings themselves—arrange their programme each week. Sometimes they have as many as three prayers. One evening I said: "I want to know who among you are earnest workers, ready to work and pray in and out of the society, and perform any duty that might devolve upon them." I'm sure if you, dear editor, could have seen them as they came forward, one by one, placing their little hands in mine, and promising to do anything for Christ our Lord, your eyes would have been filled with tears, as were mine. The great Shepherd has met with his dear little lambs in every meeting. Sometimes the children repeat verses from the Bible as they place their nickles on the table, and sometimes they tell how they made the money. They have sweet little recitations, missionary items told by different ones, songs and prayers. Oh, how they do enjoy their meeting! They can't wait for the sexton to ring the bell, but come to me for the key, that they may ring in good time. How I love to watch the Little Workers as they come, many of them running, and all so joyful I always think of our Savior's words, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Some of this noble little band will be known in after years as workers "who needeth not to be ashamed." The young ladies have organized a missionary society to support a Bible woman in Mexico. My letters from that interesting field serve to enlist the sympathies of our people in their behalf; and they are beginning to see the great need of those in that priest-ridden land, who are without God and without hope in the world. I am kept perfectly posted as to the work of Bible women and teachers in Mexico City. I may continue writing of Mexico from time to time. Pray for poor Mexico, and for us and our work. S. G. WEEMS.

Brookhaven Parsonage, Feb. 15, 1892.

Preaching for the Times.

Knowing that quite a number of our readers are interested in this subject, we reproduce in our columns from the Free Methodist, of England, the substance of an essay read by a local preacher at the local preachers' monthly meeting.

We submit what we think should be the principal characteristics of our preaching.

(a) Pointedness.—If, in present-day preaching, there is one thing above another that is to be condemned, it is its vagueness. To deal out from the pulpit mere generalities may lull the conscience, but will not convert the soul; may popularize the preacher, but will never build up a church; may create a state of things in which it will almost be a sin to say Amen, but will never enable a church to sing Isaiah's psalm of praise. Present-day preaching should take hold on present-day customs and bring the devil out of them. It should find its symbol in the plough, which cuts its own course.

(b) Fearlessness.—Present-day preaching should be a message from God, knowing no difference between black cloth and fustian. The presence of a wealthy brewer should be no excuse for passing over the abominations of the drink traffic, or of a liberal Pharisee for the condemnation of hypocrisy. To be designedly offensive is detestable, but to tone down the truth to suit the circumstance is abominable. Jesus was no trimmer, Paul was no trimmer, and the preacher that tries to be a Judas in disguise. It is not for us to trim, but to declare boldly the whole counsel of God and leave the issues with him.

(c) Sympathy.—Present-day preaching should be charged with an unmistakable sense of sympathy. Man is not only a sinner, but he is afflicted with sin. Sin is a hereditary disease, wickedness is but a development of the disease; sin blinds the eyes, blunts the susceptibilities, and paralyzes the will. The pulpit should recognize the weakness of the will, the power of the adversary, and urge with tender solicitude the necessity of prayerful watching. And the unconverted should be made to feel that his sad condition and sadder prospects excite the liveliest interest in the hearts of all true Christians. It was the magnetic power of sympathy which brought Mary Magdalene to Christ.

(d) Doctrine and Ethics.—Present-day preaching should put it beyond the possibility of doubt that a thorough and complete fitness for heaven is only thorough and complete fitness for earth; and that Christianity alone can renovate the soul and crown our existence with peace and joy. And in order to do this, it is of the utmost importance that the doctrines of our religion should be clearly and explicitly taught and enforced. Men are telling us that present-day preaching should be less doctrinal and more ethical. There seems to be a growing disposition on the part of many of our great men to steer clear, if possible, of the doctrinal side of religion. Perhaps there is less in ethics for the sects to differ over. We all believe that men should be honest, sober, industrious, etc. But, for men to live right, they must have deep down in their hearts a living, self-sustaining motive. "Herein is my Father glorified" is the germ sentiment which lies at the root of every right life. And how far can I go in glorifying God if I know little or nothing about God? To what extent can I appreciate the great blessing of redemption if I know nothing about redemption, except the simple fact that I am redeemed? St. Paul says: "Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord." And the same apostle, standing before Felix, reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment, clearly indicating doctrine, while temperance as clearly indicates ethics. Charles Wesley says:

"And let me through thy Spirit know
To glorify my God below;
And find my way to heaven."

We contend that present-day preaching should clearly and succinctly unfold the glorious doctrines of our glorious religion. And the preacher, or the candidate for that office, who is too careless or too helpless to make himself master of these doctrines, is manifestly unfit for that position.

(e) Character.—Present-day preaching should be supported by an irrefragable character. In vain does the preacher denounce oppression unless he practices mercy. In vain does he decry drunkenness unless his own hands are clean. In vain does he proclaim the horrors of hell and the glories of heaven unless his own life testifies that he possesses a wholesome fear of one and a hope of the other. And let us not forget that reputation is not character. Some of the best men have been most maligned. But whatever be our reputation, let us see to it that our character is kept clean.

In conclusion, let me say that the principles laid down in this paper are not new, but are the principles on which the apostles went, and are applicable to all time, so long as the war between truth and error lasts. We have not entered any serious indictment against present-day preaching. That there is room for improvement we will not deny. It is the duty of the church to facilitate the improvement: first, by seeing to it that none but fit and proper persons are put on the plan; and, secondly, by giving them all the encouragement that it can consistently give when they are on. We are here for improvement. May the Holy Spirit help us in our endeavors!

The New Departure. For the Preachers.

You are pledged to it. Every member of the Mississippi Conference is pledged to it. We adopted the report. It is wise, practical, beneficent, and a step forward. We all did it. You helped do it, and you ought to be proud of it. We all promised to take up the collection for the widows and orphans and superannuated preachers "early," and "on its own merits." Early, so that the chairman, secretary and treasurer of the Joint Board may make a settlement with the claimants on the first of April; on its own merits, because it is the most sacred claim that rests on us, and ought not to be mixed up with other claims.

Men differ about missionary claims and church extension and education; but nobody doubts the propriety and obligation of supporting these worthiest and, in many cases, the poorest of our people.

Bro. Gunning, secretary of the Board, is out in a ringing call in last week's ADVOCATE. Let us all say, Amen! and pull, all together, and bring timely and sufficient relief to these worthy men and women and orphan children. The secretary of the Board has sent to every preacher in the Mississippi Conference, who is concerned, in a stamped envelope, already directed, a blank to fill out with reference to individual claimants. If he did not send you one, you may find it in the report of Finance Board in our last Minutes. Let us go to work.

ONE OF THE JOINT BOARD.

A Correction. The Other Side.

MR. EDITOR: While our brethren are calling attention to errors in our published "Minutes," I am waiting to see if there are not some of them who will find that they are credited with money for "Education" that was not paid. I think the trouble is, some of the preachers hand in their reports to the statistical secretary, expecting more money, and it does not come. I know some brethren who paid more than they are credited with (because it came in late), and others who are credited with full assessment, when, in fact, a very small amount was paid. If the addition was correct in the recapitulation, they would give $1,250.19 for education, when there was $1,243.10 paid. One brother is credited with $15, and paid $2, while another paid $5 the last day, after the report was ready. This appears in the cash, but not in the "Minutes." This statement is due, as money is involved.

D. P. BRADFORD,
Treas. Board of Education.

Morton, Miss.

A GRUDGE.—Have you an old grudge in your heart against somebody, that has been smouldering for years, poisoning your joys, and saying to the Spirit of Christ, "You may come so far, but no further? If you have, be a sensible man; and get rid of it in a Christian way. It was an unforgiving spirit that killed Jesus, and the same thing will kill your soul if you don't get rid of it. If you forgive not, neither will your Father forgive you."

For the Advocate.

A WINTER MORN REVERIE.

BY SOPHIA BRAYES FRAVORTH.

This tiny morn, how calm, how cold the world doth seem—
In hoary dead weeds and grasses now doth gleam.
To creatures 'neath the frozen earth metallic rings—
'Tis frosty fretwork seen are wreaths and fairy things.
With folded wing, and mute, a mock-bird sits alone—
Upon a rose-tree's branch that from its stem is torn.
The last rose that breathed of Summer's sweeter morn
Lies like some lone widow who sees her joys are gone.
Her spirit's happy hour, her hope, her joy, her only one—
While flocking from the plum trees, in the orchard bare,
The little sparrow chirps, "We ate our breakfast there."
The leaves that flushed, at Autumn's breath, now shrivel'd lie Together mouldering, bound by Winter's icy tie.
What life-reviving vernal morn shall bid them rise
Up from their lowly beds in some more glorious guise?
There lies within some hope that potent springs from death
That yet, majestic-crowned, in flower or sheaf will glow.
To us this germ immortal elings, by faith we know
Of what shall be, though none hath seen save Him who saith,
"No more of fears, no more of sorrow's tears or death."
For in my Father's house are many mansions laid,
I go a place for them that love me to prepare."

Now, high above the fiery battlements of day
The sun, with fervid kiss, doth chase the frosts away.
Along the hills now murmurs soft as lovers' sighs,
Heard nearer, clearer, as the gentle breezes rise.
And things, so late that seeming lay in death's embrace,
Now stir and move, and now on life new lease begin.
In ceaseless motion, here and there, and out and in,
Or keep in line of march with never-flagging pace,
To mart or meet their race to some familiar place.
Thus life in great or small keeps one continuous round,
Always doing, hoping to be with blessing crowned.

City Evangelization. Some Needs.

BY REV. JOSEPHUS STEPHAN.

In a previous article we have touched only a few of the distressing facts which exist in all of our cities, indicating the church's failure in meeting her obligation to the masses. We wish now to state some things which strike us to be needed to produce a different state of things.

1. We need conscience. It is patent that behind our indifference and our unaggressiveness the duty of saving the masses is not strongly and fully realized by either the ministry or the laity. If it were, there would be a more general and earnest demonstration of it in enterprises and sacrifices in their behalf. It is far easier to accuse the average city Christian with the need of the outlying country districts or our western border work, than with the spiritual destitution and demands of the thousands all about them, many of whom have actually as little conception of gospel truth as a heathen. Distance seems to lend enchantment to the view. The cry appeals to their conscience from afar, when probably in a whole State or Territory there is not the same number of inhabitants nor the same degradation as in some of our unevangelized city districts. How common the observation in many towns of the West, looked on as missionary territory and supported by missionary money, where with five hundred or one thousand inhabitants there are five or eight churches and preachers, with more room than auditors and more labor than results! Whereas in the city there are thousands who are practically unnoticed, and for whom no aggressive work is being prosecuted!

This indifference to the wants of the city can be accounted for in, at least, three ways. The great difficulty and self-sacrifice of the work, the cost of prosecuting it, or the natural hardening and dulling of our sensibilities by witnessing so long the wickedness and depravity of the multitudes.

Another reason may be ascribed to the limitation and narrowness of our vision, by our interest and activity in our immediate congregations and neighborhoods, thus quieting our conscience in making us oblivious of all else.

On the ground that the aim of the church is to go where people are worse off and where they are in multitudes, it seems to me we can not neglect the cities without laying aside all sense of obligation. It can not be a question to us, Judas-like, of how much will it cost in time or talent or money. One thing alone ought to urge us, and that is the Master's example and spirit and command. We need to see these masses through the vision of divine enlightenment, and this will come to every conscientious seeker after a knowledge of the will of God.

2. We need a change of tactics. We have been entirely too conservative and calculating. We need a little of the spirit of our ago in our relation to the work of saving the people. As a good brother once prayed in one of my prayer meetings, we need to pray, "Lord, give us more common sense!"—yes, sanctified common sense. How smoothly we move, how self-satisfied and self-congratulatory! We are so much afraid to do anything new. We are like the boy, who when remonstrated with because he went to mill with his grain on one side of his back and a stone on the other, said that what was good enough for his grandfather was good enough for him. We ought not to cease adapting the gospel to the unchurched masses as long as they remain unreached and unsaved. Booth's unconventional methods received the disapproval and the criticism of the whole Christian world; yet they have done more for the masses in their lowest extremes than anything else in the old methods. If something does not turn up, we ought, by the grace of God, to turn something up.

The children of this world are wiser than we. In the inheritance of their aims they are bold, relentless, venturesome. They enter an undertaking seemingly hopeless. No labor or expenditure is too great; life and property are gladly risked, and failure and defeat only make them more persistent and determined. When the great merchant finds that customers are not coming to him he sends out his representatives and communications till they respond. If one man won't do, he gets another. Nothing is left undone to get trade. What keenness and foresightedness in laying plans and consummating them! But with the church in carrying out the great command, and with thousands of human souls crying at her, very door for help, how cautious and calculating her policy! How hesitating her movements! The divine order is reversed, and we walk by sight and not by faith. Everything is risked in worldly enterprises; but how little we are willing to risk in plans of benevolence and missionary operations! Were our Master with us in bodily presence to-day, he would revolutionize many of our present plans and direct us to new lines of work and aggressiveness.

3. We need organization. "What is everybody's business is nobody's business," is an old and oft-repeated adage which explains why there has been so little accomplished, and the present lack of well-defined and successful missionary operations in our cities.

Somebody is responsible for this work; but it would not be wise nor just to put it on any one individual. Organization is usually born through some one's individual conviction and work; but the very success of the project, whatever it may be, is found in the concert of action and unity of effort on the part of many. Unless there is a well-organized board or society composed of the conscience, piety and strength of the churches, nothing permanent can be accomplished.

4. We greatly underestimate the power of lay agency in reaching the masses. There are multitudes of men and women who are "at ease in Zion," who, possessing peculiar gifts, rightly directed, could be utilized in pressing mission work in neglected portions of the city. Besides, what are the exhorters and local preachers doing? Are they to be mere figure-heads at the Quarterly Conference? I know one large city church, which at one time supplied a number of workers for denominational enterprises and other denominational work, who, if they had been taken in hand by proper authority, and directed to some enterprise in our own ranks, what a power! One of the largest Presbyterian missions of St. Louis, having a Sunday-school of one thousand five hundred, is carried forward exclusively by laymen—mostly young men and women from the various churches. How many such are in all our churches, who might be made useful under right leadership! Were all the dormant electricity which lies in the miscellaneous wires of any great city combined and used, what an extraordinary force it would be!—enough to sweep us out of existence.

Thus with the unused forces of our churches! Could these workers be marshaled and trained, what a tremendous spiritual force it would present in reaching the churchless communities! There is too much emphasis and dependence laid on the regular ecclesiastical instrumentalities. We have never come to prize and appreciate the power of consecrated laymen in the work of evangelizing the multitudes. There are many persons in all of our churches of ardent piety and sufficient ability to present the gospel truth, but whose gifts are rarely exercised, because they are not called forth and set to work. Many Moody's are among us, but they have never been called to life.

5. The last, but the greatest, need of the church in reference to this matter is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Nothing short of this can suffice. Our cities can only be saved by a powerful revival of religion. We may perfect our methods and means of doing good; we may do battle valiantly upon the many and complicated vices which are the enemies of the church; we may rightly aim at the correction of municipal and political evils; multiply our forces and instrumentalities; but the sine qua non for real and general success is an increase of the Spirit of God in our churches. Here alone the very elements of success are furnished. It would uproot the most deep-seated vices; it would call men and women into the self-sacrificing work of saving the lost; would lead to a consecration of the unused wealth in hands of professed Christians; would give boldness and fearlessness in prosecuting labor; would furnish wisdom to win souls, and plan for their rescue. Above all, the baptism of the Holy Ghost would energize and send out individual witnesses, and the truth would run and be glorified.

The great secret of saving the world, and also the cities as a part of it, is the power of units baptized and impelled by the Spirit of God. Whenever the church receives this gift, promised to her so long, then her power will be felt throughout every wicked city. The whole problem of city evangelization is solved in these last words of Jesus: "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, ye shall receive power;" and, "Let him that heareth say, 'Come.'"

The Advocate Gets a Hauling Over.

MR. EDITOR: As a Methodist of little less than fifty years' standing, and a subscriber to the ADVOCATE ever since its first appearance, nearly forty years ago, and having seldom done so before, I now respectfully ask for a limited space in the columns of the ADVOCATE to make public a grievance which has long given me very much pain. It has been the pride and boast of our church that we preached the pure gospel, and left politics to our brethren of the Northern branch of the church. But recently I have noticed that the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, which was endeared by tenderness and most sacred associations, not only to Methodists all over the South, but to thousands of others of other Christian denominations, much to our regret and deep mortification, has quit the time-honored policy and joined in the political warfare, as fanatical in its fierceness as it is foolish and unchristian. There is little, if any, difference of opinion upon the lottery question among all the churches, Protestant and Catholic alike all condemning it; and yet I know church members, some of them of high standing, even in the Methodist Church, who believe that the State ought to have adopted the lottery amendment. Far be it from me to condemn them to eternal perdition for irreconcilable difference with me on this question. There is a wide divergence of political views of the membership of the different churches; and for elucidation of these views, and for bitter partisan wrangles of those who entertain them, surely there are enough secular papers in the land to satisfy the most exacting.

It is hardly necessary for me to remark that I am, and always have been, unalterably opposed to all lotteries, upon all grounds, under all circumstances, and for all reasons yet presented from the rostrum or by the press, and, therefore, not obnoxious to any criticism or insinuation of favoring the lottery gambling in futures, or any other kind of gambling.

I have borne, with what patience I could, the not very gradual whipping into line, under the leadership of the NEW DELTA, of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, which used to be a welcome weekly messenger and family religious journal, until recently it has become one of the most violent and vindictive exponents of Foster's politics, scarcely even excepting its own great prototype, the NEW DELTA itself.

Full-grown men, with ordinary judgment and discretion, have as much right to their religious and political opinions as the editor of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and believe they can and always could serve God as faithfully, and be true members of the Methodist Church, and be opposed to all lotteries, even though they should be guilty of choosing to vote for Samuel D. McEnery. I could name a number in this vicinity, who are members of the Methodist Church, and are readers of your paper, who have the temerity to do this very thing. Did I say your paper? No, my dear brother, it is not your paper, nor was it ever intended to ventilate the political views of any man. It is the paper and monthpiece of the church of God, and should never be polluted by anything political or partisan. I regard your unnecessary interference in politics, and your unjust and unkind criticisms of those who choose to differ with you—not in religion or morality, but in political opinion—as a usurpation of authority and an injury to the church. Right here let me call your attention to an example you are emulating.

Will do I remember that during the campaign of 1840, when Gen. Wm. Henry Harrison and Martin Van Buren were the opposing candidates for the Presidency, the Rev. Thomas Stringfield, who was editor at that time of the Nashville Christian Advocate, urged all his readers to save the country by voting the Whig ticket; and though he urged the claims of Gen. Harrison in the mildest and gentlest manner, his Democratic readers were outraged, and very soon good old Bro. Stringfield was relegated to the shades of a backwoods church, and was succeeded by a man imbued with the Spirit of the Master, who believed the church of God paramount to all political schemes, and the Nashville Advocate still lives to do good work as a religious, non-political journal.

Now, it further occurs to me that, forgetting the beautiful teachings of love and charity inculcated by the Prince of Peace, your paper is heralding words of strife and war. Secular papers all over the land, in the State and out of it, are commending the noble and patriotic action of Judge McEnery in the interest of peace and harmony, whilst your paper, neck and neck with the fiercest political papers whose only life and hope is discord and dissension, is still for war. When Morris says, "I will not pursue or accept the lottery amendment if offered to me," you declare he can not refuse to accept. Some of the strongest Foster papers are urging brother Democrats to cease strife, lay aside prejudice, "let bygones be bygones," and all return to the fold in peace and harmony; but you and Bro. Boone, of the Baptist Chronicle, representing two of the largest branches of the Protestant Church, are shouting for war and for blood. You seem to want your partisan leaders to obtain office at any sacrifice, even at the expense of that deorous and delightful harmony that many of the profane are battling for.

As a follower of the meek and lowly Master, how can you exhort yourself to your readers (many of whom differ honestly from you in political opinion) when you assume the role of a leading general, with all the trappings and venom of the most intolerant, in this terrible internecine war, which involves far more than the political preferment of any set of men living in the United States, and that, too, when you, of all others, should let your voice be heard for peace?

Politics divided the church, North and South, and this brought on the war; and politics will always prove a curse to the church, whenever and wherever it is injected into its affairs, whether it be by its journals, its creeds, its councils, or its pulpits.

I trust I have given no offense, as none is intended; but, in sorrow and mortification, and not in anger, I am forced to say that your paper, which has long been a valued weekly messenger in my household, has lost its influence, and is no longer acceptable. You will, therefore, discontinue it.

You may ask what good this letter can do. In reply, I will say it can not do more harm, and will certainly do as much good as any of the bitter political articles found in the ADVOCATE for the last few months. I am, Sincerely yours,

THOS. S. JONES, M. D.

Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., under date of Feb. 12, wrote: "I enjoyed the point and spirit with which you wrote against the lottery people in the last ADVOCATE."

Rev. T. L. Mellen, presiding elder of the Meridian District, under same date, said: "Your articles on the Louisiana Lottery, in yesterday's ADVOCATE, had the right ring."

The Dram-Shop Chapter.

After all, what is the dram-shop chapter as proposed in the new code of Mississippi? It is just that degraded and sickening thing that its name indicates—a legalized dram-shop—a man authorized by the Legislature, and backed by the whole legal power of the State, to sell all the whisky he can, make all the drunkards he can, make as many poor, starving people as he can, create all the trouble between men, their wives and children that he can, send as many to prisons and insane asylums as he can, and as many souls to hell. All this and a thousand times more, he is allowed to do under the new dram-shop code of Mississippi, the principal condition being the same as under the code of 1880: that the would-be saloon keeper get a majority of legal voters to sign his petition, and that he pay a license to the State. Some slight alterations or amendments are to be made to satisfy weak-minded prohibitionists who are clamoring for State prohibition. Some claim to have heard the death-knell of the liquor-saloon sounded. I wonder what it is that a fruitful imagination can not hear! As to myself, I never expect to hear that joyful sound until it is recorded in heaven and at the halloo-hox that Christian people all over the country are voting as they pray.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Feb. 28, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LA PRADRE.

Jeremiah xxxvii, 11-24.

TIME.—B. C. 599. PLACE.—Jerusalem.

Jeremiah Persecuted.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee."—Jer. i, 19.

Jehoiach (called also, "Jeholachin" and "Coniah") succeeded his father, Jehoiakim, on the throne of Judah; but his short reign of three months and ten days (see II. Chron. xxxvi, 9) was considered as not worth mention. Nebuchadnezzar, king of the Chaldean monarchy, to whom Judah was at that time under tribute, had him carried to Babylon, being determined that no one should have even the semblance of kingship except by his own appointment.

Mattaniah, who was the youngest son of the good king, Josiah, was made king in his stead, his name being changed to Zedekiah by Nebuchadnezzar, who exacted, first, a solemn oath of allegiance to the Chaldean dynasty. There was, then, as hitherto, a strong party at Jerusalem that hoped, by the assistance of Egypt, to deliver Judah from the yoke of the Chaldeans.

To the influence of this party Zedekiah soon yielded, and, in violation of his oath, openly rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, and formed an alliance with Pharaoh through ambassadors whom he had sent to Egypt for that purpose. (See Ezekiel xvii, 15.) The Chaldean army at once laid siege to Jerusalem, but withdrew for a time because of a threatened attack by Pharaoh. During this temporary withdrawal the people of the beleaguered city naturally sought relief from the surrounding country.

Vers. 12, 13. Jeremiah was a resident, originally, of Anathoth, in the land of Benjamin, one of the forty-eight cities given by the other tribes to the Levites. (See Joshua xxi, 18.) Accompanied by others—for so the expression, "in the midst of the people," is to be understood—Jeremiah went forth through the northern gate of Jerusalem, which opened to the land of Benjamin, intending, no doubt, to seek supplies for them and for himself. While passing through the gateway he was seized by the captain of the guard, one Irijah, a grandson of the false prophet Hananiah. Irijah was, no doubt, glad of any pretext for arresting him, because Jeremiah had denounced his grandfather, and also because of his recent predictions concerning the overthrow of the city by the Chaldeans. The fact that he had opposed an alliance with Egypt gave some slight coloring to the suspicion that he was friendly to Chaldeas, and so Irijah at once accused him of deserting to the enemy.

Vers. 14, 15. Jeremiah emphatically denied this false accusation, but was, nevertheless, taken before the princes for their decision and action.

Broad men, true men, God-fearing men are not unfrequently accused of lack of patriotism, because they do not fall into line with small men who chance, for the while, to be in authority. It was natural that men who had been likened to "evil figs which can not be eaten, they are so evil" (chap. xxiv, 8), corrupt, worthless men, should assume that a good man was, like themselves, evil. In a spirit of vengeful anger they first smite the prophet, and then imprison him in a dungeon cell under the house of Jonathan, one of the court secretaries.

Underground cells were not uncommonly connected with the palaces of Eastern monarchs, and recent excavations at Jerusalem have revealed numbers of such under the site of the ancient palace.

Vers. 16, 17. How long the prophet remained here imprisoned we do not know. "Many days"—a long time—forsaken, half-starved, in the dimly lighted, ill-ventilated cell of his dungeon, the good man suffered, until the return of Nebuchadnezzar to again besiege the city, brought fresh anxiety to King Zedekiah.

Wicked men, when in trouble, are usually perfectly willing to acknowledge God in any way that does not involve repentance and obedience. Zedekiah, anxious for God's help, though utterly regardless of his claims, had Jeremiah brought to him secretly, and inquired concerning the issue of the siege.

A false man, or a weak man, might have pleaded ignorance, or answered evasively, or said nothing; but Jeremiah, half dead, but brave and true, answered promptly, and as God had made known to him, that the king would be "delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon."

Vers. 18, 19. Jeremiah knew that he had been imprisoned, not because of evidence that he intended to desert, but because he had faithfully rebuked the nation for its sins and foretold the coming disaster; so he challenges the king to point out any wrong act on his part. At the same time he justifies his prophecies by appealing to the facts:

even then Nebuchadnezzar and his army lay before the city, Pharaoh had gone back to Egypt, the promise of deliverance made by the false prophet had come to naught.

Vers. 20, 21. This prayer is not a cry for mercy; it is simply an appeal to simple justice, and was so recognized by the king. Zedekiah, who was corrupt and false, was not tyrannical or cruel disposition. The evident suffering of the prophet emphasizes to his appeal, and his request was granted in part. While he was not liberated, he ordered that he be brought from the dungeon cell, and allowed more roomy and less miserable quarters in the court of the prison, so that he should have what probably was the ration of a soldier at that period of the siege—a piece of bread daily.

Courage, born of faith in God, devotion to duty—courage that does not shrink before princes, nor when persecution comes—is the feature of Jeremiah's character that is portrayed in this lesson.

Mississippi State Sunday-School Convention.

The next annual meeting of the State Sunday-school Convention will be held in the city of Oxford, on April 26, 27 and 28, 1892.

The following is taken from the Constitution:

ART. II. The object of the convention shall be to promote the interest of Sunday-schools throughout the State by awakening an earnest and intelligent Christian enthusiasm in the Sunday-school work; to diffuse information in regard to the best methods of conducting Sunday-schools, and to devise and organize means for Sunday-school extension within the territory represented by the convention.

ART. III. The convention shall be composed of delegates chosen by the several Sunday-schools representing therein; each regular school of any Protestant denomination being entitled to one representative. And each convention shall be entitled to the representation.

ART. IV. All ministers of the various denominations represented in this convention shall be entitled to seats as honorary and advisory members, and shall have the right to participate in the discussion of all questions submitted to the convention.

The object should commend itself to every Sunday-school worker, and it earnestly desired that each Sunday-school will send a delegate to help in the work and bear back to the school the information obtained at the meeting. It will pay any school to defray the expenses of a delegate in order to obtain, through him, the valuable aids and suggestions given by the best workers in these meetings. Hon. Wm. Reynolds and Rev. H. M. Hamill, of Illinois, two of the best workers in the United States, will be present, besides the following prominent workers from other States have been invited and are expected: Hon. J. G. Harris, of Alabama, president of the International Convention; Rev. Dr. J. M. Frost, Judge Estes and Hon. J. R. Pepper, of Tennessee, and, perhaps, others. Of course, the workers in Mississippi will be out in force. We desire and expect a large convention, and to that end make the following requests:

1. The district vice-president will please see that every county is organized and sends delegates. If possible, hold one or more institutes before the convention.

2. Presidents and secretaries of county conventions will please advise district vice-presidents. Get full statistics and send them to the state secretary, and see that each Sunday-school receives this circular.

3. Sunday-school superintendents will please read this to their schools and select a delegate.

4. All are urged to help in the work.

Reduced rates will be secured on the railroads.

Truly and fraternally,

JNO. T. BUCK, Pres.
J. G. MCGUIRE,
Chairman Ex. Com.

C. W. MILLS, Sec.

The way to preach down error is to preach up truth. Never tackle Satan unless you are sure you can lay him. A great many men by opposing error have magnified it, have glorified it, have given dignity to a hitherto seen and comparatively unknown thing. The most that church-going people have learned of some forms of error they have learned from Christian preachers. Now, the Christian pulpit is erected to preach evil, but to praise the glory of God. Infidelity is not evil, but it is a failure. A little time in the history of New York, Thomas Paine said: "In five years there will not be a Bible in America." How smile-to-day when we read his words! Dr. R. S. Storrs.

One of our Methodist exchanges has lately remarked that "the people of God waste their strength and wealth on profitable pleasures, and with hundreds of millions of dollars under their control, permit churches and missions to starve. If Christians spent even a cent of wages, salary and income on themselves, and gave to missions one cent on a dollar of their real and personal property, their contributions would be $87,284,000 instead of $5,500,000."

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. J. P. DRAKE.

Missionary Notes—New and Old.

commencing the conduct of a missionary column for our ADVOCATE, I now do at the request of our editor, I would earnestly bespeak the sympathetic co-operation of all the brethren, lay and clerical. I am conscious of a great lack of experience in the manner of advocating missions; but my abiding interest in the cause will accept the offer of an opportunity to do good. Believing, brethren, that you also have the same interest, I invoke your aid. This may be given in two correlated ways: First, by giving burning thoughts or practical suggestions in your own mind, or from the pens of others, transmitted to me as soon and briefly as possible. I deemed suitable, these will find a place in our column. Names of authors will be given, unless a request to the contrary accompany the manuscript. Clippings from periodicals should always be duly credited. Fresh notes from any of our brethren serving the domestic Boards in Louisiana and Mississippi, or from laymen on the ground, will be especially acceptable. Secondly, by carefully reading the column, and commending such as seem most helpful or instructive to others of your household brotherhood. Thus you will greatly aid to bringing in the light. We believe that all our people would "read by facts and figures of this wonderful work that God is carrying forward." The missionary fire would soon be kindled into such a flame as would shed the light of life to the "utmost bounds of the everlasting hills." Let each of us do his part.

This column is not confined to one branch of the great mission work—unlike, indeed, we take the right cue of thought that makes the harvest field wide—at home and abroad. So, intelligence of genuine missionary work from any quarter of the globe, by homelike wrought, will be inspiring to all who have the mind of Christ.

As much of our matter will be selected, the reader of many books and papers will frequently find familiar thoughts. But we hope to have only such as will bear repetition. Gain, many of our readers have access to no other religious journal; so, brother, what is well known to you, let us be fresh and helpful to your neighbor. Let the brother of "high degree" in missionary matters not become impatient, and ring the "oboe-bell" too freely—especially at the beginning, and while the grip still traps us by the ear and other prominent extremities. Rather let him listen meet us at the throne of grace, earnestly supplicating for me abundant measures of that wisdom which comes down from the Father of Lights.

With this extended salutation, I subscribe myself,
Your servant in this work,
J. P. DRAKE.

Shubuta, Miss., Feb. 9, 1892.

At the last session of our Mississippi Conference the reports of missionary money raised were quite encouraging, a view of moneyed stringency. Those circuits which took early collections did best. This is always so. It was resolved to push these collections for 1892, so as to secure full amount of assessment by or before April 1. Suppose our other "patronizing" Conference resolved likewise! Now, brethren, let us rise up and do that very thing. Promptness always pays. Where we can't get the cash, let us double the amount in subscriptions. Thus may we come out even.

The earnest and thoughtful secretary of the Meridian District (Mississippi Conference) Woman's Missionary Society, Miss Sallie Snylle, has planned for and appointed a meeting of delegates from all societies within our district, to be held at Shubuta, on Saturday, March 13. There will be addresses, reports, songs, sermons, etc. They expect a religious and edifying occasion. Our godly women of the Woman's Missionary Society all over the connection might receive great benefit by similar conferences. It is in exact line with our policy—assembly, educate for the grandest service on earth.

This extract, from an interesting letter of Rev. J. J. Ransom to the Nashville Christian Advocate, on our various mission fields, is provocative of heart-searching. Are we doing all we can for those sons of darkness at our doors? Let us ask it on our knees!

But look at the work chosen, and let us do it. It shows us in the face that our church has never done its work under the guidance of any great plan for the conquest of the world. Our people could have been rallied to our banner as readily as they have responded to the secondary duty to pagans. What has been lacking was the thrilling cry, the insistent appeal of our leading men. The great soul who led us into Mexico until we spend there $75,000 per annum, could certainly have done as much for our "Brother in Black;" and had Bishop Haygood been put at the front of a Board of Colored Work, instead of being made agent for the Slater Fund, the same might have been less, the results of the first years not so appreciable, but the effects in enlargement of the manhood of Southern Methodism would have been incalculable, and the work for the negro would have been of larger and more enduring type.

J. J. R.

The New York Independent publishes a very valuable table of statistics of missionaries, native preachers, churches and communicants, and Sabbath-school scholars for most of the important Protestant missionary societies of the world. The aggregates are thus summarized: At more than 10,000 stations, 6,300 missionaries and nearly 12,000 native preachers are presenting the same Word of Life to the most diverse congregations, and over 600,000 communicants go to make a body of Christians won from various forms of false religion to the one true spiritual faith, of whom the church at home may take lessons in consecration and courage. There are over half a million scholars gathered in 12,000 schools, learning the same truths as the children in our own land; and the same songs that go up from the Sunday-schools of Christian lands are sung by over 300,000 children of every race from the Hottentots of South Africa to the savages of Tierra del Fuego and the islanders of the South Seas. As we try to picture them in thought they seem to be the earnest of the gathering which no man can number out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, whose one song shall be of praise to him who has redeemed them. And with the praise there shall be a note of gratitude for those who have brought them the message of glad tidings. Never before has there been a brighter outlook, a greater opportunity. It only remains for the church to go forward.

The above somewhat encouraging facts, from the St. Louis Advocate, suggests the thought of how many millions are yet in darkness, though every door is practically open. We add from the Woman's Missionary Advocate: "Said President Gates, in an address at the last meeting of the American Board: 'Oh, my brothers, what answer can we give for ourselves before the judgment throne of God, if this glorious work of preaching the gospel of light to dying men is checked and dwarfed and falls of its glorious possibility, because we, who are God's stewards, hold fast to God's money for our own selfish uses?—There is a time when the Almighty Banker of the universe calls in his loans.'"

We give these clippings from our Nashville Advocate, of recent date. They each convey some encouragement for the far different forms of missionary labor carried on in these lands of darkness, spiritual.

The China Board of Foreign Affairs, composed of Chinese statesmen and pagans, presented a memorial to the Emperor of China some time since. They, having examined the nature and work of Christianity, say:

"1. The memorialists find that the religion of the great West—that is, Europe and America—persuades people to follow the paths of virtue. 2. The hospitals for the sick and asylums for infants are all good works. 3. Of late years, in all places in the different provinces visited by calamities, there were many missionaries who contributed large sums and helped to alleviate the sufferings of the people. 4. Their love to do good and their generosity in giving are certainly commendable."

The marvelous success of the gospel host, "The River Seine," last year upon the River Seine, in Paris and vicinity, has resulted in a new system of reaching the unchurched masses. The McCall Mission has a new boat building, to run upon the rivers and canals which spread like a network all over France. It has a saloon accommodating 160 persons, with reading rooms and conveniences for the evangelists and others in charge. Separate meetings are held at different hours of the day, so as to accommodate all classes.

Of Dr. Pentecost's work in Poonah, India, a writer in the Independent says: "In all my twenty years of India life I never before saw an audience of educated Hindoos in such numbers listen with such apparently deep and profound interest to Christian truth. The non-controversial method adopted by Dr. Pentecost, together with deep fervency and the lucid truth, certainly impressed the Hindoo mind not lightly. It was most gratifying to see how the educated natives of Poonah in this large and attentive audience showed their appreciation of Dr. Pentecost's services, and they gave him a warm invitation to visit them again before leaving the country, tendering their warmest thanks for what he had done."

ALL FOR THE LOVE OF CHRIST.—A comrade of the United States Navy, who did not believe in missions, once told the writer there was one sight which impressed him as the most Christ-like he had ever witnessed. It was a medical missionary, in his dispensary at Singapore, toiling all the morning long with these wretched outcasts in the stifling air of a pest-stricken city, and all for the love of Christ. Against such an exhibition of selfless benevolence no avail can be brought. And the same effect is produced on the native mind. Such a service, so above all that their religions can match, even without precedent or basis in their own experience, is from another world. They are accustomed to see seekers and Europeans as conquerors, as travelers after commercial gain, as pleasure-seekers, or as those who offer them a living demonstration of the Golden Rule, and although using science and art, yet using them under the inspiration of a purpose from on high.

Protestant Contributions to Foreign Missions.

Canon Scott Robertson calculates that the total contributions in Great Britain and Ireland to foreign missions during 1890 were $6,507,895, of which he credits the Church of England with $3,500,000. His apportionment is: Church of England societies, $2,776,690; joint societies of Churchmen and Non-conformists, $1,075,700; English and Welsh Non-conformist societies, $1,658,015; Scottish and Irish Presbyterian societies, $950,590; and Roman Catholic societies, $46,900. The total is $1,365 less than in 1889. The following are the estimates for Europe and America:

Great Britain.....	$6,507,895
United States.....	4,551,237
Canada.....	210,000
Continental Europe.....	1,127,000
Total.....	$12,396,132

—The Gospel in All Lands.

That foreign missionary work has a value which even men of this world can appreciate is shown by the fact that while America, through the American Board, has expended $1,850,000 in fifty years to evangelize Hawaii, she has during that time received $4,000,000 a year in trade. From a worldly point of view this is a magnificent return from the money invested in missionary work. It needs no argument to prove that a people become commercially more valuable to the world at large the higher they are lifted in the scale of civilization. England has found this to be true, for it is stated that her missionary bringing back ten pounds in trade for every pound given to convert the heathen.—Mid-Continent.

ELECTRICITY. CHRISTIANS.—The Christian ought to be so charged with electricity from heaven's dynamo, that under all conditions those who come in contact with him will be speedily aware of that fact. Like the strange force that is pervading our modern mechanics, a Christian's electric energy should be equal, either to a gentle benignant influence, or to a shock of swift destruction. The same element invigorates the physician's patient upon the insulated stool, and kills the condemned murderer in the fatal chair. The Bible calls God both the giver of life and a consuming fire. The true child of God should reveal both these qualities.—Golden Rule.

It is a double evil, some philosopher has said, to be both proud and poor. There is one pride that is easily forgiven, the pride that a girl or woman takes in the possession of profuse and beautiful hair; just as its loss or absence is a poverty that while it may be deplored is not beyond remedy.

There is a preparation used all through the South which has been analyzed by the most expert chemists and found to contain no deleterious substances, nothing that can in any manner injure the hair. On the contrary, it is purely vegetable in its composition, devoid of all caustics, and does not close up the pores, but opens them and stimulates the hair to healthy growth.

Physicians often recommend this preparation, Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, for tetter, salt-rheum, barber's itch, and for diseases of the scalp and hair in general. Wherever it has been tried, it is admitted the best of all restoratives for the hair.

All acknowledge the great danger that attends the promiscuous use of nostrums for the hair. Women especially have often injured what hair they had left by their use. The reliable and entirely beneficial character of this preparation recommends it above all others for toilet use. Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

Without the newspaper great advertisers can not exist. Without the advertiser, great and small (but mainly the small advertisers), the newspaper of to-day would be impossible.—James H. Beatts, Jr.

Prayer is not eloquence, but earnestness; not the definition of helplessness, but the feeling of it; not figures of speech, but conjunction of soul.—H. More.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers is a popular preparation in one bottle, and colors evenly a brown or black. Any person can easily apply it at home.

If I can place one little brick in the pavement of the Lord's path way I will place it there that coming generations may walk thereon to the heavenly oil.—Phillips Brooks.

In this climate use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment for colds, coughs, bronchitis, and catarrh.

The Best I Ever Used.

So says Dr. S. S. Herrick, former secretary of the Louisiana State Board of Health, speaking of Marsden's Pectoral Balm, which he recommends as the best remedy for coughs, croup, colds, bronchitis and sore throat.

Men often go up to a temptation from which they should fly in a self-accident way; and they often fly when they should stand and fight.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or dizziness, all gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. BRIEFS.

Brother pastor, you will do one of the best works you ever did, if during this Conference year you secure a contribution for the cause of missions from every one of your members! Won't you try it?

The great revivals we had all through Mississippi and Louisiana last year ought to make this the best year for missionary collections that we have ever had. Surely a genuine conversion opens a man's purse as well as renews his soul. We confidently look for great collections.

In regard to college endowment President Caudler, of Emory College, gives this pertinent hint:

But our people of moderate and small means must not wait on the tardy generosity of rich men, whose faculties for getting money have devoured their power for giving money. Small gifts often repeated will soon endow our colleges fully. Let all give with glad, willing hearts, and in a very few years the reproach of our educational poverty will have been removed.

We fear that there is something misleading in the way some of our preachers write about the conversions that are made. The epithets, "bright," "happy," "powerful," "genuine," we think are not well used in that connection. These epithets naturally suggest their opposites; and how would it sound to speak of conversions as "dark," "unhappy," "weak," "counterfeit"? Perhaps we had better leave off the qualifying adjective.

A present-day scientist has been making up some figures in regard to the population of the earth and its productions, and how long it will be before the population will be sufficient to consume the products. He estimates the population at 1,468 millions and the total area of the earth in square miles at 46 millions square miles. He estimates that this area is capable of sustaining a population of 5,994 millions of people. Calculating the rate of increase in population in the future the same as it has been in the past, it will be 182 years before there is enough population to consume what the earth can bring forth. We then may rest easy.

We think the most remarkable religious movement of this age is the Salvation Army. As an organization, there is nothing that equals it. As a power for good, the results of its work are simply marvelous. Beginning about twenty-five years ago, the Army has planted its standard in thirty-eight countries, has 4,595 societies, 10,797 officers, 4,000 meeting halls, holds 2,000,000 meetings yearly, visits 2,700,000 homes annually, publishes 27 weekly and 15 monthly journals in 15 languages, and 4,000,000 copies of books and pamphlets, owns $4,000,000 worth of property, has a yearly income of $3,645,000, has a yearly week of self-denial, which last year yielded $200,000, and every day at 12:30 p. m. 1,000,000 Salvationists unite in prayer for the world.

Editorial Correspondence.

On the morning of the fifth instant we left the capital city of Mississippi for a trip down the Illinois Central railroad to New Orleans, up the Northeastern to Meridian, across the Alabama and Vicksburg to Jackson. Whether the trip will be completed according to programme remains to be seen.

Our first stop was at Crystal Springs—in one sense of the word, the garden-spot of the State. The "strawberry king" lives at Madison station, twelve miles north of Jackson; the "tomato kings" at Crystal Springs, twenty-five miles south. We were told by those in a position to know that last year this place shipped more tomatoes than all the rest of the State put together, besides a vast quantity of beans, melons, etc. We heard further that four thousand dollars would not more than cover the cost of canvas alone which had been purchased for cold frames.

Our home was at the hospitable residence of Dr. R. E. Jones, president of the Board of Stewards of that station. In the prosecution of our special work we received all possible aid from the pastor, Bro. Norsworthy. The responses from our subscribers were hearty and cheerful. From conversations with the pastor and others, we learned that the church was in a fine condition. Prayer meetings have quadrupled in size, and quite a number may be depended upon to take part—among them the young men of the church. While the church feels the effect of the financial depression, it has not taken a single backward step, so far as we were able to learn.

From Crystal Springs we went to Hazlehurst. It was Saturday, and we found the streets crowded with vehicles of all kinds and sizes, and the merchants busy. Bro. Cooper has taken hold of things with characteristic vim. In visiting one of his parishioners, who has been sick for several months, we were much gratified to hear the expression, "I think we have the best of pastors; he has never neglected us in all our sickness." Such words of commendation from those so competent to give them, does not only the pastor good, but also the church at large. We were very sorry to learn that the arrangements for a new church had been necessarily suspended, but we trust those good people will soon see their way clear to carry out their designs. While their present building has had an experience, we presume, unparalleled in the State, we think the cause would be greatly helped in the erection of another—and so think the church.

We next visited Terry, the town destroyed by fire a few months ago. While the loss was considerable, going up into the thousands of dollars, the substantial frame and massive brick buildings rapidly rising out of the charred ruins indicate that Terry was not destroyed, only changed her dress.

Bro. Griffin has taken hold of things more like a veteran than a recruit. Although this is his first year, he has shown a zeal and enthusiasm, tempered by such godly judgment, as is rarely found in one so young in the cause. The outlook at Terry is finer, we think, than it has been in years.

From Terry we ran down to Wesson, the great manufacturing town of the State. The Mississippi Mills, located there, have about fourteen hundred operatives, with a pay-roll of about $23,000, and manufacture nearly everything from socks up.

Bro. West met us at the train and conducted us to the parsonage, where we spent the most delightful forty-eight hours. Seated in a buggy behind a black filly that would stand almost anywhere except in the middle of the street, we went from east to west, up and down, looking into matters pertaining to our paper. In our rounds we met two subscribers who have been taking the ADVOCATE nearly ever since its first issue. One of the number was married on the tenth of March, 1842. In 1843 he subscribed for the Nashville Christian Advocate, and soon after for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and for nearly fifty years both have been weekly visitors to his home, except during the interruptions in the sixties.

From Wesson we came to Brookhaven and Summit, and much of interest in both places could be written, but circumstances forbid it at present.

A Counterfeit.

In the early part of last Fall there came a man to this city who said his name was Frederic Stanley. He attended the meetings of the Young Men's Christian Association and made a profession of religion. Shortly afterwards he connected himself with Carondelet Street Methodist Church, and immediately entered upon mission work. He displayed a remarkable talent on this line, and soon had a mission in full blast and flourishing. He seemed to know exactly what sort of work to do, and how to do it. He displayed also a very remarkable acquaintance with Methodist doctrine and usage and history. He had no trouble in securing money for carrying on his mission and helpers for the work. In one thing he failed, owing to the caution of the pastor of Carondelet Church. He tried several times to obtain license to preach from the Quarterly Conference, but the prudence of the pastor postponed that matter. When he came he represented himself as a widower with a son eight years old. He had not been here very long before it was noised abroad that he had become engaged to marry a young lady, member of our church.

Apparently things went on well till last week, when the pastor received a note from him stating that he had received a letter from his wife, whom he thought dead, and he could not face the state of things which such a letter disclosed, and he must leave. As soon as it became known nearly everybody said, "I told you so!" It is thought that he borrowed money from a good many persons, and did not go away empty-handed. We do not know how much he went off with, but that he is a slick, sanctimonious scoundrel there seems to be no doubt. He is a light-haired, blue-eyed, smooth-faced man, weighing about one hundred and fifty pounds; a glib talker, a pretty good musician, a fine elocutionist, well acquainted with Methodism in all its features—indeed, an accomplished scamp. It is now said that his name is John Duffy.

We have written this to warn all who read our paper to beware. He fooled us and, doubtless, will try to fool others.

Mission Work among the Chinese in New Orleans.

One of the most interesting and successful missions in New Orleans is that under the care of Canal Street Presbyterian Church, which is conducted in the interests of the evangelization of the Chinese residents. The mission occupies a commodious raised cottage at No. 40 Liberty street. This building has been purchased by the Canal Street Church for the mission. Though not yet fully paid for, the way is clear.

A visit to the mission elicited the following interesting items: The mission was organized in 1882 through the efforts of Miss Leana Saunders, a cultured and most consecrated member of the Canal Street Presbyterian Church. She is still the energetic superintendent.

The work done is varied. There is an afternoon Sunday-school at three p. m. each Sunday, with an attendance of from fifty to sixty. It is a most interesting study to see this school at work. Every teacher has one scholar only—hence, a necessary method insures thoroughness. Besides this, there is a prayer meeting conducted by the Chinese in their own language at 6:30, Sunday evening. The attendance at this meeting ranges from ten to twenty. There is also a regular night school conducted during the week.

There is a circle of "King's Sons" among the Chinese, which is doing a good work. They raise $36 annually for the support of a Bible reader in China. They do a good work through their several committees. A Lookout Committee finds the new arrivals from China and invites them to the mission. There are other committees—such as visiting the sick, helping to emigrate, etc.—The Chinese have raised $781 towards the payment of the debt on the mission building. Besides this, they have raised other money for the work in China.

Better than all this, thirty-two have been converted and about twenty-five are now communicants of the Canal Street Church. This work is prospering greatly. God's blessing is manifestly present. In the parlor of the mission are many gifts, testimonials of regard and gratitude, from those who have been led into the light of the gospel. This work exhibits the practical effect of Christianity on these people. Go and see the work and workers. May God bless this mission and those who labor there in Word of life!

Inwrought Prayer.

The meaning of James v, 16, is very incorrectly given in the Authorized Version: "The effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much." If prayer is effectual, of course it avails much. There must be some other meaning than this tautology.

The Revised Version is farther from the seed-thought of the text: "The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working." How else could supplication avail except in its working? "In its working" would indicate that there were several words without grammatical connection with "supplication," whereas they are from one word, which qualifies "supplication," and agrees with it in gender, number and case.

It seems plain that the mind of the Spirit is not given in either of these translations. The word rendered in the Authorized Version, "effectual, fervent," and in the Revised, "in its working," is compounded of "in" and a form of the verb derived from the noun meaning "work." It occurs many times in the New Testament, and in almost all cases is rendered "work or wrought," and oftener by "work in" or "wrought in." For instance, Gal. ii, 8: "For he that wrought effectually in Peter, the same was mighty in me." Eph. ii, 2: "The Spirit that now worketh in us." Phil. ii, 13: "God which worketh in you, both to will and to do." Col. i, 29: "According to his working which worketh in me mightily."

Now, if the text were rendered according to this meaning of the word, it would stand, "The inwrought prayer of the righteous man availeth much," and would teach not only the power of prayer, but also, and chiefly, the kind of prayer that is most effectual. Hammond, in translating the passage, simply anglicizes the Greek compound, "energized." "The supplication of a righteous man when energized by the Holy Ghost availeth much." When God is the inspirer of prayer, or works it in the heart, it is always effectual. The reference to Elijah's prayer in the context is to the point. It was God that put it into the heart of Elijah to pray for rain. God said to Elijah, "Go, show thyself to the earth." Elijah obeyed and had that remarkable triumph over the prophets of Baal. Then he told Ahab that there was "a sound of abundance of rain." "So Ahab went up to eat and to drink." But not so Elijah; he "went up to the top of Carmel and cast himself down upon the earth and put his face between his knees." He sent his servant the first time; "Go and look to the sea." He went, up and said, "There is nothing." The second time, the third time, even to the seventh time, the mighty energizings of the Spirit threw him upon his face and wrought in his heart the unuttered groanings. Then came the answer. First the cloud like a man's hand arising out of the sea, then the heavens black with clouds, and wind, and the great rain.

This is the kind of prayer we need; this is the kind to be effectual. Doubtless, all Christians have realized how much easier it is to pray at some times than at others, and for some blessings rather than for others. The reason is that sometimes they are in a more favorable state for guidance of the Spirit, and that there are some blessings which he more earnestly desires us to receive and to bestow. When one lives so near to God as to have him direct his mind to the proper subjects of prayer, and then to work in him so mightily that he will continue in prayer and continue in an agony of prayer, such prayers are always answered, and such prayers are always a power in the land.

The Missionary Debt.

MR. EDITOR: In your last issue there appeared an article headed, "The Missionary Debt," written by Bro. J. M. Weems, which I was glad to see. I usually make no correction in regard to what I am represented as saying or doing as they appear in print. Life is too short to be spent in that way; but for a purpose I wish to correct the article which says, "It was very kind in Bishop Keener and others to offer to be one of so many to pay that debt," etc. Bro. Weems will please excuse me; I never make an offer to be "one of so many" to do anything; or to do so much if some one else will do as much more. I offered to pay $100 toward liquidating the "missionary debt," and I have paid it. It is well to go forward and do one's duty and not look behind to see who is coming. If that column, "The Missionary Debt," had been started at the time I suggested, in our several Advocates, it would have swelled to many thousands by this time. The necessity is upon us as much as ever to raise $100,000 for the debt.

Mississippi State Sunday-School Convention.

We call attention to a communication which appears in this issue of the paper from the Executive Committee of the Mississippi State Sunday-school Convention. This convention meets in Oxford, Miss., April 26, 27 and 28, 1892. The question has been raised as to whether we, as Methodists, should take an active part in these conventions, as our Discipline provides for conventions in each presiding elder's district, at least, once a year. The reasoning which would deter us from joining in this work would also hold back the Baptists, as they occupy the fifth Sundays of the year in holding similar meetings. These conventions are interdenominational, and should be participated in by all Protestants.

The fact was brought out at the convention which met in Greenville, last Spring, that one half the children of the State were out of the Sunday-school. Surely we should lend our hearty support to so laudable an enterprise which has for its object the reclamation of the youth of our land. From the announcement, a rich feast is in store for all who attend this one.

NOTES.

A poor man may be as mean and selfish as a rich one, but he does not have the power to do as much harm.

"In five years there will not be a Bible in America." That is what one Thos. Paine said! What a prophet!

To gratify ourselves at the expense of the gratification of others has very little of the spirit of Christ about it. "He pleased not himself." That sort of action is a good preparation for one's own downfall.

"Whenever God finds a man he can trust with money, it doesn't take him long to fill all his pockets."

If that is true, then how few there are whom God can trust! If it is true, then what curious people he does trust!

We are sure if every reader of the ADVOCATE will ponder the following paragraph from the Sunday-School Times, good will result to every one:

Forgetting the things that are behind is sometimes a duty, and sometimes it is a great mistake. The man who has no remembrance of his mistakes as mistakes, and of his sins as sins, and of his experiences and attainments as experiences and attainments, might as well never have lived through all the years that are gone. Yet it is a man's plain duty to forget the things that are behind, in the sense of turning away from old enjoyments and old temptations and old hindrances, so as not to be kept from steady progress and ever-fresh hope in his course. But before turning away from any mistake or misfortune, or cause of bitter regret, a man should find out the one practical lesson that that experience has best taught him. Every incident of life, whether it be good or evil, has its practical lesson to us; and he who fails to perceive that lesson in any case has lived in vain through that phase of his life course.

In the early church, when it seemed to be the general opinion that the preachers should take charge of the temporalities, they said: "No; it is not fit that we should forsake the word of God and serve tables. Choose ye out proper men for this business, and let us continue steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the Word." And so they did, and "the word of God increased and the number of the disciples multiplied exceedingly." We fear there is too much disposition nowadays to burden the preachers with the temporalities of the church. Such action is not only a disadvantage to the preachers, but it is a serious obstacle to church progress. A preacher is not called to that work. If he is engaged in anything that hinders his giving himself "continually to prayer and the ministry of the Word," though it be a laudable thing, he will find himself hampered, and his work will not progress with that freedom and power of movement which characterizes the genuine work of God. Therefore let the church everywhere take the temporalities out of the preachers' hands, and we will again see the word of God increasing and the disciples multiplying exceedingly.

Mr. Spurgeon was sometimes subject to great depression, but nothing weighed him down so heavily as the thought that his orphans might be left destitute. On his return once from Menton, he met his deacons to see how it fared with the orphanage. "You must work another miracle, gentlemen," said one of the deacons; "for we have now only a balance of £500." "Let us ask God for the money that we want," replied Mr. Spurgeon. They knelt round the table, and prayed. "Now," said Mr. Spurgeon, when they had again resumed their seats, "let me see what we can do ourselves." He drew a piece of paper to him, and wrote down £500 on it and passed the paper to his nearest neighbor. When it had gone round the table it contained promises for £500.

"I went home that night," said Mr. Spurgeon, "as if my heart would break." As he was crossing the hall, he heard a knock at the door. He heard his man saying, "No one can see the master to-night," and then he heard a gentleman's voice saying, "I have come a long way to see you. I promised when in India to give seven hundred pounds to your orphanage, and I have brought you the money." The next morning the first letter opened by Mr. Spurgeon contained a like amount, and "said he," when telling the story, "I was once more in the third heaven."—William Wright, D. D., in Sunday-School Times.

HOME LIFE.

HOW WONDERFUL!

BY FRANCES HUBLEY DAYKROGAL.

He answered all my prayer abundantly, And crowned the work that to his feet I brought, With blessing more than I had asked or thought—
A blessing undiminished, and full, and free: I stood amazed, and whispered: "Can it be? That he hath granted all the boon I sought? How wonderful that he for me hath wrought!"
How wonderful that he hath answered me! "O faithless heart!" He said that he would hear, And answer thy poor prayer; and he hath heard
And proved his promise. Wherefore didst thou fear? Why marvel that thy Lord hath kept his word?
More wonderful if he should fail to bless Expectant faith and prayer with good success.

Pillow Prayers.

He who knows nothing of pillow prayers is ignorant of one of the sweetest modes of prayer practicable on earth. The day with its engagements being gone, it is a most favorable time for the gathering in of our thoughts upon ourselves—our sins, our wants, fears, and hopes, and then turning them up towards heaven. This is what the Psalmist is apparently referring to in his words, "When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate upon thee in the night watches." That he uttered many a pillow prayer is a thousandfold more than probable. "I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night." "I prevented the dawning of the morning and cried." These cries were prayers before the dawning of the day.

If these prayers of the pillow, however, be gotten only of sheer evening sloth, we may say to them that they are "baptized, and not sons." But if they are the legitimate children of weakness, excessive weariness, sickness and other similar circumstances, then they are of the true house and lineage of heaven coming down in kinship all the way from Bethel, where the overladen Jacob had his angelic vision on his pillow of stone.

Levelling, with your eyes so often beld waking in the night season, distrust not the pillow prayers. Hundreds are constantly climbing to heaven, by them, as on a ladder. If you, perchance, fall asleep in the act, do not fret about it. For what ope from the shop of the apothecary is so harmless as such an outbreathing of your holiest desire? What sweeter than to lose yourself in such a prayer? For prayer is simply a form of thought toward God, and nothing can be more fitting to the very last moments of daily consciousness than such thoughts.—McLeod.

INFLUENCE.—How great our silent influence! We daily meet our fellow-beings, and they are being influenced for good or evil by what we say, by what we do and by what we are. A bunch of fragrant flowers in the parlor will soon saturate the atmosphere of the entire room. And we can no more prevent our influence going out than the flower can prevent its fragrance. You make a striking remark this morning in the presence of little boys, and that will be fresh in their minds for fifty years! The fact of your wedding your way every Lord's day to the house of prayer, though you speak not to anyone by the way, will soon make an impression on the mind of every rational person who observes you. If your neighbors regard you as a good man—and they will if you are good—you will soon have a secret magic power over them. And it does not require, in order to be influential, that we have great talents, great wealth and great oratorical power. Moses was the meekest man of his generation; John the Baptist was raised in obscurity; Paul was often in abject want of the commonest blessings of every-day life; and these men exerted the greatest influence of any men in their day. And on important items, it is our influence does not die with us, but it goes on, for good or evil, according as we have lived, after we shall have passed away. Paul and Paine are dead, but they are exerting wider influences now than when they lived. And can we afford, in our short probationary state, to sow a crop of evil, which will thrive and bloom, and bring forth a crop after we are gone?—Selected.

LESSON FROM A CHILD.—God often uses a little child to teach some very needed and wholesome lessons to grown-up Christians. Here is one, from Johnny Sim, seven years old, and fast passing away with consumption. In his home in Scotland, years ago. Just before his death he said to his parents: "I am going, soon, to be with Jesus; but I sometimes fear that I may not see you there." The tearful mother asked: "Why so, my child?" His reply was: "Because, if you were set upon going to heaven, and seeing Jesus there, you would pray about it and sing about it. You would talk about Jesus to others, and tell them of that happy meeting with him in glory. All this my dear Sabbath-school teacher taught me, and she will meet me there. Now, why did not you, my father and mother, tell me all these things about Jesus, if you are going to meet him, too?" The effect of this plain and faithful talk of little Johnny was deeply impressive upon the sad hearts of his parents. It was a lesson not soon to be forgotten. There is a philosophy in it, which can not be lightly dismissed. It puts the truth with a logical accuracy, which would do credit to a much older person well skilled in the art of reasoning. Sure enough, if we were set upon going to heaven, and seeing Jesus there, we would be very apt to "pray about it and sing about it." And we would also be apt to "talk about Jesus to others." Shall we take this lesson home to our hearts and practice its logical truths?—C. H. Wetherbe, in Interior.

HEAVEN BEGUN.—It is said of an old Puritan that heaven was in him before he was in heaven. That is necessary for all of us: we must have heaven in us before we get into heaven. If we never get to heaven before we die, we shall never get there afterwards. An old Scotchman was asked whether he ever expected to get to heaven? "Why, man, I live there," was the quaint reply. Let us all live in those spiritual things which are the essential features of heaven. Often go there before you go to stay there. If you come down to-morrow morning knowing and realizing that heaven is yours, and that you will soon be there, those children will not worry you half so much. When you go out to your business or to your work, you will not be half so discontented when you know that this is not your rest, but that you have a rest on the hills eternal, whither your heart has already gone, and that there your portion is in the everlasting dwellings. "Lay hold on eternal life." Get a hold of it now. It is a thing of the future, and is a thing of the present; and even your part of it is that you can be, by faith, so realized and grasped as to be actually enjoying while you are yet here.—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Golden Gate of Love.

Every child walks to existence through the golden gate of love, else it would seem wonderful that the helpless thing should be born. Yet children are not playthings, as we too often seem to think they are—mere gifts of God to fill up the hours with cheer. They were surely meant to be a pleasure to us, but that is not the final end. Nor were they meant to be care and burdens alone. To speak of them as if they were shackles and fetters upon our freedom, always in this way, "children, children, everywhere," is a shame and a sin. They are to be regarded as a part of our education. Men can not be developed perfectly who have not been compelled to bring children up to manhood. You might as well say that a tree is a perfect tree without leaf or blossom, as to say that a man is a man who has gone through life without experiencing the influences that come from tending down, and giving one's self up to those who are helpless and little.

Children make men better citizens. When your own child comes in from the street, and has learned to swear from the boys congregated there, it is a very different thing to you from what it was when you heard the profanity of those boys as you passed them. Now it makes you feel that you are a stockholder in the public morality. Of what use would an engine be to a ship if it were lying loose in a hull? It must be fastened to it with bolts and screws, before it can propel the vessel. Now, a childless man is like a loose engine. A man must be bolted and screwed to the community before he can work well for its advancement; and there are no such screws and bolts as children.—Henry Ward Beecher.

A SPOILED CHILD.—A spoiled child is a child spoiled for life. A man may struggle against himself, he may gain strength of character, he may in some degree overcome many of the difficulties and temptations which are the legacy of his parents and others who have spoiled him.

To spoil really means to flay; to strip; hence to take away that which naturally belongs to one—to pilage or rob. A spoiled child, therefore, a child despoiled or plundered; a child robbed of his moral possessions and his rights. A child thus despoiled can not in after years get back what he has lost. The loss to childhood can not be made good by refunding manhood. Whatever the superstructure may be, the flaw in the foundation will always be a flaw and a weakness in the building. Every day that was so spoiling a child, we go on robbing him of God's gifts to him. A parent often speaks of a child's being "a little spoiled," as though that were an evidence of parental affection. But is it after all, when the consequences show themselves in character, regrets, and sorrows, a good parent sees that a better exhibition of affection would have been to study that course which should have spared the child these very consequences. And any parent ought to look far enough ahead to spare his child from such moral robbery.—Sunday-School Times.

HEALTHY GIRLS.—It is impossible to imagine a pleasant home with a cross wife, mother or sister, as its presiding genius. And it is a rule, with exceptions, that good appetites and sound sleep induce amiability. It is with these advantages, a girl or woman, boy or man, is still amiable and sunny, why it must be due to her or his total depravity. And as yet this soundness of body is one of the things to be aimed at and striven for, and the young girl, ever conscious as she should not be of lack, and throat, and head, and nerves, wishes she knew how to be beautiful and healthy. Some things she should not do; she should not doze herself, or study her nose, or plunge suddenly into vigorous exercise. Moderation is a safe rule to begin with, and indeed to keep on with. Moderation in study, in work, in exercise, in everything except fresh air, good simple food and sleep. The average girl at home can find no more sanitary gymnastics than in doing part of the lighter house work. This sort of exercise has object and interest in use, which raises it above mere drill. And to this a merry romp with younger brothers and sisters, a brisk daily walk, the use for a few moments twice a day of dumb-bells in a cool airy room, and it tends to predict a steady advance toward that ideal state of being in which we forget our bodies and just enjoy ourselves.—The Examiner.

AMOUNT OF SLEEP REQUIRED.—Sleep is the principal agent in body recuperation. The amount needed is different for different persons. For the ordinary worker from six to eight hours is necessary; yet how often, is the battle for existence, is the desire for sleep forcibly suppressed and the night's rest foolishly shortened. Sooner or later insomnia wrecks its vengeance on the physiological system. Many a person who once robbed himself of the necessary amount of sleep would now gladly sleep, but can not. Many nerve troubles first develop into disease when joined with sleeplessness. It appears as a symptom of a long-standing nervous disturbance, but to many it appears as the first signs of disorders, when it is only a result of causes in operation long before. The man or woman who willingly robs himself of sleep for a very long period continuously, wastes what is more precious than gold. He will not go far wrong who sandwiches eight hours of sleep between the day; and if he loses a little now and then, in any and make it up at some other time.—Herald of Health.

AN OBJECT LESSON.—The younger members of the family of one of my friends had fallen into the way of using many senseless phrases. With them everything was "awfully sweet," "awfully funny," or "awfully" something else. One evening this gentleman came home with a bucket of news. An acquaintance had fallen in business. He spoke of the incident as "do-liciously sad." He had ridden up town in the car with a noted wit, whom he described as "horribly entertaining."

The young people stared, and the eldest daughter said: "Why, papa, I should think you were out of your head."

"Not in the least, my dear," he said, pleasantly. "I'm merely trying to follow the fashion. I mean to keep up with the rest of you hereafter. And now," he exclaimed, "let me help you to a piece of this exquisitely tough beef!"

Adverts are not so fashionable as they were in his family.—Boston Post.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

Which shall it be, lads? which shall it be? God, or the devil, bond or free? Will you boldly and cheerily take your stand With the chosen few, with the noble band, Who are steadily doing all they can For God, and the right, and fallen man? Or will you sink, debased and blind, To herd with the ruck of humes kind? God, or the devil, bond or free— Which shall it be, lads? which shall it be? Which shall it be? The home life sweet, Gay with the patter of thy feet; Or the squalid-tap room, grimy and grim, The druekard's curse, or the children's hymn? Wrecked lives, or the strength that never flees, Peace and plenty, or ruin and rage? Bible or beer-bop, bond or free— Which shall it be, lads? which shall it be? Which shall it be? Two paths lie there— The right leads upward, the left, ah! where? Others may give you counsel true, But the choice, dear lads, is for you, for you! And remember now in your boyhood's prime, Is the turning point and the seedling time: The boy's bent back, or the saint's bent knee— Which shall it be, lads? which shall it be?—Selected.

To Boys Commencing Business.

Be on hand promptly in the morning at your place of business, and make it a point never to be late, and perform cheerily every duty. Be respectful to your employers and to all in authority over you, and be polite to everyone. Politeness costs nothing, and it will help you wonderfully in getting along in the world. And above all, be honest and truthful. The boy who starts in life with sound mind in a sound body, who falls into no bad habits, who is honest, truthful, and industrious, who remembers with grateful love his father and mother, and who does not grow away from his church and Sunday-school, has qualities of mind and heart that will insure him success to a degree, even though he is endowed with only ordinary mental capacity; for honesty, truth, and industry are more than genius. Don't be topshy in your dress, and don't buy anything before you have the money to pay for it. Shun billiard saloons, and be careful how you spend the evenings. Cultivate a taste for reading, and read only good books. With a love for reading, you will find in books friends ever true and full of cheer in time of gloom; and sweet companionship for lonely hours. Other friends may grow cold and forsake you, but books are always the same. And in closing, boys, I would say again, that with truth, honesty, and industry, and living faith in God, you will succeed.

Lonely and shame from no condition rise; Act well your part; there all the honor lies.—Christian at Work.

A Sermon on Push.

When Cousin Will was at home for vacation, the boys always expected to have plenty of fun. The last felle before he went back to his studies was a long tramp along in high glee, they came open a discouraged-looking man and a discouraged-looking child. The cart was standing before an orchard. The man was trying to pull it up hill to his own house. The boys did not wait to be invited, but ran to help with a good will. "Push! push!" was the cry.

The man brightened up; the cart trundled as fast as rheumatism would let it, and in five minutes they all stood panting at the top of the hill. "Obliged to ye," said the man. "You just wait a minute, and he huffed into the house, while two or three pink-rouged children peeped out of the door.

"Now, boys," said Cousin Will, "this is a small thing, but I wish we could all take a motto out of it, and keep it for life. 'Push!' It is just the word for a grand, clear morning.

"If anybody is in trouble, and you see it, don't stand back—push."

"Whenever there's a kind thing, a pleasant thing, whether it's your own or not, whether it is at home or in town, at church or at school, just help with all your might—push!"—The Christian Commonwealth.

Her Bargain.

The following true story is told in the "Journal of Emily Shore":
A little girl near us was one day playing before the house, when a woman appeared and begged a few pence. She had a baby in her arms, and the child was so delighted with the little thing that she asked the woman if she would sell it to her.

"What will you give for it, miss?" was the counter question.
"Half a crown."

"Very well," said the woman; "let's see the money."

It was produced, and the sale made. The little girl took the baby, carried it up stairs and laid it on her bed, and after she had found it "enough for once," scampered down stairs, called for her mother.

"Mama, mama! I've got a live doll! I always wanted one, and now I've got it!"

The baby was found and the story frankly told, but though the beggar woman was sought all over the town, no trace of her could be discovered. Meanwhile the baby's little "owner" begged so hard that it should be kept that the parents yielded, and the living doll became a household blessing.

The Wonders of the Sun.

In any reference to the physical history of the sun, the stupendous magnitude of its sphere must be kept vividly in mind. With a diameter 109 times larger than that of the earth, the solar orb looks out into space from a surface that is twelve thousand times larger than the one which the earth enjoys. The bulk of the sun is one million three hundred thousand times that of the earth. If the surface of the sun were a thin external rind or shell, and the earth were placed in the middle of this hollow sphere, not only would the moon have space to circle in its usual orbit without ever getting outside of the solar shell, but there would be room also for a second satellite, nearly as far again as the moon, to accomplish a similar course. The weight of the sun is three hundred thousand times the weight of the earth; or, in round numbers, two thousand millions of millions of millions of millions of tons. The mean distance of the sun from the earth is now so well ascertained, through investigations which have been made in several distinct ways, that there is scarcely he in the estimate an error of 500,000 miles.

The distance at the present time given is 92,855,000 miles. This measure is in itself so vast that, if any traveler were to move at the rate of four miles an hour for ten hours a day, it would take him 5,300 years to reach the sun. Sound would traverse the interval, if there were any, in less than a second.

A curious illustration attributed to Professor Meadenhall is to the effect that an infant, with an arm long enough, were stretched out from the earth to reach the sun, would die of old age before it would become conscious, through the transmission of the nervous impression from the hand to the brain, that it had hurt its fingers. In order that the earth, thus mortgaged round the sun with a chain of 93,000,000 miles of intervening space between them, may not be drawn to the sun by the preponderant attraction of its 330,000 times larger mass, it has to shoot forward in its path with a momentary velocity fifty times more rapid than that of the swiftest rifle ball. But in moving through twenty miles out of a straight line by something less than the eighth part of an inch.

This deviation is properly the source from which the amount of the solar attraction has been ascertained. If the earth were suddenly arrested in its onward flight, and its momentum were in that way destroyed, it would be drawn to the sun by the irresistible force of its attraction in four months, or in the twenty-seventh part of that time which a cannon ball would take to complete the same journey.—Ames.

Wonderful Piece of Mechanism.

Hermen Jacobs, a carpenter of Bunzlau, Prussia, has been credited with constructing a wonderful piece of mechanism representing in several successive scenes the Passion of the Savior. All the actors in the grand impressive drama are carved from wood, and are each about six inches in height. The machinery runs by clockwork, and enacts the various parts three times at each winding. The panorama first unfolded is a beautiful garden with the figure of Jesus kneeling in prayer amidst the trees, figures of the three sleeping Apostles being plainly describable in the distance. As the machinery warms up, the wheel and the figures move more rapidly, quickly unfolding the last scenes in the earthly career of Jesus, the last supper, the betrayal, the remorseful look which comes over the face of Jesus when he first realizes the extent of his crime, the examination of Jesus before Caiaphas, the dialogue between Pilate and the Jews—all fill before the gaze in a manner so astonishingly life-like and real as to make one almost believe himself at Calvary. After the sentence has been pronounced a figure of Jesus with the cross appears. The cross is mechanically erected, while the little figures busy themselves in binding the figure to be nailed upon it. Ladders are run up to the arms of the cross, a little figure slips quietly over the rungs, then there is a sound of hammers as two figures hold the one that is being nailed to the cross by the two figures on ladders. At last when all is thought to be finished a figure on horseback slides across the platform, draws his sword, and thrusts it into the side of the figure on the cross. The last scene represents Jesus in the sepulchre with angels guarding the remains. Mr. Adams, in his "Letters on Science," says: "It is the most remarkable piece of mechanism I have ever seen. The traitor's kiss, the scourging, the nailing to the cross, the sponge of vinegar, and every seeming plain incident of occasion feelings which can not be felt at a mere description."—Architect and Building.

CHANGES IN THE SUN.—But we can not rest with the assumption that, since the sun is evidently no Mira and no Sirius, therefore it is practically an unchanging radiator which for an indefinite period will continue to cause the earth to bloom in the beneficent effluence of its life-giving rays. A sun may affect the welfare of its planets either through the gradual mutations which it undergoes in the course of its evolution, or through the more rapid and violent changes that characterize the stars that are ranked as variable. We have seen that most of these latter belong to the third and fourth classes, but there is reason to suspect that the majority of all the stars are variable to a slight degree, and evidence of variability in the case of the sun is furnished by the phenomena of sun-spots. A spectator, viewing the sun from a distant point in space, would perceive that its brilliancy was slightly increased once in about every eleven years. These accessions of light should correspond, not with the periods of lowest spots, but with those of most spots, because the energy of the sun's radiation is greatest during the spot maxima. At present a sun-spot maximum is approaching, and since last winter the face of the sun has frequently exhibited startling indications of the tremendous disturbances now affecting the solar globe. Our imaginary observer in space would probably behold at the present time a very slight increase in the sun's brilliancy, and this increase may go on for three or four years to come. While we, dwelling upon a globe that is bathed in the sun's rays, may be unable to perceive these variations directly, yet their effects have long been recognized by the changes that they produce in terrestrial magnetism. It is also highly probable that a perceptible influence upon the weather is exercised by variations in solar radiation corresponding with the presence or absence of sun-spots.—Popular Science Monthly.

Ask your doctor what happens to cod-liver oil when it gets inside of you. He will say it is shaken and broken up into tiny drops, becomes an emulsion; there are other changes, but this is the first.

He will tell you also that it is economy to take the oil broken up, as it is in Scott's Emulsion, rather than burden yourself with this work. You skip the taste too.

OBITUARIES.

PAVE—Died at Ramsey, Harrison county, Miss., Jan. 21, 1892, Mrs. Susan Davis, widow of Samuel Davis, of Amerius, Jackson county, Miss., aged ninety-one years and thirteen days. She was a native of North Carolina, from whence she removed with her parents (William and Sarah Godd) to Jackson county, Miss. In 1818, where she married and spent her life until her husband's death, when she removed to her daughter's, at Ramsey, Miss., where she spent the remaining twenty-three years of her life; which were years of usefulness and suffering. But the Lord was her comfort and support through all her sufferings.

She was a good wife, a good neighbor, and the very best of mothers. Her children rise up and call her blessed. She had been a member of the Methodist Church and an earnest, self-sacrificing Christian for seventy years. She could always testify to an experimental religion. Her main object in life seemed to be to do good to the souls and bodies of others. There will be some who read this who will remember the words of comfort, encouragement and advice that she has spoken to them in bygone days.

I feel very sure she will have many bright stars in her crown. From 1821 to 1863 she and her husband were some of the main-stays and supporters of the church and ministry in the community where they lived. The minister and his family always found a home with her. For fifty years she kept a free tent at old Salem Camp Ground, Jackson county, Miss. Eternity alone will reveal the good she has done.

She visited the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and administered to their wants. In all the relations of life she was a true, unselfish Christian. She loved her Bible. It was her daily companion, and as long as she could see to read she never neglected it, and in her last years of suffering she could lie on her bed and read passage after passage of Scripture. The 103rd Psalm was one she often quoted from, and her soul was always going out in prayer and thanksgiving. She loved singing. Many a time have we quitted her in her sufferings by singing the old songs she loved in her youth.

On the last day we could often hear her whisper:

"Blessed Jesus, gentle Lamb, in thy gracious hands I am."

She was the mother of thirteen children. Seven daughters survive her. She tried to bring up her children for the Lord. She lived to see her great-grandchildren. She leaves one hundred and twenty living descendants; and if they all follow her precept and example, they will meet her where there is no more suffering.

TERRY—Died near Kirkwood, Madison county, Miss., Jan. 1, 1892, Mrs. EMERLINE R. TERRY, oldest daughter of Col. Daniel and Temperance S. Kluber.

The subject of this memoir was born in Kentucky. Her parents moved to Hinds county, Miss., when she was quite small, where they remained two years. From thence they moved to Thomaston, Miss. Sister Terry completed her education at Sharon Female Academy, Madison county. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1845. On Dec. 21, of same year, she was happily married to S. D. Terry, who has been for many years a noted and useful minister of the gospel in the focal sphere, residing near Thomaston, Miss. Nine children blessed this happy marriage—all of whom lived to be grown. She breathed her last just as the old year was dying, and entered upon a happy new year in the city of God; thus summing up a life of forty-eight years with her devoted husband at the old homestead. Her span of life was sixty-six years eleven months and six days.

Sister Terry was highly esteemed by all who knew her. She was richly endowed, mentally and physically. Intelligent and prepossessing, graceful and cheerful, she was always a reliable and helpful companion. Thorough and suffering were always cheered and strengthened by her ministrations. Her neighbors will miss her; her children, for whom she lived and labored, will miss her; but to the stricken husband, bowed down with age and grief, this sore affliction is sad indeed. But "earth has no sorrow that God can not cure." So we point the bereaved to that solace which he alone can give.

"She is only resting now, and waiting. Soon, very soon, there will be a joyful reunion in the city above."

MCKENZIE—Miss ANNA ISABELLE MCKENZIE was born in Clarke county, Miss., May 10, 1870, and died at her father's home, near Melvin, Ala., Jan. 10, 1892. She was wounded the night of the "Slime massacre" in this county (Choctaw), Wednesday night before Christmas. She was a patient sufferer for twenty-four days, when God released her from her pain. It was the writer's pleasure to visit her in her dying hours. She was ready and willing to obey the summons of death. She was loved by all who knew her.

A. C. FLOWERS.

YOUNG—MARTHA L. YOUNG died in St. Helena parish, Feb. 5, 1892, aged forty-one years. She was a conscientious Baptist. I learn from a brother who visited her during her last hours that Christ crucified was emphatically her hope, trust and confidence. She believed the atonement was provided by the mercy of the Father; that that mercy might reach us with all its pardoning fullness; so that God appears the most just when he exercises the richest mercy, and is arrayed in the brightest glory when he forgives the chief of sinners through the blood of Jesus.

Christ died in our stead, the Holy One in room of the unholy, that we might be clothed with his glorious righteousness. Sister Young was fully persuaded that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin; that in him, end through him alone, we have forgiveness of sin. Blessed truths are these! We do not ascend to heaven by the steps man may construct, nor purchase eternal life by a "draft on the lundred merit or virtue" of any church ordinance whatever. "It is the blood—meketh atonement for the soul." There is but one process of salvation revealed to man, viz: Repentance for sin, through conviction wrought by the Holy Spirit, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. By this process "whoever will, let him take the water of life freely." "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Bereaved ones, look through your tears and see the mansion in your Father's house. Hear the music of the gospel, "It is I; be not afraid." Fear not death, for I have taken away its sting; fear not eternally, for the Lamb is its light, and I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," and enter by the gate to the holy city built by the blood of love.

METHODIST.

LONG—In November, 1871, a lovely spirit left the immortal Creator's hand and came to earth to gladden the hearts and brighten the lives of many mortals of earth. For twenty beautiful years the lovely life of LILLIE LONG was a gentle benediction to her best and dearest, and a noble example to all with whom her pathway intermingled.

On Nov. 13, 1891, after two brief decades of human existence, this fair young girl calmly closed her eyes on earth to open them, we feel assured, in the summer-land of God.

During her last illness she seemed impressed with the fact that God would soon bear her away to her eternal home. She expressed no fear of the grim, dark valley of death. The Savior of her child-like faith walked beside her, and her gaze seemed fastened on the bright and beautiful heights, where God is the light thereof. With her grief-stricken mother Lillie calmly conversed concerning her departure from earth, and sweetly asserted her readiness to obey the entire will of God. She selected the songs she wished her choir associates to sing when her lifeless form should lie before the altar in the little West End Church, so tenderly loved. At length the summons came. On Nov. 14, 1891, her earthly form was quietly laid to rest on the sloping hillside of Rose Hill Cemetery, in the city of Meridian. There her lifeless clay is resting; but her immortal soul is hasting amid the hills and vales of God's own beautiful Eden.

Twenty beautiful years, and this lovely human flower is plucked ere fullest perfection is reached. Only twenty years; but there remains a sweet and tender memory that can never fade. Since pure Lillie's death two of her loved ones, a little brother and sister, have joined the church of Christ, and surely the influence of this departed dear one will ever be to her nearest and best a guiding hand, leading heavenward.

OWEN—Died, Miss MATTIE MAY OWEN, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. and M. E. Owen, who live near Marianna, Ark.

Miss May was staying with her sister, Mrs. Helen Rainey, in Lula, Miss., in attendance at school. She took sick Jan. 12, 1892, and suffered nineteen days with that fearful disease, typhoid fever. The spirit left the body Sunday evening, Jan. 31, 1892, at 5:40 o'clock. She was the youngest of three sisters; bright and sprightly in mind, beautiful in character, much loved by all who knew her; and her father, mother and sisters perfectly devoted to her. Her school-mates were made very sad by her death. At 4 o'clock, Monday evening, her mortal remains were laid to rest in the Barbee Graveyard, to await the resurrection morn.

May we all so live that we may meet in that glad day to part no more! W. M. YOUNG.

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cyrennot P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Parle's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a small bottle of it. I gave it to my wife, who was suffering with a cough and cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, though I would try it. Six bottles cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it as all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1892.

WHOLE NO. 1854.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. LEWIS, Asst. Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH-MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, Holly Springs station, North Mississippi Conference: "We have received eight by letter and in profession up to date. Have made pastoral visits since Conference. Our prayer meetings are well attended, and congregations are large on Sunday. Malone College is doing well."

Rev. M. L. Burton, McComb City, Miss., Feb. 18: "Quite an amount of sickness; some fatal. Sister Lynn was buried recently. She died in peace. Our congregations have been very good. Sunday-school moving on nicely. Prayer meetings right well attended. Received twenty-one members; dismissed two. Twenty-three ADVOCATES taken; six new ones. We hope to be able to report a revival of pure religion this year."

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Bolivar, Miss., Feb. 22: "This charge is well organized, and has gone to work in earnest to repair both church and parsonage. The Epworth League is a power for good. We are wrestling night and day for every soul committed to our care. We have everything at heart could wish to make us happy—a loyal, praying people, and in omnipotent God to help. You may expect good things this year. God is with us in power. The people are intelligent; therefore, read and love the ADVOCATE."

W. E. Rutledge, "Eagle Pass, Texas, is a mission charge of the M. E. Church, South, and an important place. Our church needs help here badly. We can not do the work that needs to be done without help. To my preacher or layman who will send me seventy-five cents, I will send THE ADVOCATE for one year, and will give fifty cents of the seventy-five to our parsonage enterprise here. The ADVOCATE is an eight-page monthly, worth seventy-five cents a year. Two thousand subscribers will build us a nice parsonage, and you will get nothing, for the paper is well worth the money."

Rev. J. D. Newsom, Sparta circuit, North Mississippi: "On the first Sunday after the adjournment of Conference I began my work. The people expected a change of preachers, though I was known to none of them, and had been heard of but little. I was received with a cordial welcome, perhaps never surpassed. If ever equalled, by any people in two score years of service and change. Their response to my necessities surpassed anything they had ever done for a previous pastor at the first quarterly meeting. This indicates an advance, the momentum of which had been given before this past year was, in the least, known to them. We have one country Sunday-school, not situated in town or village, but in a country church, surrounded by a native forest. Through all this severe winter it never failed to meet on any Sunday, and has maintained an average attendance of forty."

Rev. W. H. Sanders, Eldon circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "Our first quarterly meeting was held at this place on Saturday, Feb. 20, with a good representation of all the officials in the charge, with two exceptions. Bro. Thomas, our proficient presiding elder, was on hand, and preached us two good sermons, and presided as he usually does. Bro. Thomas believes in Methodism, and is infusing into our people more and more every time he comes to see us. We are always glad to have him come. We have our work nearly before us now, and hope to move on to success. We have our Sunday-school work in progress, and also hope to do a good work for the cause of missions as soon as we can organize more completely. By the close of this Conference year we expect to have one of the best little circuits in the Conference. God bless the ADVOCATE and the editor."

Rev. M. D. Fly, Gunnison, Miss., Feb. 19: "After Conference I tried a first-class case of la grippe, which held me for one month. I got to my appointment the first of January. I have a grand reception to report; but they get me off the train without let or hindrance, for which I was grateful. I went to the parsonage (one of the best in the Conference), found it well furnished, built a fire, and set up housekeeping. We are doing very well. This is a fine country, and we have a kind people; but not a member in the church who will lead in prayer; so I am monarch of all I survey. I always did like to be the biggest boy in school; but this pleases me a little too well; but you must remember this is a young charge. It has only been organized about forty years. We have eighteen business houses here in the new town, and only eight saloons; so you will infer that we are a moral people; but are at work and doing all we can. Pray for us. I send one subscriber. Will do all I can for the ADVOCATE."

Rev. W. C. Harris, Kossuth, Miss., Feb. 19: "Having been on my new work (Kossuth circuit) two months, I wish to report through the ADVOCATE. I came here a little discouraged, having been told by some, who had a right to an opinion, that I would find this a hard appointment. To add to my discouragement, I had been here only a few days before I had learned from various sources something of how little appreciation the people had shown of their pastor last year, who, by the way, is one of our very best men. As a partial offset to my discouraged feeling, quite a number said they felt ashamed of having treated so good a man in such a way. Well, so far I have nothing to complain of. How it will be through the year remains to be felt and seen. The stewards have made an assessment which, if paid, will enable us to live quite comfortably, and the people are well able to do this. We have received many kindnesses in the way of good estates. There is a good garden spot in connection with the parsonage, and a good pasture for the cow; so we think the prospects are, taking all into consideration, that we will, at least, not starve. Really I feel that the prospects are favorable for a good year. There is much work to be done. By the grace of God, I hope to report advancement along all the lines. I send another subscriber, making three since Conference. I think I can send others soon."

Rev. J. C. Bowling, Ashland circuit, Feb. 20: "I entered upon my work immediately after Conference, and found a kind, open-hearted reception awaiting us from all classes and denominations. Our congregations have been remarkably good in consideration of the very inclement weather which has been upon this section of country. Judging from outside appearances and conduct, we are constrained to say, we truly believe the majority of our people are in the enjoyment of religion, and are still gaining spiritual ground. We have eight churches, and are endeavoring to establish prayer meetings at each one; think we will succeed. At this writing there is but one Sunday-school on the charge; but, by April 1, we are more than likely to have about six out of the eight churches occupied by a Sunday-school. Our first quarterly meeting was held Jan. 30 and 31 by our much-beloved presiding elder, Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D. D., who did some good, sound preaching on that occasion. After 2 p. m. he returned to Ashland and preached there for us, Sunday night, a sermon which delighted all who heard him. Dr. Boswell is a pulpit power. Since our arrival on the work we have succeeded in calling our church at Ashland, and a new one is in course of construction at Ross Chapel. Hope to send some subscribers soon. The ADVOCATE seems to be gradually growing better and better. This week's edition pleased us very much. Pray for us."

Rev. O. McDonald, presiding elder of Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, Feb. 23: "On Thursday, last, we started from home, driving Frank, and riding in our own chariot. By sun-down we were at Dr. Lewis' in the little town of Union. Here Bro. and Sister Cammack heard. The next day, by 11 A. M., we were at Heister's Chapel, on the Neahoba circuit. Preached, ate dinner on the ground, and then held the Quarterly Conference. Bro. Long, the preacher in charge, was on hand; but came from home that morning, a distance of 18 or 20 miles, as his beloved wife and son were too sick to be away from home more than he could possibly help. They had been near death's door, but now some better. At night returned to Union. Bro. Cammack is surveying the field, and he and his wife studying the Choctaw language, and getting ready for his missionary labors among the Indians in our midst. The Baptists and Catholics have missions, and the Indians now are being readily Christianized. The Catholics work on the colony plan, furnishing houses and land free of charge and educating the children free. The Baptists are more general in their work, having schools and churches. Nearly all the sections or divisions of the Indians are now occupied. The Indians are generally very poor. They are being educated in English, and can be preached to, in a measure, in our language. On Saturday morning we drove nine miles to Decatur, while a slow rain was falling. Bro. Cammack and Bro. Lewis, a steward from Union, were with me. We saw on the route at a nice farm-house a large number of improved or patent beehives. They were sixty-odd and said to be profitable. This section is said to be the garden spot of Newton County. There is reed-brake land here that is said to make corn in abundance, some of it making nearly a hundred bushels per acre. At Decatur we had no preaching on Saturday; only held the Quarterly Conference. Bro. Ellis and family are comfortable in a house the church has bargained for, to be paid for soon. On Sabbath there were two sermons preached to attentive hearers. Bro. Cammack preached one of them. We had a good day. I hear very flattering accounts of the preaching done by the pastors at Decatur and Lake."

Rev. W. F. Henderson, Pleasant Hill, La.: "Is it always invariably egotism for one to let the world know that he knows or has done something? If so, then, sir, you are guilty. In the last number of the ADVOCATE you said your readers would find it 'good to the use of edifying,' and you were not 'bragging,' either, and promised something better. I think you knew whereof you spoke, and gave evidence of having been busy exorcising 'those numerous muses,' and must have gone from your sanctum frequently 'tired' enough to feel the need of rest. Now, I don't mean to flatter you, but want to justify myself in what I may say below. See? When our Conference adjourned, having here read out to Pleasant Hill circuit for the third time, and finding my work somewhat changed, though still with six appointments, with two years' experience already, I began to study and pray over the matter of success and failure. Rev. G. G. Smith, of Georgia, has said: 'If a circuit is too large for the pastor to reach the children,' and, of course, do a special work among them, 'then it is too large' (Italics his). But when he can not reach a large number of even the adult members of his congregations, what then? Our experience is, a goodly number of the members of the church come in late, and take seats in the back of the house, and leave (those who don't go out during services) immediately after the benediction, so that the pastor, to meet them at all, must 'catch them on the fly,' and, in visiting from house to house, find the good wife in the kitchen, or else to the elbows in the lard, washing-day, while the good man and children are in the field hauling rails or putting up fences. Now, for a little information: Preaching twice each Sabbath, driving from four to six miles between sermons, reaching each appointment once a month, how much good is a preacher calculated to do during the year? I rode thirty miles once to fill a monthly appointment. Two ladies constituted the congregation; the others had forgotten the day. One Sabbath afternoon I preached from a certain text. Just one month from that time I preached from the same text to the same congregation. One lady and her little daughter remembered having heard it before, and confessed to more profit from the second than the first hearing. Is it best to repeat often? I like your spirit, sir. Give us a few more strong, stirring articles on the subject of revivals. Clippings are good, very good; but I like the editorials best. They are from among us. They strike deeper, and stay longer. We have a revival at every appointment, in our mind's eye, upon our heart, and before the throne of grace; but just how to get the membership to work is the question. Will some Columbus make the discovery, and let us know? Like the Lafayette pastor, we are keeping house; and what with wood-cutting, garden and fence-building, and doing up the chores, we have found enough to keep us out of mischief, and interest us while at home. We, too, have had some weather here—sleet, snow and rain; also a storm of considerable weight, but no damage done. Being of a local character, it did not extend farther than the parsonage, and affected only the parson and his family—an ill wind, indeed, that blows nobody good. This originated, a gentle breeze at first, in the minds of two excellent ladies of Pleasant Hill; but soon spread until the whole town was infected, and culminated in replenishing the larder, and adding greatly to the wardrobe of preacher, wife and babies. So you see there are worse things than storms. Now, if we say we believe, we know this is evidence of their appreciation; and, as a token of ours, we are trying to do them all the good we can. Is this egotism? If so, let it be."

"The Prayer of Faith Shall Save the Sick."

We have just had fulfillment of the above promise in our church in Kobe, and it has made a deep impression on the Christians here. The facts are as follows: Mrs. Hashimoto, one of our Bible women, and wife of Dr. Hashimoto, a graduate of Vanderbilt University, medical class of 1890, has been afflicted with a tumor for several years. Within the last year it developed to enormous proportions, and the doctors decided that the only hope for recovery was in having it removed; but the result of the operation was thought to be decidedly doubtful, because of her very poor health, and the chances were put down as being greatly against her. In fact, two or three of the doctors—men trained in Europe—who accompanied Dr. Hashimoto to Osaka to witness the operation, gave it as their opinion that she would certainly die on the operating-table; and afterwards, when they saw her removed to her bed and still alive, they said she would surely die within thirty-six hours. To their astonishment, however, she did not, but improved so rapidly that in one month, to the day, she was able to return to her home in Kobe, a trip of twenty miles, and is now up and about fully restored.

The successful removal of this tumor, which weighed fifty-five pounds, has had considerable publicity, and accounts of it have appeared in several of the papers, native and foreign, occasioning much comment and surprise; but that which has been a cause of such wonderment to others has not so affected the Christians of our church. In fact, they looked for just this result; just this outcome from the operation. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," says the Psalmist, and in this instance we have found it so. When our Japanese Christians heard of the intended operation, they, of their own accord, called a prayer meeting to be held at the same hour, and asked me to be present. The time was devoted to the case in hand. While the doctor was cutting we were praying. Nineteen earnest, heart-felt prayers went up from nineteen believing hearts. I do not remember to have ever been in a service where the spirit of faith was so prevalent. The Lord was surely present with us, and the very atmosphere seemed vital with his presence. We all went from the room confident that the prayer of faith had saved the sick.

At the same hour, in the hospital in Osaka, in her bed-room, the old mother of Mrs. Hashimoto and Dr. Duke's helper spent the whole hour in earnest pleading with God that he would bless and direct the operation, and restore to health the loved one.

Let me sum up the facts: An invalid of one year, in a state of great debility, with a tumor weighing fifty-five pounds, and five or six doctors agreed that the patient would die from the operation—this is the human side of the case. On the other hand, there was the promise of God that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." Two companies of Christians, taking God at his word, prayed in faith that he would direct the physicians, granting them skill, and would bless the nursing and the medicines used, and thus restore the loved sister and worker in Christ to health again. This is the divine side. The results show a successful operation and a perfect cure. What are we to believe? Our Christians here are simple enough in their faith to hold that this is an answer to their prayers, that the promise of God has been verified. In this view of the case they are happy and satisfied, and in their interpretation of the facts this writer agrees.

A few nights since I attended a public praise service at the house of Dr. and Mrs. Hashimoto, at which they both returned their thanks to God for his mercies unto them. Among other things, Mrs. Hashimoto said, that just before the operation she had engaged in prayer, remembering that, at the same time, her brothers and sisters in the church were praying for her, and that she submitted to the operation with full confidence that God would restore her. Here we have faith and prayer on the part of the patient and faith and prayer on the part of her church. The result is but in keeping with the laws of the kingdom of grace. Mrs. Hashimoto has always been an earnest, devoted Christian, and I am sure that from henceforth her life will be a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. W. E. TOWSON.

Kobe, Japan, Jan. 10, 1892.

The Rev. T. J. Lowery.

IN MEMORIAM.

The Rev. Thomas Jefferson Lowery was born in Chesterfield district, South Carolina, Dec. 5, 1813. Of his educational advantages not much can be said. The poor boy of those days, remote from educational centres, and so seldom brought in contact with educated and literary men, had but little to inspire his ambition, or to lead him out in the direction of higher school or college advantages. But the sturdy youth mastered enough of the common branches, including a knowledge of his mother tongue, that, with his strong common sense, he could make himself understood by the many and varied congregations to whom he preached in the long life of his ministry.

His conversion to God, Sept. 15, 1835, was an event remembered by young Lowery with great distinctness, and seemed ever to have been cherished with fonder recollection than the date of his natural birth, and ever spoke of it with greater feelings of gratitude than he did of the fact of his having been born in the flesh. Early in his religious experience he recognized his call of God to preach the gospel. With his temperament, he did nothing by piecemeals. His strong will, his strong constitution and his great physical force he laid implicitly on God's altar, and all these stood him in need as he pursued his life-work as a Methodist itinerant preacher.

In June, 1836, at Holly Springs Camp Ground, he was licensed to preach by the Rev. O. P. Harris. The following winter he was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference. On Nov. 5, 1840, he was ordained deacon by Bishop James O. Andrew. November 6, 1842, he was ordained elder; also by Bishop James O. Andrew.

When the Memphis Conference was set apart from the Tennessee Conference, Bro. Lowery fell to the Memphis. Again, when the lines of the North Mississippi Conference were defined, he was included in the bounds of that territory; having, as he said, belonged to three Conferences without ever transferring.

In those primitive days of Methodism in this country the scenes of his early labors were new. Naked men (the Indians) prowled in its forests, and bears and panthers roamed and howled in its wilderness fastnesses. Communities and settlements were far apart, and he had to ride long distances to reach his appointments to preach, following old Indian trails, or roads newly cut by the early settlers, crossing creeks and large streams without bridges, swimming or fording these streams, as the case might be. To name the many charges Bro. Lowery served would be tedious and uninteresting, as many of them have disappeared from the Conference journals, and are now unknown. Railroads now traverse many of the lonely roads he once traveled. Towns and cities have sprung up in the wake of the old-time prospector, and centres and names have been changed.

November 5, 1841, he was happily married to Miss Rebecca H. Farr. She was a helpmeet to him in the truest sense. For forty-seven years she walked by his side, abating the hardship and privation of an itinerant life. She traveled with him from circuit to circuit. Children were born, and servants, from being hired out, were suffering. There were no parsonages, nor pleasant preachers' homes, awaiting the coming "circuit rider" of those days. Such removals at such a sacrifice became unbearable. She persuaded her husband to purchase a home and farm, and she would take care of family and home interest while he could travel far and near, doing his Master's work. He settled his family in Chickasaw county, Miss., near where the town of Houston now stands. From this home he traveled extensively, having sometimes to make a long day's ride to reach the point on his charge nearest the home of his family. Sometimes he preached on colored missions. The colored people always regarded him as their friend, ever loved him, and were, to the last, delighted to hear him preach. His charges were almost invariably hard and laborious, with no complimentary appointment; a small circuit or pleasant station; no presiding eldership, esteemed by some as rewards of merit, and has helped to cheer many a discouraged itinerant. He toiled on uncomplained of these earthly rewards, cheered by a coming rest from his labors, and by the brightening prospects of a heavenly inheritance, when the great Father in heaven would wisely adjust to each one, of whatever station, their due reward. The character of his preaching was expository, but his main forte was in exhortation. In his later years he was most earnest in his exhortations to his neighbors and old friends to prepare for heaven by reformed lives and holier living.

In 1887 he was placed upon the supernumerary list. The year following he was superannuated, as no longer able to be relied on for any work. He was declining into feebleness extreme. Two years in this relation, and he attended his last Conference in Macon, Miss., Dec. 2-7, 1891. He was happy in the intercourse he had with the brethren, and seemed greatly to enjoy looking upon their faces so beloved. In his talk to the Conference he said he never expected to meet them again in Conference. He did not say this from any sense of being so near his end, but from a knowledge of increased feebleness. On his return home he occupied a car greatly crowded with passengers, and very warm. After hours of this travel he stepped from the car into the chilly winter air, and was exposed to this for five hours without a fire, the thermometer near the freezing-point. He reached home thoroughly chilled. The next morning—Wednesday—he was sick; the day following that he went to bed. On Monday, Dec. 14, his spirit passed away. Thus closed a life of seventy-eight years and nine days, fifty-three years of which had been spent in the Christian ministry.

Bro. Lowery said but little in his last sickness. He thought, up to a late hour, that he would get well. The writer of this asked him, "Should the Master see fit to call you away in this sickness, how is it with you?" With something like his natural voice, he said, "I am all right." Late on Sunday he seemed to apprehend that he could not survive; said he would like to talk, but could not. To a question asked him by one of his family, he said, "Heaven, heaven, sweet heaven;" then continued: "O grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting? Thanks be to God, that giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

He was much loved and revered by his neighbors, who had known him long; and those who had known him longest, loved him most. He died with an appointment to preach awaiting him. Did ever warrior die with his armor more fully on? He fell with his face to the foe.

On Dec. 15 the body was placed at the chancel in the church near his old home. Assisted in the services by the Rev. T. W. Lewis, the writer discoursed from Paul in a "airail" (Phil. 1, 20-24) to a large audience of weeping friends. With earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust, the body was lowered to its resting-place to await the general resurrection and life of the world to come, when God shall come to make up his jewels.

WILDERNESS.

(Canticles viii. 5.)

An eager heart, a busy life
Crowded with anxious care;
A life that is full of work
It has no time for prayer—
A "wilderness" where earth-born growths
Shut out the light and air.

A slothful heart, an aimless life
That dreams the hours away;
A heart that does not care to work
And does not dare to pray—
A "wilderness" of dim desires
Most desolate and dreary.

A careless heart, a thoughtless life
A mirror bright and fair
Of silver wave and palm-tree shade
Mocking the desert glare—
A "wilderness" for all the gleam
Of fancied waters there.

A smitten heart, a frozen life
Where reigns some tyrant woe,
Where bitter thoughts have chilled the soul
Till nothing more can grow—
A "wilderness" most bleak and bare Beneath its veil of snow.

A gloomy life, a fossil heart,
Deep buried in the past;
A life that's spent in looking back
On hours fled all too fast—
A "wilderness" all thick with toms
Of joys that could not last.

No desert like the heart of man
At strife with death and sin;
No Summer drought so fierce and dry
As that which reigns therein;
No wilderness so parched and bare
As that which lies within.

Each heart must have its wilderness
Where dread disease is rife;
And one alone can lead us forth
Safe through the dim and strife;
His heart a watch-dog's den
Where grows the Tree of Life.

'Tis he alone can lead us forth,
The way he only knows,
And every heart that leans on him
Will taste a sweet repose—
For he can make the wilderness
To blossom as the rose.

CHURCH FINANCE.

Some weeks ago we sent out requests to several laymen and preachers for a brief expression of thought on the subject of Church Finance. We give below the answers we have received. The reader will find this an interesting symposium, and we trust, an edifying one.—ED. ADVOCATE.

BY PROF. R. S. RICKETTS.

The success of a church in finance depends very much upon its point of view. Two quite different opinions are current upon this subject: one that what we put into the Lord's treasury is a gift, the other that it is to be regarded and paid like any other debt. The true view probably lies between the two. To regard such contributions merely as a gift makes them too much a matter of impulse, and to treat them as simple payments upon a debt like any other may create the impression that the duty of the church as to money is done when the assessments are met, and that of the individual member when he has paid what he contracts to pay.

One of the most difficult things for men to do is to enter into partnership with God, to become co-workers with him; to realize that the best results in the financial, as well as in the other work of the church, come of a union of faith and common sense, a large and enthusiastic trust in God, with a proper appreciation of the use of means to an end. There is, unfortunately, a sort of tacit understanding in many of our churches that some men are to do the praying and exercise the faith, while others are to collect or pay the money and do the work. And it often happens, unfortunately, that we select merely business men to lay out the work, to devise ways and means of raising money, and commit its expenditure to those who know more about faith than they do about finance. Thus the church suffers at both ends of an enterprise, by too great timidity in the assessment and by an injudicious use of the money collected. A reversal of this process might be tried with good prospect of improvement.

In the nature of things, the church can not easily be run, even in matters of finance, on what are known as business principles. Success in mercantile affairs depends largely upon the relation of assets to liabilities. To ascertain these is a good first step in all such enterprises. And right here the financial operations of the church encounter their greatest difficulty, for upon no other subject do good men differ more widely than upon the proportion of our goods that belongs to the Lord for the use of his church. The directors of a bank, some of whom counted its assets at a hundred thousand dollars, and others at ten times that sum, could not be expected to put out its real capital to best advantage. And yet in order to a better condition of church finances we should have, if possible:

1. The right measure of the church's obligations. Upon this point much has been written. The highest standard practically regarded among us is the tenth, supposed to have been the limit of requirement under Jewish law. And, certainly, if all our members were to accept and act upon this, a mighty impulse would be given to church work everywhere. But is even this the divinely appointed measure of our duty in giving? Is there such a measure divinely appointed? Nothing, perhaps, in the life and teaching of our Savior is so at variance with the spirit of the world in business as his disregard of limits. The question of how much seems actually to have been offensive to him. When Peter asks how often his brother is to be forgiven, the Master starts him with a number that is practically infinite. One comes to him with a question of the division of property, and is dismissed almost sharply with the words, "Who made me a judge or a divider over you?" And again, when speaking upon the vexed question of the tribute money, he indicates by his answer that Caesar's measures have as little currency in the kingdom of heaven as Caesar's coin. Once only he spoke directly of giving to the Lord; and then his commendation of the widow who cast in her mite was in the significant language, "She of her want hath cast in all that she had, even all her living." Between this measure and the low and uncertain one which is common in the church there is a difference that is profoundly suggestive.

Now, it is, at least, doubtful if the law of tithes is binding upon Christians of to-day, while it is certain that our Savior set no limit to our giving short of all we have. In the absence of an explicit direction from Scripture, therefore, it may be wisest for us to leave the matter of percentage to the individual conscience. There need be no fear that, under the strongest presentation of the incentives to liberality, men will grow fanatical in giving. In every other exercise of religion we may pass the bounds of reason. There are those, doubtless, who spend in attendance upon the various societies of the church time that might be more profitably devoted to training their children, or adding to the comfort of their household. Too much time may be given to church-going, to singing hymns, or even to prayer and pious meditation. It is possible that men may sometimes exhaust in shouting an amount of nervous energy that would be better employed in service. But fanaticism has never yet taken the form of excessive giving, and probably it never will. We draw the line at money.

2. We need the right system. Our Methodism is prolific of financial plans. One has only to attend the average District Conference to hear of them in ancient number and variety. They range all the way from the envelope system, with its counting-house exactness of debit and credit and reports and balances, to the "quarter haul"—which, by the way, is generally a water haul—and that other more uncertain still, sometimes reported by the brother from Way-back, where "the stewards just scullie around among the members now and then, and get up what they can."

The first of these, as operated in some of our best churches, is possibly as near being right as any that Methodism ingeniously has yet devised. Its only drawback is that it is not always so worked as to make it educative. It may begin and end with merely distributing the present assessments more generally among the members, and meeting them with greater regularity, or it may be adopted on the ground that it reduces the assessments, already moderate, of the stewards themselves and lays the burden of church expense upon the body of the membership—chiefly women and children. In a leading charge in one of the ADVOCATE's patronizing Conferences, and one of the first to adopt the envelope system, it is said that they pay now just about what they have been paying ever since the stars fell. There is such a thing as financial dry rot, and it is not improved by reduction to a system.

Two other plans have received a tacit indorsement and sometimes open commendation at our District Conference. Each of these, while successful in raising money, is subject to the criticism that it does not properly develop the grace of liberality.

The first is that by which the stewards pay out of their own pockets what is assessed to their church; then credit themselves with what comes in uncollected from a few willing members, and let the balance go, as some fondly imagine, to their credit on the account books above. It is sad to think, and yet it may be true, that there is a different kind of reckoning for the steward who thus pays the "quarterage of the unwilling or uninformed, and, in so doing, degrades the self-respect of his church, rather than use the patience and take the time to educate his people to better things.

According to the second, the stewards collect all money for church purposes, both local and connectional, without the assistance of the pastor. That the pastor should not take part in collections, for his own support all will agree, but to exclude him from all the money affairs of his church—though it be done for his relief—is to encourage the idea, so fruitful of meanness among us, that religion and business are wholly different, if not antagonistic, things. Our people need to be reformed, exhorted, educated, instructed, line upon line, before they can be brought to regard paying to the Lord as a privilege and giving as a delight. And whether their failure in this regard results from ignorance or covetousness, no one can reach them so effectually as the pastor. There are things in finance also which are spiritually discerned.

3. We need the right spirit. There is but little difference between sweet singleness and sour liberality. "The Lord loveth the cheerful giver," him who gives heartily to-day and purposes in his heart to give again to-morrow. He who offers to give what seems to him a large amount at once if the church will let him off with that, is not much nearer the right spirit than the well-to-do brother who would like to give something every Sunday if he could only contrive to divide a nickel into two equal parts.

It is a good sign that the church is waking up to the importance of "worshiping God with the substance," as our Presbyterian brethren have it. Our great danger just now is in being organized too much. Too many are giving only as Rosehuds, or King's Daughters, or societies, for this or that. It is better, of course, to give thus than not at all; but useful as are these various organizations for the time being, it is, at least, probable that their highest mission is to become extinct. Their members should graduate out of the favorite society as a society into the church as the body of Christ.

What we need is not more associations and leagues to work upon the individual preferences or prejudices of our people, but more members responsive to every call of Christian duty, and loyal to every interest of the church. Division of labor and the development of special gifts and graces is good only as it can be done without violence to "unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." What a spectacle would be presented to angels and men if, for example, it should ever happen that one of our missionary organizations, more successful in collecting than in using money for the Lord, should hold an idle balance in bank while the general mission work of the church is crippled for want of funds. The Lord's money at six per cent., when it might be bringing in a harvest of souls!

And we must get above the use of money-raising expedients. The grab-bag must go. We have no longer any use, if we ever had, for the ingenious brother who when the church needs money has no resource but "to get up something." And we might spare the service of that intermittent mathematician who, in a similar strait, works out his little sum in division, and then electrifies himself by proposing to be one of 500,000 to give ten cents to pay the missionary debt.

Let us have done with such child's play. If men are perishing for lack of the gospel which our money can send to them, we have no time to count nickels with our neighbors. Let us give in Christ's name for Christ's sake to the cause of Christ, and trust the church, under his direction, to make a proper use of our offerings. The only safe measure is more and more; the only perfect system is that which collects and disburses most of the man along with his money, and the only Christian spirit is that which holds all we have subject at any time to the Master's order.

BY REV. J. T. SAWYER.

In finance, as in other matters, it is well for Methodists to go according to their Discipline. We quote ¶308 as follows:

The stewards shall report to each church meeting the whole amount to be raised, and that part of it which each congregation is expected to pay. The Church Conference may adopt its own method of raising the money. Unless otherwise ordered by the Church Conference, the stewards shall adopt the plan of assessment with consent, as provided in the following paragraph.

This is ¶309:

Each member of the church is expected to pay according to his or her several ability for the support of the ministry, and the stewards of each station or circuit shall determine whether payments are to be made weekly, monthly, or quarterly, during the year. They shall then ascertain how much each member is able and willing to pay in the installments fixed by the stewards; and whatever amount each member agrees to pay, he or she shall be under solemn obligation to pay, and can only be released from this obligation by the order of the stewards, or by vote of the Church Conference for good cause shown.

We find from this that every church member is expected to pay for the support of the gospel according to ability. Hence it is not Methodistic for a man to lump his family and pay so much for all. The wife should have the privilege of paying in her own name and in equal amount with her husband, as she is in equity equal owner with him of what is earned by them. Each child who belongs to the church should have his own amount to give. We are sure that money is lost to the church by this lumping way of doing. The Discipline makes it an individual matter and requires that every church member shall give steadily some assessed and acknowledged amount. The only ones exempt from this are those who are helped by the church out of its poor fund. To carry out this plan the stewards (for the Church Conference is rarely held, and scarcely ever orders anything in regard to church finances) are to assess every member and fix the payments as weekly, monthly, or quarterly, ascertaining what each is able and willing to pay. Thus each member is assessed with consent and enters into a solemn contract to pay as agreed, from which contract he can only be released for good cause shown, and then only by order of stewards or vote of Church Conference. This plan is a good one, and so there may be other plans just as good; but, after all, the actual raising of the money depends mainly upon the faithful working of the plan. Suppose that in a station having three hundred and five members, each member except five, who are helped by the church, is assessed by the ten stewards, who by circular notify each one of his assessment. Are the stewards to stop there? We think not. If they are to carry on the well-begun work, each steward will take thirty of those names and will, without delay, see the thirty members on his list and, by personal visits and brotherly and thorough discussion of the situation, ascertain just what each of his thirty is "able and willing to pay." A live Board of Stewards, using just the same business tact and diligence exercised by them in their private business, would speedily have things in proper shape for a successful financial year. Due diligence throughout the year in regard to his thirty would enable each steward at the close of the year, instead of ailing and aching, if not producing, the usual "hide-and-tell agony," to show his list as paid up in full except where death or other unavoidable happening had caused a shortage.

This disciplinary plan has always seemed to us to be as good as any, and we have never known it to fail where it was worked by disciplinary stewards—i. e., "men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business of the church." Pastors are, doubtless, sometimes to blame for not being careful to nominate for stewards men of solid piety—for no amount of mere business capacity can take the place of solid piety in the realm of church finances. Nor should a man be made a steward because he is "such a good man," if he has no natural or acquired financial ability. The stewards are to develop liberality in the people in the matter of supporting the gospel, and in no way can they more effectually do that than by personal contact and money-talk with their thirty or other assigned members, socially and fraternally, in their homes. We have thought it would be well for stewards to press upon the consciences of the members their obligations to pay according to ability and as they have agreed. It is sinful for Methodists who are able, not being on the poor fund, to refuse the payment of church dues, for in every case they have solemnly said at their reception to membership that they would be "subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances, and support its institutions." In the light of their vows they are not at liberty to withhold their money on the ground of personal dislike to their preacher or distaste for his preaching, in effect declaring, "I won't pay for what I don't want." Given stewards who are solidly pious and of fair financial abilities, we believe that good success can be had in every case by the prompt and continued working of the disciplinary plan of "assessment with consent."

As to the collection ordered by the Annual Conference, and left to the pastors to raise, we believe each man should adopt, where no way has been especially ordered, that plan which he can best work, whether it be by direct public collection, subscription, cards privately secured and collected, or other method, provided it does not smack of "the world, the flesh and the devil." There can never be any excuse for running the church of God by means of entertainments, fairs and suppers. Faith and works displayed on Bible lines will bring all the money that is needed for the accomplishment of her mission.

New Orleans, La.

BY HON. H. W. FOOTE.

MR. EDITOR: You ask me for an article on church finance. I do not know that I comprehend your meaning fully. I take it, however, in its broadest sense—i. e., money for all church purposes.

1. As to the support of the minister. As soon as can be, after the arrival of the preacher, let the Official Board ascertain the size and condition of the family; then, at their first meeting, fix his salary; then assess every member of the church what the Board may think each member ought reasonably to pay monthly, to be paid on or before the first Sabbath in every month. The secretary, by circular letter, should inform every member of the amount assessed for the preacher's salary, and how much he or she is expected to pay. Some may think their assessment too much. Let such pay what they are willing to pay. Some may be willing to pay more. (These will be few in number.) Then let the stewards divide those assessed amongst them, each taking those he will be most successful with; call upon each monthly, and urge payment. Let, at least, one steward be appointed to see members of the congregation who are not members of the church—outsiders, so-called—and he will most probably get money enough to supply deficiencies of those who will not pay. In this way a fair salary for the preacher may be obtained, if the preacher is not presumptuous and too exacting in his demands.

2. I am not an advocate for public collections, yet I believe the most efficient way of getting our missionary money, widows and orphans and worn-out preachers, Bishops', educational, church extension funds, and all other assessments made by our Conferences, is by public collections judiciously managed by the preacher. Add two, or more, of the smaller amounts together, and take them up at the same time, and the larger amounts on special occasions, by propositions, or as the preacher may think best.

3. For the supplies of the parsonage, and wants and comfort of the family, let there be a committee of ladies, pious and sensible. They will look after these, and devise ways and means necessary as they may think prudent and right.

4. For the ordinary current expenses for sexton, fuel, lights, etc., let what is termed a penny collection be taken every Sunday.

5. For repairs, let there be personal application made to those who are most able to pay for them.

6. As to the Sunday-school, if that is properly officered, it will take care of itself; and if it is not, turn out the ins and put in the outs.

Now, Mr. Editor, let me say, in conclusion, I have been a steward in the church forty-five years; have been trying to work along the lines suggested all these years, and find it hard to get them observed. Am confidently of the opinion that it would be easier for all concerned if they were adopted and kept by all of us.

I have written chiefly for stations. I know but little of the plans for working on circuits. What little knowledge I have teaches me to believe but few of our brethren on the circuits know how to pay the preacher. Too many of them, both in town and country, pay more money for strong drink, cigars and tobacco than they pay the preacher for preaching to their families, or teachers to educate their children.

BY REV. T. S. WEST.

MR. EDITOR: You ask me for an article on church finance, to go into and make up a part of a symposium. It is a subject I know little about; and what little I do know, I don't know how to state it. A symposium is a feast; rather, a merry feast. I suppose a few of the best thoughts of the best writers compiled in one article would make an intellectual feast on that subject a symposium. From this view of the subject I find myself in a strait. I will, however, furnish you something soon on the subject; but I doubt if it will be of any use, unless you intend to put a little corn-bread in to fill out.

We, up this way, believe in turning on the light when money is handled. We don't believe it is exactly right, nor at all judicious, for the officials of any corporation to collect and disburse funds in quiet, silent ways; and the people at large never know from whence they come, nor whither they go. We have had serious trouble in our State, and good men fearfully involved by want of strict adherence to this principle. The books were not regularly examined. I went to a pastoral charge once when they were all in a financial furore. The preacher's salary was not paid. The people said, "We have paid so much;" the preacher said he had received only so much; the stewards said, "We have paid in all that we have collected;" but, nevertheless, a deficiency appeared that could not be accounted for. Sharp letters passed between the stewards and former pastor. The stewards said this thing must not occur again; so they required a receipt from me for all the money I received, and I cheerfully gave it. The next charge I served I found the same condition of things. They had had a bitter experience from their slack management of their finances. I was required to give receipts for funds received from the stewards.

In view of all this, we thought it right, and we know it is safe, to conduct the financial or business part of our church management on strict business principles; so, following the example of our Annual Conferences, we read regularly our financial report, that all may see where we are, know how we stand, what has been done, and who did it.

We hold a Church Conference every month before the entire congregation; the Board of Stewards read out the names of all that have paid, and what they have paid, the sum total, and how disbursed; and we don't pay by families. I insist that each member of the family that is a member of the church shall pay something, and have it read to their credit; and if a person not a member contributes, it is read out to his credit the same way. I have talked to my people that I wish to learn them all for my support, and that I want every member to contribute something. Last year one sister paid only twenty-five cents the entire year, and I think it was all that she ought to have paid. One brother paid only the whole year, and it was read out to him. It was, perhaps, all he ought to have paid. I certainly appreciate these small contributions from the very poor. I don't rejoice in being a poor preacher, but I do rejoice in being a poor man's preacher. I love to see the poorest members of my church, in their calico and jeans, come up, and take front seats with a home-like air in their manner, moved by an independent spirit that feels like this is one obligation here. I help support it. I want my people to feel that I am theirs. As I walk the streets, I want my poorest members to say to themselves: "There goes Bro. West. If I get sick and send him word, he will come immediately to my bedside. If my child dies, he will attend the funeral, and I help to support him." The people that help in my support are the ones that love the Lord and his servant for his sake.

Wesson, Miss.

BY S. B. M'CUTCHEEN.

Having been directly interested in our church finances for twenty-one years, I have by experience and observation learned some of the causes of the financial embarrassment of, rather, shortcomings of many of our congregations. The most important point is promptness on the part of church members and systematic management of church interests. Will the Lord's work prosper any more without system than a man's private business? To make any business a success it must be conducted with discretion, energy and system. The same method may not suit all congregations; but such as the condition requires adopt, and to it adhere.

The impression seems to prevail that the stewards of a charge are responsible for the shortages in collections for the support of the ministry, and frequently, in a Christian spirit, they assume this responsibility, often paying in excess of their full assessment, that which should have been paid by delinquent church members. On the church member rests the responsibility of paying his or her accepted assessment. This obligation is as binding as any they can make; and yet how lightly it is considered by many! They, no doubt, fail to remember the vow they assumed when they promised, by the help of God, to support the institutions of the church. A church member, fully realizing the solemnity of his personal responsibility, does not wait to be called upon for the amount of his obligation, but promptly pays it through the proper channel. How easy to do this; but how discouraging to a steward who endeavors to collect assessments and receive little or no promises! In illustration of prompt and systematic paying, I know a church member who has not failed for twenty years to meet her assessment out of a small income by regularly setting aside a portion every week for this purpose. This is an example worthy of imitation. What would be the result if all our church members were to adopt this plan?

Our people are, with few exceptions, able to meet all the demands made upon them for the support of church enterprises. The essential thing needed is the proper understanding of their responsibility and duty. To quote a familiar phrase, "They need to be educated in giving."

There is no reasonable excuse for not raising all the small Conference collections assessed to each charge. Our preachers, whose duty it is to raise the collection, should put the question before their members, and emphasize the importance of meeting this claim, giving them to understand that the assessment must be paid in full, but nothing in excess will be expected. Let every congregation adopt the rule of paying what is assessed against them, and adhere strictly to this duty, and when our preachers render their reports at the Annual Conference, they will not be placed in the humiliating position of offering an excuse or apology for their congregations.

BY H. MEADER.

The subject of church finances is one which, if viewed from a purely business standpoint, seems as simple as A B C; but it has puzzled the Official Boards (not the membership) from time immemorial. The rule seems to be to have no rule or system at all. Our Romish brethren appear to understand how to manage such matters better. With them, every member is expected to bear a portion of the burden, or, as it should be considered, is privileged to contribute to the necessary expenses of the church and advancement of the Lord's cause. From the capitalist to the poorest workman, all are payers. This it should be, and, for proof, we have but to remember how our Savior commended the poor widow. The question to be solved is, how to get all our membership to be regular contributors. To begin, I believe that the pastor should explain to all applicants for membership what is meant by "supporting the institutions of the church." If the new member has no assigned at, say the end of a month, that he or she will pay, have a steward call, and kindly explain that since we have no income but the voluntary contributions of our members, he has called to know how much we can depend on him for the current year, and not leave him until some amount is paid up. So much for the new members as they are taken in. Now, reach the old membership, the Official Board should, at the beginning of each conference year, report to the congregation the amount of the budget, expenses, et cetera, assumed for the current year, and state distinctly that every member is expected to assist in meeting these expenses. When something is expected of the poorer at those in better circumstances understand that they need not be afraid of giving too much. In from three or four weeks the congregation should be notified as to what has been done through the Official Board or Finance Committee; and if the responses at the beginning of the year do not meet the estimated expenses, notify the members that they must increase their assessments, and if any have not responded, dun them until they have CHARACTER.—In order to show character in the face, one must be willing to have lines breaking the surface of the countenance. One can not have a song or a story written on paper, yet have the paper as free from marks as before. Yet there are persons who actually seek to obliterate from the face the signs of the little character they possess. They employ cosmetics for the purpose of making their countenances smooth and fair, at the cost of destroying the proofs of any growth on their part in the direction of true and noble being. There are photographers who will furnish a negative by filling in the lines of character, so that the picture of a real man, or of a real woman, is reduced to the semblance of a second-rate wax figure in a hair-dresser's window. A fair face is attractive in any way, but it is not to be compared with a fair fame. And when the lines of age or of care are in a face, the attempt to secure a fair picture of that face as if it were fair, must be at the cost of the name which character gives to the face who has lived to a purpose, and has gained the results of worthy living. Well-marked lines in the face are precious as well-written lines in a manuscript. It is not to the credit of a man, when it can be said of him, "the paper on which he writes is worn without his writing than with it."

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces slightly lumps or swellings; which, caused by running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, or causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a very formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the two possible features of both. Being the most ancient it is the most general of all diseases or affections for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished often when other medicines have failed, is proved itself to be a potent and peculiar remedy for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of the various forms be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

BRIEFS.

Mr. Rockefeller has given another $1,000,000 to the Chicago University. This makes a gift of $2,600,000 this gentleman has given to that university. The gift consists of 1,000 bonds of the par value of $1,000, bearing five per cent. interest. In his letter to the trustees Mr. Rockefeller says: "I make this gift as a special thank-offering to Almighty God for returning health." And we say, Thank God for such men. May they multiply all over our land!

In another column Bro. Weems gives the sad news of the burning of the district parsonage at Brookhaven, Miss. This is a great loss. The house was a new one, the presiding elder, Bro. Woodward, having occupied it not yet a year. Bro. Woodward's loss of household goods and library is a very serious loss. It takes a preacher a life time to collect a library, and its loss, just when most needed, is a very grave matter indeed. We trust friends by the score will come to the help of our good brethren in Brookhaven.

The last number of the Alabama Advocate has this pointed and pertinent paragraph:

What the church needs to-day, as much as she did in the days of Wesley and Whitefield, is men who have the courage of their convictions. Too many of us ministers of the gospel of Christ are going around with knapsacks of orthodoxy lashed to our backs, but with precious little of the courage and zeal of John the Baptist in our hearts. Tell men of their sins and meanness, but do it in a spirit of meekness. If members of the church get drunk publicly, play cards publicly, profane God's name publicly, condemn these things publicly, not the men. Let the world see that the church is not to be stultified, nor her laws infringed with impunity.

The Nashville Christian Advocate gives the following as the names of the different branches of Methodism:

Abroad are the Wesleyan Methodists, the Irish Methodist Church, the Methodist New Connection, the Primitive Methodist Church, the Bible Christian Church, the United Methodist Free Churches, the Wesleyan Reform Union, the United Free Gospel Churches, the French Methodists, the Australian Methodists, and the Methodist Church of Canada. At home we have the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, the Methodist Protestant Church, the Evangelical Association, the United Brethren, the American Wesleyan Church, the Free Methodist Church, the Primitive Methodist Church in the United States, the Congregational, and the Independent Methodist Churches.

Christian Politics.

We believe there is such a thing as Christian politics. The religion taught in the Bible recognizes the existence and authority of the civil government. The Bible teaches that the State derives its right of existence from God; for it says, "The powers that be are ordained of God." The Bible also teaches that the State has authority over men; for it says, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." Moreover, the Bible teaches that the interests of the civil government are very closely connected with the interests of the kingdom of God; for when it says, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," it also adds, "and unto God the things that are God's." The conjunction "and" in that connection shows that duties to the State and duties to God are alike obligatory. The two sets of duties, civil and religious, have been joined together by Jesus Christ, and no man has any authority to put them asunder. The man who fulfills one set of duties and neglects the other fails to meet his obligation, and, of course, incurs the displeasure of God, who imposes both sets of duties. The Christian man who neglects his civil duties, his duties to the civil government, is guilty of a violation of Christ's command, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." The citizen who fulfills his duties to the civil government and neglects his duties to God is guilty of a violation of Christ's command, "Render unto God the things that are God's." So these duties to God and the State move out on parallel lines, and Christian politics embraces both, and the Christian citizen is the man who, to the best of his ability, meets the obligations arising on both lines.

But if the civil government derives its existence and authority from God, then God's authority must be superior to that of the civil government. The act of setting up government carries with it the authority to ordain law for its guidance. To "ordain the powers that be," and yet not to give them a constitution, under which all legislation shall be enacted and by which all laws shall be interpreted, would be to open the door to confusion and anarchy and the destruction of the "powers" ordained. So when God ordained civil government, he wrote with his own finger the constitution for that government. That Constitution is the Decalogue. To say that the Ten Commandments are simply for the government of the individual does not express the whole truth. They are for the government of the individual in all the relations of life. They bind men everywhere, in domestic, social, commercial and political life. God's demands in any or in all of these phases of life must always be consistent with the law of the Decalogue. What he demands of a man in private life can not be opposed to what he demands of him in public life, because God can not contradict himself.

If this is so, then to sin against God does not and can not promote the best interests of the civil government. He who does so, no matter how high his position, is not a patriot in the best sense. Obedience to God is the foundation upon which true patriotism rests. True love of country has its source only in the Decalogue. We believe this is becoming more clearly understood as the only safe position. The people, as they are becoming more enlightened, are beginning to demand that the moral law, as promulgated in the Decalogue, must have its legitimate influence upon the lives of public men. We have had lately some examples of the growth of this sentiment. In England it hurled Parnell from his throne of power and relegated Sir. Charles Dilke to private life. Not a great while ago a man had the audacity to stand up in our National Senate, and declare that "the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule had no place in politics," but he spoke his own death-warrant as a senator, for in the next election he was overwhelmingly defeated. These examples show that the sentiment of the people on this question of morality in politics is coming into harmony with the demands of God.

From these observations, it is plain that the Christian's politics must be governed by Christian morality. If the State demands of him as a public man what God says he shall not do as a private citizen, he can not obey the State without forfeiting his integrity as a Christian. If his party requires him to do that which contravenes any of the principles of the Decalogue, he has the alternative either to part with his party and keep to his religion, or part with his religion and keep to his party. The true Christian invariably chooses the former.

Christian politics takes its firm stand upon the Ten Commandments, and refuses to endorse principles that are contrary to their teachings and will not support men for public office who live in open violation of them. If the Christian men of this land would carry the morality of their religion with them to the polls and let it govern their votes, the Augean stables would soon be cleansed and purified.

Qualifications for the Lord's Work.

In order to be successful workers in the Lord's cause, like the "wise men from the East," we must hunt up the Christ and see him and worship him and pour all our treasures of love and all our wisdom of mind and all our strength of body and all our power of influence and empty all our money coffers at his feet. We must do all this willingly before we can properly appreciate the honor of being his workers or have a clear conception of the tremendous import of the work he has for us to do.

We must come in contact with him at the vital point in his character, and in that contact receive an infusion of his blessed Spirit, and by that infusion realize the transforming energy of his all-powerful grace, and because of that transformation be made new creatures in him before we can do our work successfully and with his approbation. The religion that don't go into a man's heart as a life-giving power, purifying all his affections and vitalizing all his energies and bringing into "captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," can not work successfully for others. Hence to do the work Christ has appointed us to do, and to do it in the best possible manner, we must get our souls and minds and bodies filled to the brim and running over with that religion which is love to God and love to men. When we maintain the proper attitude of a true faith we find that in this religion the constant in-coming of grace is invariably succeeded by a constant out-going of power. As a ceaseless flow necessary to the purity of water, so a ceaseless in-coming and out-going of grace is necessary to the purity of religion. This flow of grace is nothing more, nothing less than the missionary spirit. A religion that is not characterized by this spirit, instead of being like a rolling stream carrying life and verdure and fertility and beauty, is like a stagnant pool from whose bosom arise malaria, disease and death.

"The fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ," that is the qualification for successful Christian work. Brother, sister, Christian worker, have you that? If not, get it. If so, go on in your work and be successful.

Monthly Report of the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting.

Two accessions. Prayer and class meetings largely attended. Sunday-school, about as usual. Both missions doing well; the work at Bethesda especially encouraging.

Felicity.—Sunday congregations good; average attendance about one hundred and fifty. Prayer meeting attendance about seventy. Class meetings all largely attended. Fifteen accessions. Sunday-school increasing.

Rayne Memorial.—Average attendance on Sunday morning service about seventy-five. Prayer meeting as usual. Sunday-school doing well, and raised $12 for missions. Three applicants for membership.

Moreau.—Better attendance. Three additions. Collections taken for missions and Conference claimants. Sunday-schools prosperous.

Dryades.—Congregations generally better. Sunday afternoon lectures to the masses fully attended. Much better spiritual state; conversions at every service. Sunday-school has had additions.

Louisiana Avenue.—General increase at all services. Sunday services, attendance about one hundred and forty. Fine class; attendance, forty. Twenty-five additions since the first of the year. Seventy attending prayer meeting. Has a full Sunday-school. Good prospects for completing the new church; work going on.

Algiers.—Congregations as usual. A number of people sick. One accession. Congregations at Goulsboro improving. Bro. Johns reported hopefully of this point. Has revival services in contemplation.

Gretna.—Bro. Van Valkenburgh reported an average attendance of seventeen. Sunday-school doing well. This point needs steady pastoral attention.

Craps Street.—Attendance good, there being a general increase over last month.

Parker Chapel.—Increase in attendance at all services. Three accessions. "Delightful missionary prayer meeting."

Bishop Keener was present, and gave a talk, instructive and stimulating, on the importance of stressing the supernatural element of Christianity in our preaching.

Bro. Roy reported the Lower Coast Mission. A difficult work, extending down the river sixty miles, embracing points on both sides. People distinguished for general worldliness. Has about forty members. Two good Sunday-schools at work. Has several prayer meetings on the work. At one point has as many as seven ladies who pray in public.

Dr. Talmage is tired of creeds and creed-makers. He says he has made his creed for all time to come, and here it is:

"My creed: The glorious Lord. To trust him, love him and obey him, is all that is required. To that creed I invite all mankind. T. De Witt Talmage."

Widows and Orphans' Fund.

Referring to Bro. W. A. Gunning's article, of eighteenth instant, urging the ministers of Mississippi Conference to raise the amounts assessed for widows and orphans and superannuated preachers by the Joint Board of our Conference. I wish, as a member of that Board and a member of the Conference, to say, Amen. Brethren, we ought to raise the money at once. We can do it. I have been a member of this Board for twelve years, and know from experience what are the urgent needs of this honored class of dear brethren. Bros. Chambers, Thornton and Gunning are showing commendable zeal in laboring as officers in this good work. Let us go to work, and during March ask for (and we will receive), at least, half of our assessments for the superannuates and widows and orphans of our deceased ministers. Let us explain the plan adopted by the Joint Board and approved by the Conference. That plan provides for the quarterly payment of the claimants the amount apportioned to them.

Brethren, let us all and at once take hold of this matter and do it. Only tell your people what we need and how much we need it, and they will respond. Send your money to W. M. Thornton, Lake, Miss.

Enforcing Discipline.

Bishop Haygood made some pertinent remarks on this subject at the last session of the North Georgia Conference, which we reproduce from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, of last week. We ask all our pastors, especially those in our cities, to "meditate on these things."

We can not cure the evils complained of by General Conference resolutions, by adding new statutes to our book of law, by mere preaching against these evils themselves, or by any number of pastoral letters from your general superintendents.

Home religion alone will cure these evils. The evil spring breaks out by the hearthstone; its poisonous waters must be healed in the home.

But as to enforcing discipline it is common to say, "It can't be done in the cities." As things are, that is absolutely true. And why? Chiefly because the official staff is not composed of men who know and love our discipline. Time was when our Official Boards were largely composed of class leaders, exhorters, local preachers and others who by their very position in the church represented its spiritual side. The time has come when the Board of Stewards is practically the governing body in church and Quarterly Conference. How are the stewards appointed? We know what their qualifications ought to be. The Discipline is very plain. The little book says:

"Let the stewards be men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business of the church."

Extreme statements are always more or less false, and when they concern men, unjust. I do not wish to rail at the preachers, my dear brethren, who are, after all, the best men I know. But who is responsible for the character of our stewards? No steward can be elected without the consent of the preacher in charge. He nominates; the Quarterly Conference elects.

Is it not true—lamentably true—that in many of our churches, especially in our largest and richest city churches, that we find among the stewards many who are not "men of solid piety," who neither "know our doctrines nor our discipline," and who, therefore, do not love either doctrine or discipline? Why are such men made stewards? For their ability in business, for their influence, for their money and their ability to pay. It is a scheme to augment receipts and to cultivate influence. As in society we brevet a man—whether he ever smelled gun-powder or not—

"Colonel" or "General" for his corpulence and cash, so in the church, to a most hurtful degree, we fill our Official Boards with unfit men for their supposed influence with people of the world and not for their devotion to the church. And with such an official staff what can the poor preacher do? Nothing. His private members and official members may indulge in all the ways of fashion and folly, and so long as they avoid gross sin, Methodist discipline is impossible. It is fixed and certain as any law; no government—domestic, educational, civil, military, or ecclesiastical, can enforce discipline beyond the opinions, sentiments and habits of its official staff.

Who is responsible for the official staff in our churches? Who appoints the class leaders? The preacher in charge. Who nominates the steward? The preacher in charge. Who nominates the Sunday-school superintendent? The preacher in charge. Who nominates the trustee? The preacher in charge.

Now, tell me who is responsible for the official staff? And let those who are responsible lay it to heart.

NOTES.

"Silas Ganderfoot" writes a characteristic letter every week for the Evangelist. We fear there are too many Christians like Silas in the matter of showing their religion to the world. With a most delicious naïveté, Silas says: "The only way that I've ever been able to let anybody know that I was religious was by jes knalling out in my munny plane words and tellin um that I had jined meetin more than thirty year ago, and that I was still a member yit."

The Illustrated Christian Weekly says: The Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost, who has recently returned from an evangelistic tour in India, says that "In all India there are not so many missionaries as there are ministers of the gospel in New York City, and yet the number of converts yearly in India will be from five to ten times as great as the number of conversions in New York."

If that is true, the "church at home" needs to fast and pray as it never did before. If that state of things continues for any length of time, India will be sending gospel missionaries to this country.

Last week's Independent contained the following:

We have been delighted with an extremely able editorial in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the organ of the M. E. Church, South, against the lottery. It takes no stock in Mr. Morris' "withdrawal," and wishes no cessation in the fight.

We have received a number of private letters containing the same commendation, only in stronger terms, by which we have been greatly encouraged. If this CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is prohibited from speaking out against a faction whose only purpose was to fast upon our people the lottery abolition for another quarter of a century, then we shall, of our own accord, fall back upon a "hackwood" circuit.

If there is one thing that should characterize preaching more than another, it is definiteness. The student of the Bible must see that everywhere in its pages God never left his preachers in doubt as to what they were to preach. They were told specifically and definitely what to proclaim. "Preach the preaching that I bid thee." The design of the gospel is the salvation of men from sin. As preaching that is not in harmony with this design is too indefinite to accomplish anything. Our own hearts must "yearn o'er dying men" before we can frame a sermon to reach this design, and when we have framed it, we must preach it, aiming only to accomplish that design. Let us be more definite in describing sin, more definite in presenting Christ as a Savior from sin. "Stomping round generally" is not preaching.

As every preacher expects to take a missionary collection, the following by Rev. W. P. Lovejoy, in the Wesleyan Advocate, is a broad hint that may do good:

Allow me to say, in all soberness, getting the money is not the most important part of a missionary collection. The chief end to be gained by the preacher and people to be filled with the spirit of the gospel which is the spirit of missions.

How is this to be done? The preacher must lead—that is his business. He will take earnest prayer and study on his part. That spirit that burns in the hearts of Lamboth, Allen, Anderson, and the rest, must burn in his heart. Until he is ready to go to the ends of the earth to preach the gospel and stay there till he dies, he can not understand the genius of Christianity, nor is he prepared to preach a sermon on missions. This missionary movement is the main channel through which the church is pouring the waters of salvation among the nations of the earth. The preacher must get into the current or his work will be a failure.

OBITUARIES.

HUGHES.—Our mother, SARAH HUGHES, was born April 7, 1802, and fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 18, 1892, at 7:30 A. M., only lacking a few days of the ripe age of ninety years.

She was the daughter of Ransom and Elizabeth Thacker; was born in Buncombe county, N. C., removed with her parents from there to Tennessee, from thence to Kentucky; then to Arkansas, and was in the sink-land region at the time of the terrible earthquake that has left its indelible marks on that section of country. From Arkansas her father went to Louisiana, and she, a little girl of ten summers, was in four miles of New Orleans when the battle of 1812 was fought.

When a girl she was married to Milton M. Scott of Louisiana, by whom she was the mother of six children. She was left a widow in 1834. She was married in 1839 to Turlington Hughes, of Tennessee, by whom she raised two boys. She was a widow the second time, Nov. 22, 1847. For her eight children are still living.

For years she had lived with her youngest son, J. H. Hughes, at whose house she was when the angel came for her. She was very fond of her children, and devotedly attached to her youngest; and the world is seldom blessed with the sight of as much filial affection as was displayed by the son and his precious wife to their old and blind mother. I know that thousands of times the Master has looked on with pleased eyes as he saw these children endeavoring to fulfill his glorious command of honoring their parents.

For years our mother had been entirely blind; but, by an eye of faith, she could always see Jesus; and she never tired of talking of her hopes for the better land. She rests from her labors, but, thank God! her influence still lives, and although she is gone from earth, the earnest talks that she gave her neighbors will live and be felt for days to come. No longer does she roam her way, but the "darkened places" have been removed, and her enraptured vision now takes in the glories of the God she served for more than three score years. Oh, that God may sanctify her long life and peaceful death to all our good, and bring us all to join her "just beyond the river!" Farewell, my precious mother, who, years ago, gave me the trusting, helping wife who has so long shared the toils of life side by side with me. Mattie and I will meet you in the kingdom.

CARR.—Sister SARAH H. CARR was born in Rockingham county, N. C., Feb. 10, 1808. She was married to Jno. F. Carr, May 21, 1827, with whom she moved to Mississippi, and settled at Crawford, Lowndes county, in 1835. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1840. From then till God called her—Nov. 18, 1891—she was true to its economy, its doctrines and its experience. She knew God; she had an experience of his grace. She was faithful to him, to his church, and his ministers. In the four years, as her pastor, I visited her often, and was always greeted by her experience and joy. She was the mother of ten children, five of whom survive her. She left them all on the way to heaven. She lived happily with her husband fifty-seven years. The golden wedding was celebrated in 1877. They lived together so long, so harmoniously, so happily, that it is no wonder that she was so sad and heart-broken when the husband left her—the "twain had become one flesh" in truth. She was so anxious to join him on the other shore. She loved her children and grandchildren; but she longed for the companionship of "the best." It was with joy that she hailed the coming of the messenger that called her over. Bro. Jones, who was her pastor when she died, writes me that she "died peacefully." I could believe it, for I knew her so well. The preachers who have been pastors at Crawford will note this tribute with tenderness, remembering the many kindnesses rendered by Sister Carr. In the four years' association with her I have heard her speak of former pastors—and it was always with tenderness. "She esteemed them very highly, in love, for their work's sake."

In offering this poor tribute to Sister Carr's memory, I feel as though I were writing of one who was connected by ties of blood. I feel a personal bereavement, like her own children feel. With them I can rejoice that her sufferings are ended—that she has entered into the rest that remaineth with the people of God. God help us to meet her there.

T. H. MALONE.

JOLLY.—Mrs. MISSOURI E. JOLLY (nee Johnson) was born in Neshoba county, Miss., Feb. 4, 1872, and died Dec. 13, 1891; was married to Mr. J. E. Jolly, Dec. 19, 1889. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1889, under the ministry of Rev. W. W. Cammack. She lived a pure Christian life and died a glorious death.

No one saw the angel; no one heard the flutter of its snowy wings; no one perceived the track of light that marked its way; no one heard the rush of celestial music when the pearly gate opened; no one but the form on the pillow heard the summons. The human eye could only note the death-damp on the beautiful brow, the white mist as it drifted on, obscuring the light of the kindly brown eyes, the tremulous lips, the fluttering breath, and the human ear could only note the "death-rattle." It failed to hear the songs, the harping and the hallelujahs, when the heavenly cortege came out to meet the returning angel with its precious burden—a redeemed soul. It did not even hear the sun of the jeweled lock, as the gate swung to. It could not. To tell there was only the silence that we of earth call the "hush of death."

Just before her soul entered the "dark valley" she assured them that all was well, with her, and requested them all to meet her in the world beyond the grave. It seems very hard to part with her whom we loved so well; yet we know that our loss is her eternal gain. She leaves husband, child, and only brother, besides many relatives and a very large number of friends, to mourn her loss. She was dearly beloved by all who knew her. Truly all might profit by her example. May God comfort the bereaved ones in their deepest afflictions!

DAVIS.—Miss MARY ANN DAVIS was born Oct. 25, 1823; was married to Rev. J. S. Davis, Feb. 28, 1841, and died Dec. 31, 1891, at the home of her sister, Mrs. M. M. Hayes, in Opelousas, La.

She joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life, and lived a consistent, holy life, and died a triumphant death. She possessed a sweet spirit; was kind and loving to all. Her life was spent in doing good, working for the Master. I doubt that she ever lost an opportunity for doing good. I knew her for several years, but was intimately associated with her the last year of her life, as her pastor. How often have I left her presence cheered and comforted by her kind words. "I visited her often during her last sickness; found her suffering intensely at times, but always cheerful and happy. She bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude, and rejoiced in the glory of God. She expressed herself as anxious to depart and be with Jesus, yet patient and willing to abide the Lord's time."

Her dying testimony was bright, clear, satisfactory and comforting. She exhorted all present to live for Christ and meet her in heaven, and sent messages to absent loved ones. About the last words she uttered were, "let me go." And was soon gone to join the blood-washed throng in the glory-world, leaving four children, grandchildren, brothers, sisters and a host of friends to mourn her death. May the grace of God comfort and sustain the bereaved!

ROSSER.—Little MAUD ELLA, daughter of Bro. A. N. and Sister M. E. Rosser, came into this world March 31, 1891, and on Sept. 27, of the same year, took her departure to a more congenial clime.

The little visitor stayed but long enough to seize the new affections of her parents' hearts, and take them as her sweet offering to her King. At Brownsville, Illinois county, all that was mortal of the little one was tenderly laid to rest, while the immortal, innocent and beautiful sped to an eternal rest in the Father's house, still laden with the fragrant perfume of his creating breath. Others of the same family were there to welcome her, for Bro. and Sister Rosser have before buried John Henry, aged one year five months and nineteen days; Ida May, four years and eight months; Early Hern, one year and twelve days; and Andrew Hiles, nine months and seventeen days. Out of seven, all save two have passed quickly on to the city of joy and peace. One by one the ties that would have bound them here have been transferred to heaven. The far-off home draws near to them, and some day at the Father's bidding they, too, will step into its fearless glories. So, Lord, may it be. H. M. ELLIS.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Hadenberger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and he is well. I know it saved his life." Trv it.

The great doctrines of the Bible relating to the incarnation, divinity, atoning death, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ, and to man's justification through his sacrificial work as the "High Priest of our profession," are cardinal in the Christian system. They can not be dispensed with without essentially changing the nature of the system, and laying a "foundation" different from the one that God has laid.—The Independent.

We use Alcohol

pure alcohol to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING. Alcohol is good for leather; it is good for the skin. Alcohol is the chief ingredient of Cologne, Florida Water, and Bay Rum the well known face washes. We think there is nothing too costly to use in a good leather preservative.

Acme Blacking retails at 20c. and at that price sells readily. Many people are so accustomed to buying a dressing or blacking at 5c. and 10c. a bottle that they cannot understand that a blacking can be cheap at 20c. We want to meet them with cheapness if we can, and to accomplish this we offer a reward of

for a recipe which will enable us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. We hold this offer open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

THE SURE DEFENSE.

BY HARRIET NEWELL SWANWICK.

A trial came without a note of warning,
Confronted me, as in the peaceful dawn
I opened my eyes;
Then, like a frightened bird, that flies with startled cry
From sudden danger on the ground, to tree-top high.

So did my spirit rise.
I looked to one above, with earnest pleading,
My burdened, fluttering heart followed his leading.

Through darkest of dark days,
In silence waited, listening for an answer word.
While faith's pure flame burned low, nor yet a voice I heard—
Fast finding out his way.

Night came; the stars looked down on burden falling.
On face upturned, no more for refuge calling,
But full of trust renewed;
And tears, bright, happy tears, washed off all stains of grief.
Faith's fire leaped high, burned strong, its faintness was but brief.
Love sings its raptitude!

Matchless Learning.

BY REV. J. W. HARMON.

When Christ was conversant with his disciples, they displayed an amazing amount of ignorance, their stupidity was astounding, their dullness of apprehension marvelous. While they were under his immediate presence and authority, he often upbraided them for their want of common sense, their weakness and childishness.

"Are ye also yet without understanding? O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have said?"

But when he left them, and sent them forth as his commissioned ambassadors to set up and govern a church in his name, then they stood before the world the most accomplished linguists on earth, the most learned and the ablest disputants the world ever heard. They overwhelmed with arguments the Jewish Sanhedrin, they baffled the rabbis, they out-reasoned the profoundest philosophers of the world; kings were nonplussed in their presence.

Their faculties were broadened, their perceptive powers were quickened, their minds were furnished with a stock of information and rare abilities, that would have taken the ablest men a lifetime of training and study to have acquired, and then fallen short.

It is true, there is something in position and authority that raises men's abilities; for the very genius of government does sometimes inspire and strengthen men with a grasp of mind and a quickness of apprehension that would never have appeared in them but for the accident of position. Office, position, leadership, does sometimes raise men above their prejudices, lifts them above their little defects, moulding and framing them above their former condition, giving a subtle spirit which permeates their whole nature, changing their thoughts and widening out the range of their ambition. We need not pause to philosophize over this thing, as it is clear from observation and experience.

Yet one thing we will not admit: that these things of which we speak could have worked in the apostles such a marvelous and stupendous change, and in so short a time.

They were endowed with power, but not from office or from any government on earth. It was power, but unlike any power ever known among men. It was the Spirit and power of God. It was a magnificent miracle of power installing them in their offices, and setting them forth before the world perfect linguists of all languages, and the most learned scholars and men the world ever saw.

Christ found them dull, ignorant, stupid, childish and destitute of all endowments; but, by his supernatural and God-like power, he created in them all that versatility of learning, all those masterly abilities, and all that eloquence and power of disputation which confounded their opponents and made them the most erudite ambassadors and diplomats the world ever knew.

If the knowledge of languages, a depth of learning, the power of disputation and persuasiveness of speech were not essential to the gospel ministry, do you suppose God would have performed such an amazing and peculiar miracle as to equip the apostles with such rare endowments, when in their former judgments they regarded them as worthless.

Shame upon the impudence and ignorance of that folly that would deery learning in order to fit the ministry for the grandest vocation on earth, having their argument upon the idea that the apostles were illiterate and never made the acquaintance of the university! They graduated in the school of Christ; their diplomas were accredited by the God of all wisdom, making them the learned men of all ages and all time, and from the followers of Christ became the grandest leaders of the world, and the greatest preachers among men.

The Advocate Gets a Defense.

DEAR BROTHER: I send you with this $2, for which you will please send me the ADVOCATE. My subscription will take the place of Thos. S. Jones, M. D., of Baton Rouge, La., who gets so indignant over what he terms "the ADVOCATE going into politics." I want to say to you, my brother, that I have admired your fearlessness in fighting the great enemy of Jesus Christ, the Louisiana Lottery. No man can do Christ a greater service (whether he be preacher, editor or layman) than to spend his life against this damnable curse which blots our boasted Christian civilization along with the liquor traffic. What a come-to-pass it is with all if the church is to quit fighting sin because the sin is in politics! What a fortress for the devil would politics be! Indeed, what a Bastille politics have already become for the devil! "There is no place in politics for the Decalogue and Golden Rule," says the devil, as he sits enthroned in the political realms of this world-renowned land of liberty.

"Amen!" says such Christians as Thos. S. Jones, M. D. "The church must keep out of politics," says Thos. S. Jones, M. D. "Amen!" says the devil. Why? Because the political stronghold of this country has become the Vatican of hell, and because it is one of the devil's greatest peculiarities to go where he is strongest and safest, and that place in this country is in politics. Suppose the church did whip Apollyon and all his cohorts out of everything in this world except politics, think you that we would then be ready for the millennium? No, indeed. Leave the devil in politics, and you have as complete a hell on earth as a mean devil can make. I am not one of the kind who would shut my brother politician out from the plan of salvation. I believe it is as much the duty of the church to try to save the politician as well as the humblest voter. When Christ sent out his twelve first circuit workers, the Book says, "He gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases." From that day to this it has been the duty of every worker for Christ to cast out devils wherever they are found, and to cure diseases. If there is a devil in politics, cast him out. If government of State or municipality is diseased, cure it, or die trying. That's my doctrine, because my Book teaches it. If John the Baptist had not got mixed up in politics, he would not have lost his head; but he would have been a cowardly traitor, and not a glorious hero.

If our blessed Lord had not tried to reform the politics of this old wicked world, he never would have been nailed to the cross. If Stephen and Paul and St. John and St. Chrysostom and a whole host of others had stayed out of politics, they had not been slain. Stay out of politics, indeed. That is just the trouble to-day: keeping Jesus Christ out of politics, and it always will be, just so long as the pulpit and pew get down and pray, "Thy kingdom come," and go out and vote for the meanest scoundrel on earth for office of public trust. Carry the church into politics; why not? God knows politics needs it bad enough, and politics will never be cleaned up until the church does go in and do the job. Just for a change, how would this suit? Instead of hanging on our walls in Sunday-school rooms and churches such mottoes as, "Charity never faileth," and "Gather the children in," and "Thy kingdom come," put instead, in great bold letters, such mottoes as these: "For governor, a Christian gentleman;" "For secretary of State, a lover of the righteousness of Jesus Christ;" "For mayor, a man with a clean life;" "For any office, no rascals need apply." That's carrying the church into politics, and why not? Go on with the fight, my brother. God and the angels and the Christian people are backing you, and will take this country for Christ yet before the battle ends. Yours in his name,

JAS. McCASKILL.

Columbus, Miss.

[We have received a number of other replies to Dr. Jones' letter, all commending our course; but we do not think it necessary to publish them. Dr. Jones' letter has done the ADVOCATE a great deal of good.—EDITOR.]

The Six Days of Creation.

To Bro. A. D. Miller:

In the ADVOCATE, of Feb. 11, you ask if anyone can reconcile the commonly received six literal days of creation with the late opinion of those who make a day in that account a vast and indefinite period of time. It has always been held by me, as by all people who have received the Scriptures in every age, that in Gen. 1 a day means day—an evening and morning of twenty-four hours; nor will any other view agree with the numerous places in God's Word where the days of creation are absolutely limited to a common, literal day, such as, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, for in six days God made the heaven and the earth and rested on the seventh day." "Six days shalt thou labor and, do all thy work."

(Exodus xxiii, 12; Deut. v, 13, and many other places.) But it is contended by scientists that geology disproves the twenty-four-hour day of creation, and theologians to meet them have resorted to the "six days of vast and indefinite ages" system to make Bible and science agree. How far it is right apparently to wrest our Scriptures to make them agree with geology, I do not know; though it must be admitted that a day does not always mean twenty-four hours in the Bible. But in all such cases it is made perfectly plain as such, as Christ says of Abraham, "In his day," i. e., his whole life or generation. And the prophet himself declares in prophecy, "A day shall stand for a year."

But the question with us is, What does a creative day mean in Gen. 1?—and I most unhesitatingly assert I believe it means a common day and night of twenty-four hours, and the phraseology of "the evening and morning" making it confirms it. To this agree all the law and the prophets, as well as all ages and people of Jews and Christians in every part of the world.

But must we fly in the face of demonstrated science which shows, they say, by incontestable proof that the body of this earth is thousands or millions of years older than the race that inhabits it? True science, as well as the Bible both alike come from God, and when understood will agree. The trouble has come from making the earth no older than the race—the house no older than the dweller. This the Scripture never asserts, but just the contrary.

In Gen. 1, 1, the Bible declares: "In the beginning God made the heavens and the earth." Now, in old Hebrew Bibles this verse stands wide apart from the following verse, and forms an independent sentence to itself. It is certain that this earth is as old as anything God ever made, for it was made "in the beginning"—in the first creation. Now, shall we suppose God never made anything till six thousand years ago? The phrase itself leads us to suppose "this beginning" reached away back into untold ages of past eternity. Then was the earth—the body of the earth—created, and verse 2 only shows us its condition when God came to fix it up—prepare it for man's habitation; for God says, "It was void, and without form, neither round nor square, and darkness dwelt upon it"—far away from sun and light. This was the state the world or earth was in, and may have existed myriads of ages in this chaotic state, and this will give geologists all the time they want without our twisting a day into myriads of ages.

Moreover, Dr. Clarke, on Gen. 1, 1, states the word et in Hebrew our translators left out, and the verse literally rendered would be, "In the beginning God created the substance of the heavens and the earth." This also confirms the above theory. The substance of the earth created in the beginning lay dark, void and chaotic till the Spirit breathed upon it. Should any object to God's making heaven and earth as though that referred to a primal creation, it is known make often means to fix, prepare, etc. As to the word heaven, which is said to have been made in these six days, we answer that Clarke says that word never refers to the starry heavens in Hebrew, but only to our armament. So upon this system we can admit the body of the earth is millions of years old without making a day mean a thousand years.

Some Things That Should Be Made Known.

MR. EDITOR: By your permission, I wish to make, through the columns of the ADVOCATE, some inquiries of the brethren that manage and appropriate the money collected for domestic missions.

First, I wish to know why the amount paid each laborer is not published in the Minutes. I have noticed, for several years past, there has been no mention in the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference (I don't know as to other Conferences) of the preachers that are aided by this fund.

The treasurer of the Board of Missions, Dr. T. S. West, reports, "Amount paid to domestic missionaries, $3,075.05." If he had added, immediately following the above, the names of the domestic missionaries, with the amount paid each opposite his name, his report would have been entirely satisfactory; but, as it is, the contributors to this fund do not know, from the report, who share their liberality. Some of them may get some information from other sources, but the majority of our Methodist people are uninformed as to who gets their money. It would not require more than fifteen or twenty minutes to write the names of the missionaries, with the amounts appropriated to each, and it would not take up more than one page in our published Minutes. The omission of the names of the missionaries is not for lack of time and space. Then, if not for this reason, for what reason is the needed information withheld?

Secondly, I wish to know why preachers that get a reasonable support from the people they serve are called missionaries; and why such missionaries receive larger appropriations than others that are in reality missionaries, and very needy ones, too. If the inside facts were published, the people would open their eyes in wonder when they come to know what a lot of missionaries we have in the Mississippi Conference. Whew! missionaries indeed! They are not ambitious to obtain the martyr's crown, I suspect. I suggest that we call a spade by that name. If some of these brethren that are denominated "domestic missionaries" in the treasurer's report are rightly named, why may not Drs. Black and Andrews be called missionaries? The only thing that blinds them from attaining this enviable distinction is the failure of an appropriation from the Board of Domestic Missions. Now, if some one of the Mission Board will tell us why they do not publish the names of the beneficiaries of the domestic mission fund, and, secondly, why they call a preacher that gets an ample support from the people he serves a missionary, some of us will feel better satisfied, provided the explanation is reasonable.

A Unique Missionary Meeting.

As the schooling age is the age for the greatest development of character, I do not know of a more pleasant sight than to see a group of school-girls assembled in a missionary meeting. Since my earliest connection with the Memphis Conference Female Institute, I have rejoiced to feel that in our midst was an earnest missionary spirit. The leader of this spirit is Mrs. A. W. Jones, the lady principal of the school. She has a little school in China called the Amos Jones Mission School, and makes yearly remittances. Is it any wonder that we have caught her fervor, and that we have an active society? It is principally of the last two meetings that I want to tell you.

We studied China, in a general way, for our January meeting. One girl studied it, and gave an accurate account of situation and climate; another gave its physical conditions, its principal mountains, rivers, etc.; another its natural resources; another its government and religion; another its antiquities; another its mission stations. All this was done in a lively way, and gave the country a living interest. We forgot that a broad ocean divided us. We continued this subject for the February meeting, but took up the eighteen provinces separately. To say this would lead one to believe we had a dull meeting, but it was decidedly the most interesting and most beneficial missionary meeting I ever attended. The girls told the history of the different provinces in a simple way, interweaving with facts the mythology, etc., of the different provinces; and in this way the facts were robbed of dryness, the attention gained, interest aroused and knowledge imparted. I wish more of our societies could be led to acquaint themselves with the important mission fields; then they could work more intelligently.

We enjoyed a missionary mass meeting given by Miss Barnes at the First M. E. Church, last Sunday. In spite of the lowering clouds, quite a number, with umbrellas and rubbers, went out to get the benefit of Miss Barnes' experience in Mexico. TEACHER.

City Pastors and Church Papers.

If there are any men in the world who should labor to circulate church papers, and especially the church organ, those men are the pastors of large city churches. Many of them say that they haven't time to do this, when the truth is, they haven't time not to do it. Their congregations are subjected to so many diversions, dissipations and temptations, and they themselves have so many delicate responsibilities to meet, that they can not afford to be without such help as a wise, strong religious journal would afford. We are not writing in the interest of an individual or business enterprise, but for the church and humanity. The city churches have suffered and been weakened at many points, and we must do our part in trying to repair these wastes.

There are many loyal city pastors, and there are many members of city churches who are true to the cause; in fact, the best type of true Christians we have known anywhere are to be found in city churches—but these are much blundered in their work by the lack of proper conductors. We have seen all too plainly that the city church, as a rule, is not meeting the demands in the conversion of souls and general evangelical work. It is not keeping pace with the movements of the busy world, and especially is it behind the tide of worldliness and sin. The membership there is more ignorant of the rules and usages of the church, and less in rapport with the genius and march of Christianity. They are fairly well versed in local politics, but their lives are limited in range and grasp.

To meet and remedy all this, and raise the church to the plane of a true, live church, the resources are limited. The pastor who thinks he is all-sufficient for the demands is sadly deluded, however famous, learned and eloquent he may be. One hour a week is about all he has with a large part of his congregation. From two to four weeks a year is about all that he can make to his homes. Meantime the currents of business, society, amusements and many other dissipations are strong and rapid. Nearly every home, too, has its daily newspaper, filled with some that is good, but much that is contaminating and demoralizing. These papers, it is true, appealing the popular, and the religious sentiment, and wanting to make capital of it, have much to say about churches and the religious movements going on. And they even essay to moralize and teach on this line, but they give such an adulterated concoction as to be more harmful than helpful. The daily newspaper is all the church organ that thousands of city church members ever see; and so far as that, and much else, is concerned, they had better never see any.

Now, place by the side of these facts that other discouraging fact that there are fewer church papers taken by city members than by any other class, and that there is less effort made to circulate them there than anywhere else, and you see at once a chief reason for the failure of the city church. We do not say, by any means, that the church paper can meet all the demands, but we do say that, if it is of the right sort, it will be the best help that a city pastor can have. If we could get it into every home, it would make its visits every week, and stay there to speak and to be studied all the time. The city pastor can better afford to spend time in getting his people to subscribe for the church organ than any other. His church is dying because of the lack of such work, and yet, as a rule, he does less of it than any other class of pastors.

The Herald and Preacher says that "Chaplain McOane is reported to have said that it would pay his church, the Methodist Episcopal, to stop all operations long enough to put the church paper into every home in the church. He has well and wisely spoken, except in regard to stopping operations. Why not make it a part of the operations?" Yes, it would make a good part. Many operations, most vital to the church, are already stopped; but, with the information and stimulus of the church paper, might soon be brought to life and put in active operation. Many of our pastors need to speak to their members on vital points; and if we can get the church organ into every Methodist family, they will have a medium through which they can speak at any time. We need, above all things, to take the church from the control of the daily press, and place it where it can be reached by higher influences.—Westleyan Christian Advocate.

JESUS IN THE VEDAS; OR, THE Testimony of Hindu Scriptures in Corroboration of the Rudiments of Christian Doctrine. By a native Indian missionary. 12mo., leatherette, 50 pp., 33 cents. New York, London and Toronto: Funk & Wagnalls Company.

This is an interesting pamphlet showing the probability that the Hindu Scriptures and the Hebrew Scriptures are at one in their rudiments.

METHODIST UNION. By W. P. Harrison, D. D., Barber & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Price: cloth, 75 cents; paper, 40 cents.

The greater part of this book has already appeared in the Quarterly Review under the caption, "Bishop Simpson as a Politician." There have been several chapters added. Dr. Harrison discusses with force the acts of the General Conferences of 1844 and 1848, and shows how inconsistent have been our Northern brethren in this whole business. Those who read this book will learn some things not creditable to those who did them, and other things that put us properly before the world.

THE LIFE OF OUR LORD ON THE EARTH. By Samuel J. Andrews, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Geo. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $2.50.

We have seen and read many "Lives of our Lord," but we have never seen one constructed just like this one. In this book, the life of our Lord is considered in its historical, chronological and geographical relations. The introduction consists in a "Chronological Essay," in which the author essays to fix the dates of our Lord's birth, baptism and death. This is a very valuable contribution on that line. The body of the work displays considerable research and learning, and puts the life of Christ before the reader in clearness and vigor. The student of the New Testament will appreciate this book. It is a revised edition of a book published in 1892.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—March 13, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LA PRADÉ.

Ezekiel xxxvi, 25-38.

TIME.—B. C. 587.

PLACE.—Ezekiel was a captive in Babylon.

Promise of a New Heart.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." (Ver. 26.)

Nearly two years had gone by since the overthrow of Jerusalem. Ezekiel, a younger man than Jeremiah (though for nearly twenty-five years they were contemporaneous prophets), was among his exiled countrymen in Babylon, whither he had been carried by Nebuchadnezzar, with Coniah, about 589 B. C. The captive Jews longed for their native land, as "hy the rivers of Babylon" they wept. (Read Psalm cxxxvii.) Ezekiel knew that "Israel had a covenant relation to God ensuring restoration after chastisement;" he also knew that they must return to God-below they could return to Jerusalem. Repentance, not simply suffering, is the end sought by God when he allows for sin.

Because of unholiness they had been scattered; when they should be made clean then they might again "dwell in the land."

Ezekiel was a priest, the son of a priest. Familiar with all the ceremonial cleansings of the law, he naturally expressed himself in language suggested by them.

Ver. 25. (See Num. xix, 9-13, Heb. ix, 13, 14, and Eph. v, 26.)

Water, particularly among the Jews, was a well-known symbol of cleansing. Sin is always and everywhere filthy in a spiritual sense, however refined the sinner may seem to be. Idolatry, into which the Jews so often lapsed, was attended by great moral filthiness; it encouraged all manner of impurity. The promise of this verse has been literally fulfilled, for from the time of this captivity the Jews ceased to be idolaters.

Ver. 26, 27. Reformation is good; regeneration is essential. So Jesus taught Nicodemus. So Paul taught the church in Rom. viii, 9-11. The doctrine of the new birth, the birth "from above," is to be emphasized. Change of character, not simply improvement in conduct, is here shown to be necessary. David prayed, after he had made himself filthy by sin, "Create in me a clean heart, O God."

The Holy Spirit is the author of this change; obedience to God is the evidence of it. The truly regenerate delight to do God's will.

Ver. 28, 29, 30. Having, through spiritual cleansing—by the new birth—become the children of God, he would recognize this spiritual kinship. (Read II. Cor. vi, 17, 18.)

Temporal blessings—blessings of safety and peace and plenty—attended. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Ver. 31. The truly renewed man loathes his former sins—never boasts of them—never unnecessarily alludes to them—never desires to go back to them.

Ver. 32. "By grace are you saved." God does not mean that his heart is not full of kindness toward the sinner, but that they do not merit his good-will.

Ver. 33, 34. First right—then proper. This is the order in which God places these things. This was the Covenant; blessing should follow obedience. City and country, "waste places and desolate land," shall alike share the blessings of restoration.

Ver. 35, 36. The restoration and rebuilding would be an object-lesson to the heathen. God would speak to them in the only language they could understand. So now "Christian civilization" forces from the world at large acknowledgment of God's interest in his people.

Ver. 37, 38. Deeper, spiritual benefits—benefits to character—must also come to the people. God is to be prayed to, not because he loves to be complimented and appeased. He is above all that. He is not like a weak man, uncertain as to his position, who is miserable when he is not recognized. It is for the maintenance of our spiritual connection with him—a connection upon which depends our spiritual life—that prayer is enjoined. Men who pray know that "God is the Lord."

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER.

FOOD VS. LIQUOR.

It is said that "the value of the food products of our country, for a single year, is about $600,000,000. The cost of alcoholic drinks is about $1,485,000,000."

SAVE THE BOYS.

The Michigan Advocate says: "The figures show that the American people are drinking more intoxicants every year—not only in the aggregate, but per capita. How is that brought about? By recruiting the ranks of the drinkers. The late temperance agitator, when about sixteen years ago, when he could, at that time, have secured for temperance every boy of fifteen years of age and under, the amount of money now drunk would be very small. The hard drinkers of sixteen years ago are nearly all dead now. They fill, in all probability, a million more graves. The patrons of the dog-shops to-day were boys sixteen years ago. Save the boys."

METHODISM VS. LIQUOR.

Surely, as some see it, John Wesley, the father of us all, was somewhat of a fanatic in his opposition to the liquor traffic. These are his very words:

"The liquor dealers murder his Majesty's subjects by wholesale, neither does their eye pity or spare. They give them to sell like sheep; and what is their gain? Is it not the blood of these men? Who, then, would envy their large estates and sumptuous houses? A curse is in the midst of them, the curse of God cleaves to the bones, the timber, the furniture of them! The curse of God is in their persons, their walks, their groves; a fire that burns to the uttermost hell! blood! blood! is there; the foundation, the floor, the walls, the roof are stained with blood. And canst thou hope, O thou man of blood, though thou art clothed in scarlet and fine linen, and farest sumptuously every day, canst thou hope to deliver down thy fields of blood to the third generation? No! no! for there is a God in heaven. Therefore, thy name shall not be rooted out."

The Hon. Jno. G. Wooley, in a recent address, talked just right when he said: "When a Christian man stands up and votes the will of God, touching drink, into the ballot-box, and does it for Christ's sake and in his name, though he stand alone among a million, and against overwhelming odds of policy or politics or worldly wisdom, call that gospel temperance."

The best cure for intemperance is regeneration, and the Christian at Work well says:

"Most of all is the church to proclaim that the only hope of personal reformation, and the permanent and highest success of the temperance reform, is to be found in the person and the gospel of Jesus the Christ, for other foundations of this, and all other moral reforms, can no man lay than that which is laid, even Jesus Christ."

The St. Louis Christian Advocate quotes the following from an English paper:

"Twenty-five snakes running through the streets—that's free whisky. Twenty-five snakes gathered in a box—that's the temperance cause. Twenty-five holes are made by authority of the court—that's low license. Ten of the holes are closed and the snakes all get out through the other fifteen—that's high license. Drive all the snakes over to the next village—that's local option. Kill all the snakes—that's prohibition."

A lady said to me: "I think the Salvation Army is a low crowd, because they go around picking up people from the gutter." I said to her: "I think it is a fortunate thing for those who are in the gutter that God has sent people who are not afraid of being their respectability or selling their good clothes by stooping down to pick them up from the gutter. Some of the brightest jewels in the Savior's crown were found in the gutter, and rejoice to-day that I am one of the 'low crowd' that goes around picking people up from the gutter."—War Cry (N.Y.).

Why may not the energetic women of the New Orleans W. O. T. U., who are succeeding so well with their luncheon enterprise, send around in the near future a coffee wagon? Here is that an exchange says of the one at work in Chicago:

A coffee wagon gospel mission has been started in Chicago, having for its result the most crowded and destitute parts of the city. Good coffee and cream and sugar is sold at three cents a cup and twenty cents a gallon. Although only a few days old, it is already a formidable rival of the beer shops in the neighborhood.

We trust that there are not many teachers like the one spoken of in the following extract from the Tennessee Advocate:

A great preacher who lives not a thousand miles from New York is replete with a very strong and sweeping condemnation of the liquor traffic in Africa. We have been waiting and hoping for years that this same great preacher would say something strong and sweeping against the liquor traffic in America. But up to the time of our last press with this page he hadn't said it yet. Strange, isn't it? Years and lamentations for the rum-sodden heathen of the Dark Continent, and silence, deep and intense, over our own, our dear, our Christian land!

Christian ministers should denounce the liquor traffic at home as abroad, and round world over, for wherever licensed, be the license high or low, it is licensed to break the hearts, destroy the homes, and ruin the souls of men, and the government that does the licensing is particeps criminis to all the consequent moral devastation and eternal wreck of beings made in the image of God.

The Interior says of the Woman's Temple at Chicago: "It is the handsomest building in Chicago. The two wings would call the two sisters, standing on a pedestal of granite, in graceful drapery, and with beautiful lace work covering their shapely shoulders. It looks like woman's work. They have easily distanced all other architecture in the city—nor have we seen anything anywhere so unique in architectural stateliness and beauty."

It is safe to say that this "handsomest" building in Chicago is never likely to be polluted by the presence within its walls of that courted ally of politicians and meretricious of American women and American homes—the whisky devil.

Cardinal Manning used to tell this story: He once met an Irishman the worse of liquor. Dr. Manning stopped him. "You're an Irishman and a Catholic," said the future cardinal. "Sure, what else would I be?" answered the inebriate. "Then why don't you take the pledge and keep from disgracing your religion?" asked Dr. Manning. "I only take a drop now and then, and I'm not so far gone," answered the Irishman. Then Manning explained that he was a priest, and he had taken the pledge. The man crossed himself. "Ahh then," said he, "I never thought I'd see such a bad day, to meet a priest that had fallen so low as to have to take the pledge. God help your reverence!"—The Reformer, Glasgow.

A Northern Bishop, no doubt speaking the sentiments of all genuine Methodists of to-day, uses the following nervous language of deepest conviction:

"The church of to-day, much more the church of the future, must take to its heart the duty of combining and massing its forces against that gigantic atrocity, that diabolical conspiracy, that nameless monstrosity of modern civilization, that mothers nine-tenths of the woes and sorrows which blight and curse our modern age—the traffic in intoxicants, which hides its deformity under forms of law. How long shall the face of our Christian age bluster with this worse than pagan shame?"

Has the virtue of our time degenerated so low that we do not even blush at the legislative traffic in the souls of our own children; that by the very doors of our own homes and our temples an army of miscreants should, by authorization of laws made by Christian law-givers, prosecute a work of murder and death?—How can we go to the heathen with this cancer of worse than heathen infamy festering in our bosom?—Bishop Randolph S. Foster.

The action of the directors of the World's Fair, in opening the grounds for the sale of alcoholic liquors, has been vigorously denounced by the religious press and by the better class of secular newspapers. The New York Voice has this to say:

We are told that the World's Fair Directory must allow the sale of liquors in order that there may be on exhibition a typical German restaurant. Since the Emperor of Germany is moving upon this same typical German restaurant as a foe to civilization, it is hardly necessary for the World's Fair to take up with it.

The Chicago Interior (Presbyterian) uses emphatic language:

Disguise it as we may, soften it with whatever euphemism, this means that the local directory of this great International Exposition have decided to go into the saloon business. They are to be sharers in the profits of vending liquors on the Fair grounds. They are to be silent partners in the gains to be gotten from putting the bottle to men's lips in this high place of the nation. We brand this as a national insult. This World's Fair has governmental sanction and seal. It is no mere concern of a local directory. And yet the big brewers and liquor vendors seem to have pocketed the Fair and to be determined to pocket a large proportion of the gross receipts. We must right this wrong. The American nation is not calling the people of the earth together to exhibit a beer-garden. In a jubilee celebrating the brain's independence, we do not want to show how brains are fuddled. The cradle of American liberty was not rocked in a saloon.

The latest branch of the Methodist armies speaks thus of the saloon in the Epworth Herald:

Down with the saloon! Let that be the slogan, and every voice a trumpet to proclaim it!

Down with the saloon! It is God's relentless enemy, the nation's, and yours.

Down with the saloon! It has no respect for home, the church, the Sabbath. It curses the one, blasphemes the other, and tramples upon the third.

Down with the saloon! It breeds violence and ruin. Twenty anarchists were dragged from an apartment of a Chicago doggerly the other day. It was a fitting place for them. The two bad things mix.

Down with the saloon! It is pledged by the most infamous means to perpetuate its diabolical ruin. It fattens upon the corruption it breeds, and, like the wrecker, is enriched by the ruin it works.

Down with the saloon! It multiplies mad-houses and prisons, and crowds their cells with brutalized, ravaged, cursing human wrecks.

Down with the saloon! It controls our politics, corrupts our legislators, intimidates our judiciary, and insults every sense of decency with insolent contempt.

Down with the saloon! Its ranks are filled by troops of murderers, thieves, perjurers, tramps, libertines and harlots, who scoff at the restraints of society and thirst for blood.

Down with the saloon! It robs thousands of homes of their most promising boys, and, all besotted and ruined, hurls them into drunkards' graves.

Down with the saloon! Talk against it. Plan against it. Work against it. Fight against it. Pray against it. Vote against it.

The Mission Worker states as follows:

Every day some small children get lost in London. The bewildered little ones burst into tears, a crowd collects, some stare, some question, some pity, a few help. The friendly policeman is brought to the rescue, and when all other efforts to find the little one's home fail, the man in blue inquires: "Where does your mother get her gin?" Most of the slum children know too well this haunt of the parent, and in not a few cases has the policeman in this way been able to trace the home of the lost child.

In confirmation of the foregoing, we find these declarations in the North American Review, made by that elect W. C. T. U. woman, Lady Henry Somerset:

At a moment's glance you may see the distinctive curse of London's poor. The women drink. Mothers, daughters, sisters, wives, grown women, children of tender years—the gin is open to all, and all go to it. Nowhere in New York did I see or hear of women not utterly abandoned habitually frequenting saloons. Nowhere in London is there a public house but the women will be as good (?) customers as the men. It is impossible to overstate the influence, the soul-destroying influence of the poor, for it is by this, I am convinced, that come to be hopelessly confused where it is not absolutely lost. It is not uncommon to find a mother who since marriage has been a faithful wife, and perhaps before that a virtuous girl, looking on with indifference while her daughter "goes on the streets" and is lost in the unnumbered legions of victims hourly sacrificed to the demon of vice. She may regret the fact, as a mother in a wealthier station might regard her daughter marrying beneath her, but there is no shock, no natural horror, at the wanton marring of God's fairest handiwork, a woman's soul. In our long worship of Mammon, the shame of poverty and the shame of sin have got confused; to the poor in their misery the burden of disgrace is but a slight addition to the load they already carry.

All sorts of theories are put forward as to why so many more men are bald than women. The most frequent explanation is that men wear their hats more, though a little reflection will show that this is not the case. Lately the theory has been put forward that men grow bald because they cut their hair so often.

Of course, no one knows just how many bald women there are, for they have many ways of covering the deficiency known only to the initiated. But whatever the cause of loss of hair, premature grayness or any disease of the scalp, whether in man or woman, it can be surely and easily remedied by the use of Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which has properties peculiar to itself, being at once cleansing, stimulating and emollient. It contains no oil, but is nevertheless one of the most delightful of dressings, and as such is used by some of the ladies of the greatest taste and refinement.

If the hair has lost its vigor and is changing color, the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer will certainly restore it to its original state. It has been proved in hundreds of cases, fully authenticated. Ask your druggist for it or send to Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

He that will often put eternity and the world before him, and who will dare to look steadfastly at both of them, will find that the more often he contemplates them, the former will grow greater and the latter less.—Colton.

Good Advice. In winter more exercise is required for the body than in summer. Wear warm underclothing, material of open texture is preferable.

Avoid catching cold, but should you develop a cough take immediate steps to get rid of it.

The most effective remedy for coughs or colds is Marsden's Pectoral Balm; it is pleasant to take and never fails to cure.

Ask your druggist for it, and don't be persuaded to take any other instead.

Without the newspaper great advertisers can not exist. Without the advertiser, great and small (but mainly the small advertiser), the newspaper of to-day would be impossible.—James H. Beale, Jr.

BRIEFS.

During his recent seven months' tour General Booth visited six countries, conducted 180 meetings in 34 cities and towns, and traveled 31,797 miles.

Very clearly the lottery is moribund; but that is all the better reason why Congressman Little should press his bill and kill the concern by taxation before the Summer solstice of 1892 sets in. It is worth while to cut short by one year the misery, the woe and temptation induced by the great lottery fraud. — Christian at Work.

We hope that every pastor of a city church will read carefully the article we publish in another column, taken from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, entitled, "City Pastors and Church Papers." There is in it much "food for thought," and we have published it specially for the pastors in our cities. There are some statements made which, though true, are not creditable, and we ought not to rest satisfied until that which is not creditable to us is done away. A few days of earnest and hearty work on the line indicated in that article would work a wonderful change for the better.

Here are some statistics of our China Mission Conference: Missionaries, 15; wives of missionaries, 10; missionaries of the Woman's Board, 10; organized churches, 11; native helpers, 22; native members, 365; probationers, 83; Sunday-schools, 24; teachers, 80; scholars, 853; colleges, 2; foreign teachers, 6; native teachers, 8; native students, 236; day schools, 13; pupils, 210; collected for support of native ministry, $384.20; for mission work, $403.70; for Bishop's fund, $30; for other purposes, $283.34.

This mission was founded in 1848, and has had altogether 67 mission workers. Of these, seven died in China, three returned to the United States and died, seven transferred to the Japan Mission and fifteen retired from the work. This leaves thirty-five still in the field.

An exchange says:

In regard to homicides in this country carefully gathered statistics show an appalling increase. Nearly 6,000 murders were committed in the United States during the year 1891. Only one out of every fifty of the murderers suffered capital punishment for his awful crime. They who paid their own lives as a penalty for murder were chiefly those who had no friends — 65 negroes, 4 Indians, 1 Mexican and 1 Japanese, and 52 white men, making a total of 123. Of these 96 were in the South, to 27 in the North. Counting out those sentenced to prison, it is safe to conclude that 5,000 of the murderers of the year 1891 are at liberty, encouraged by their immunity from punishment for former crimes to exercise their malice further. That year there were 195 lynchings, an increase on the previous year of 68. Of the lynchings 169 were in the Southern and 26 in the Northern States. These lynchings naturally result from the fact previously stated, that of nearly 6,000 murderers, less than 200 were executed.

Selection of Civil Officers.

THE BIBLE RULE.

Strange as it may sound to some people, there is laid down in the Bible the only safe rule to follow in the selection of men to fill the offices of the civil government. And we are of the opinion that, if this rule had been more closely followed, governments to-day would not, in many respects, be what they are. The rule is the advice given by Jethro to Moses when he was forming the civil government of the Children of Israel. Jethro saw that Moses' methods of government were very defective, and he told him so, and then gave him advice in the matter, the wisdom of which has been vindicated wherever the rule as to selecting civil officers has been carried out. Jethro said: "Thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties and rulers of tens." Here we have stated the qualifications of a civil ruler, whether he has a small office, "ruler of tens," or a large one, "ruler of thousands." Let the reader look at those qualifications for a moment.

1. "Able men." Men with sufficient natural and acquired ability to perform the duties of the office. Incapables in office nobody would think of tolerating, for such bring the office into dishonor and make it a fruitful cause of detriment to the governed. We suppose no man in his senses will object to this Bible rule of selecting an able man for every office, from the highest to the lowest.

2. "Such as fear God." David ruled over Israel forty years, and among his last words are these: "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." His experience as a ruler led him to the conclusion that Jethro's advice in this matter was eminently wise. All authority of rulership comes from God, the Supreme Ruler, and the man who does not recognize this, who does not receive his authority as from God and exercise it under a sense of his responsibility to God, has not the fear of God before his eyes and can not rule over men to their good. He who does not fear God will have very little regard for men. It is only the God-fearing man who can perform the duties of a civil office properly. Everybody will concur in this, except those who do not believe in God as the Supreme Ruler.

3. "Men of truth." An untruthful man can not be depended upon anywhere. He is especially out of place in a public office. A public officer's relations to the people are peculiar. He is in some sense the guardian of their honor and the protector of their most sacred rights; and if he is a man of low and weak integrity, his guardianship of the people's rights and honor becomes the veriest farce. There can be no integrity of character apart from truthfulness. Everybody wants men of truth — men of integrity — in public office; except those who hope to secure their own base aims through the untruthfulness of the officer.

4. "Hating covetousness." The Revised Version has it, "Hating unjust gain." It is lamentably true that a great many seek office from a spirit of covetousness. In a public office there are doors of temptation to secure "unjust gain" so numerous that it is a place of peculiar trial, and thousands have gone down to dishonor and shame because they yielded. We see this and hear it almost every day. Indeed, it has become so common that it does not excite any surprise. The man from whose heart the covetous spirit has not been expelled is a dangerous man for a public office. After what we have seen in the past few years of defalcations and plundering the public treasury, will any sensible man object to this qualification in a public officer? We think not.

Now, the readers see what sort of men the Bible says we must put in civil office. As those who believe that old Book, and who have the right of suffrage, we are to exercise that right according to the teachings of that Book. Living under a democratic form of government, where all the citizens have an equal part in the choice of civil officers, it is our duty and privilege to "provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain, and place such over them to be rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties and rulers of tens, who shall judge the people at all seasons."

Editorial Correspondence.

When we left Jackson, Feb. 5, it was for a tour down the I. C. railroad to New Orleans, up the N. O. and N. E. railroad to Meridian, and across the A. and V. railroad to Jackson. But when we reached the Advocate office in New Orleans, and began looking over the books, etc., we changed our plans and came up the L. N. O. and T. railway, stopping at Baton Rouge, Clinton and Jackson, La. We would like to have stopped at other places along that line, but it was neither convenient nor practicable.

At Baton Rouge we were met at the train by Bro. Evans, the pastor, and hospitably entertained by Mrs. Deacon at the State University. It was the night for the meeting of the Epworth League, and we had the pleasure of being present at the exercises. Owing to the fact that the day had been devoted to the firemen's parade, followed by a banquet at night, there were but few present, but they manifested much interest in the organization. Bro. Evans gives the League his hearty support, and if his suggestions are carried out (and we have no doubt they will be), a great forward move may be expected in that church this year. The committee ordered by the constitution will be enlarged, subdivided and put to work. One committee he proposes to enlarge to, at least, twenty; subdivide it, and to one subdivision commit the work of putting our Methodist publications, and especially the New Orleans Christian Advocate, into every Methodist family in the city. We heard a clear exposition of the objects and aims of the Epworth League as we have ever heard. Could the ideal League be realized in every church, we could and would save many a Christian from lukewarmness and backsliding, and reach thousands of the spiritually destitute.

From Baton Rouge we went across to Clinton, La. It had been over twenty years since we last walked those streets. There have been but few changes in the appearance of the town in that length of time. The same church-building which has been in use for considerably over a quarter of a century stands unchanged. We saw a record of all the pastors who have filled that pulpit since 1859. The list opened with the name of Geo. H. Clinton, 1859, and closed with J. J. Smylie, 1892. A few of the prominent and influential members of twenty years ago are there; but most of them have gone to their final reward. Here is where we first attended school; here is where we were first kept in (school-boy phraseology); here is where our tears first stained the blue-back spelling-book, and here the teacher still lives who won her way so far into our heart.

From Clinton we drove over to Jackson, La., the location of Centenary College. In company with Dr. Hunnicutt and others, we walked over the buildings and grounds, and were much gratified at the vast improvements which have been made in the last four or five years. The dormitories have been fitted up, the chapels improved and new recitation-rooms opened to meet the demands. We noticed also an embryonic gymnasium—a necessity in all our colleges, but frequently lacking. We had hoped to meet Bro. Harry, the recently appointed agent, but he was away on business connected with the college. We found Presiding Elder Johnson hard at work trying to solve the problem of how to fill in twelve weeks twenty appointments stretching from the Mississippi river to the Alabama line, unpack his goods and chattels, study, and wrestle with la grippe. Bro. Carley, the pastor, is now living in a neat new parsonage near the church, and seems hopeful and cheerful. We were very sorry we could not spend a longer time with him and his good people, but necessity was laid upon us to come home. We reached Jackson, Miss., at eleven A. M., Saturday, Feb. 27, after an absence of nearly one month.

Our Conference Claimants' Collection.

We call the attention of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to the fact that three weeks from the date of this issue of the Advocate, your joint Board of Finance will be expected to remit to our superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers one-fourth the amount apportioned to them out of the collections ordered for that purpose. In order to further this design, they offered the following, which was unanimously adopted by the Conference:

"We urge upon the pastors the necessity of early collections. We recommend that this collection be taken on its own merits, each preacher in charge forwarding the same, as soon as collected, to the treasurer of the Joint Board.

"We recommend the adoption of a quarterly settlement with the claimants, and to secure this have made the following apportionments for next year, payable April 1, July 1, Oct. 1, and final settlement at the next session of the Annual Conference."

One of our presiding elders has called attention to this collection through this paper, and we presume the others have done so privately. We trust each presiding elder during the next two weeks will urge this collection upon his preachers, and the preachers in their turn upon the people.

There is scarcely a claim that commends itself so forcibly to the mind and appeals so strongly to the heart of the church as this one. We find scores of passages in the Bible, besides countless unanswerable arguments outside of Holy Writ, for the occupancy of foreign fields. By these we are constrained to carry or send the gospel into the very heart of heathendom, constantly looking for and expecting the redemption of the world. But while all this is so, shall we neglect those who through their self-denying ministry brought us to the Light that we might see? We think this is not, can not be, the intention of any.

In "Report No. 2, Joint Board of Finance," offered Dec. 10, we find this sad commentary:

"Your Board have again to complain of the lack of information which they should have had from the ministers as to the condition of these claimants residing in their several charges."

The Board, in order to have before them all the information needed, have sent to each pastor having claimants within his charge a blank report asking for the name and address of each applicant, age, state of health, amount of income (if any), from what source, the number of children under sixteen, and any other information obtainable that will aid them in the just distribution of the funds in hand. We will be excused for making an extract from a private communication received from a member of the Board recently:

"We send this" (referring to the blank reports just mentioned) "form to each preacher who has a claimant on his work. All he is required to do is to fill it up, put it in an envelope, already addressed and stamped, seal it, and drop it in the post-office. Do you think they will all do it?"

We leave the answer to this question to each pastor who has a claimant on his work.

Millsaps College.

We spent about an hour last Thursday in company with Bishop Galloway looking over the Millsaps College building, now in process of erection.

The college is located on what is commonly known as the Hemmingway Place, about one mile north of Jackson, and is on one of the highest eminences in this vicinity. The walls are up above the second story, and are nearly ready for the flooring of the third. The main building will be 107x80 feet, and three stories high, besides the basement and tower. There will be a chapel with a comfortable seating capacity of six hundred, two society halls, a library and president's offices, besides twelve class-rooms. The building is in plain view of the I. C., Y. and M. V., and A. and V. railroads. At its present height, it is visible at a distance of nearly five miles in the country, with another story and tower yet to be added. The walls will be completed and ready for the roof in about four weeks, and the contractor expects to have the whole thing completed about the last of May. During the Summer the trustees expect to have erected, at least, four other buildings to serve as boarding-houses, and such like, so that the college will surely open—unless providentially hindered—next Fall with all the modern improvements for successful school teaching and an endowment fund of over one hundred thousand dollars.

We understand the trustees are in correspondence with distinguished educators throughout the country, and will, no doubt, elect a faculty early in the Spring. Bro. Watkins informs us that the notes now due on the endowment and special funds are being paid, and if the few whose notes have not yet been paid will kindly send in the amounts now due, this matter can soon be closed up, and undivided attention given to other things.

To see Millsaps College is to be glad you have a pecuniary interest in it.

ONE NAIL ENDANGERED A STEAMER.

A Cunard steamer puts out from England for New York. It was well equipped; but, in putting up a stove in the pilot-box, a nail was driven too near the compass. That one nail seriously interfered with the working of the compass. The ship's officers, deceived by the distracted compass, put the ship 200 miles off her course, and suddenly the man on the lookout cried, "Land, ho!" and the ship was halted within a few yards of Nantucket shoals. A six-penny nail came near wrecking a great Cunarder. Just so one sin indulged may wreck a soul; and cause the loss of heaven. — Richmond Christian Advocate.

NOTES.

It might be a good thing for every business man to hang up in his office a large card on which is printed in big capitals:

THOU SHALT REMEMBER THE LORD THY GOD, FOR HE IT IS THAT GIVETH THE POWER TO GET WEALTH.

"The life of Jesus Christ would be incoincidental, if it were not a fact." That life has no parallel in human history and none in the inventions of the human imagination. The conclusion is that it "descended from God out of heaven."

How is the prayer meeting? Running along in the same old, worn mill. A little tame talk by the preacher, a few spiritless songs, and two or three cold prayers that the people have learned by heart? Is that your prayer meeting? Man of God, wake up. Get a fresh fire in your soul, and take hold of the people and lift them out of that living death!

Are we not burdening our preachers with too much finance? Collections! collections! collections! is the continual cry, and the preacher is expected to "take" them all, and then on the final stretch to bring up arrearsages. A thoughtful man says: "Finance" might be written as the cause of death in the obituary of many a noble servant of God."

There is one very gratifying fact in regard to all the Protestant congregations in this city—a fact which has recently been spoken of by ministers of different denominations to one another. The fact is the large accessions of men to the Sunday congregations. The number of men in all the Protestant congregations is much larger now than it was last year. We trust this is an indication of a general and widespread revival in all our churches.

Here is a sentence full of significance:

Any Methodist Church worthy the name can unite with its pastor and open the windows of heaven for a glorious revival.

If that is true, then the revival does not depend wholly upon the preacher for success. There are responsibilities upon the church, and when both preacher and people begin to feel the burden of these responsibilities, they will begin to work together for a revival. And when they do that a revival is already assured.

Zion's Herald, commenting favorably on Bishop Merrill's recent book, "Organic Union," has this significant paragraph:

The reader may regard the color question as an insuperable bar to organic union. Why should it be? Even in our church the colored men have gone into Annual Conferences by themselves, so far solving the problem. Why should it be more difficult to meet the colored man in a General Conference than in the Ecumenical Conference? The color problem will, in due time, solve itself. It is in course of solution, and needs only to be let alone.

That last sentence, is it a revelation?

Speaking of the General Rules of the Methodist Church, Dr. Daniel Steele, in Zion's Herald, has this healthy paragraph:

My faith in the future of our church is too strong to believe that any future legislation will ever abolish the whole-some rules of conduct which the sternness of the Christian ages has formulated. So long as wine is a mocker, and the promiscuous dance is a snare, and the theatre is the favorite haunt of sin, and the card-table and lottery the vortex of hell, Methodism will cry aloud with a voice of disciplinary warning against these devices of Satan for the ruin of souls, and all good Christians will say, Amen and Amen!

Somehow we are constrained to believe that there is truth in the following sentences from an exchange:

The beginning and end of many a minister's failure is sheer laziness. There is, perhaps, no vocation where a man can as easily either work or shirk, kill himself with over-exertion, or rust out with inaction as the Christian ministry. Many a poor sermon is attributed to want of brains when it is really due to lack of studious preparation. Many a minister is industrious enough, but fails as a pastor because his labor is misapplied and inconsequential. The man who neglects his flock or his pulpit that he may acquire repute as an author or lecturer or a scholar on general or special lines may, verily, not lose his reward, but must complain if the best churches do not want him placed over them as a leader.

The following from Cassell's Journal, in regard to W. T. Stoad, the editor of the Review of Reviews, will be appreciated by many of our readers:

Mr. Stoad is now forty-three years old. He is an impressive personality, a wild talker, running over with animal spirits, by turns mystical and worldly, simple and cynical, egotistic and generous, pitiless and sympathetic. His talk is varied by bursts of laughter and fitful passages about the room. He is surrounded by men and women who seek his aid, worship him, sponge on him, and backbite him. He lives in a pretty house at Wimbledon, is the most unduly of men as to his clothes, is enthusiastic about the Salvation Army, never works on Sunday, which he gives up to his wife and children, and regularly attends the morning and evening services at the local Congregational chapel. His favorite poet is Lowell; and Carlyle is both his literary hero and the chief formative influence in his intellectual life.

Notes from Our Jackson Office.

Bishop Galloway gave us a much appreciated visit a few days ago. He spent last Sunday in Minden, La., where he went to dedicate a church. Bro. Jones, the pastor of Capital Street Church, this city, is in the midst of a revival service in that church. Congregations are very good and interest increasing.

We have recently had the pleasure of going over the new Presbyterian Church now in process of erection in this city. It is a handsome brick structure, with basement for Sunday-school purposes, and a seating capacity to the auditorium of six hundred. It is estimated to cost when completed $18,000.

It is said that Rev. James Spurgeon, the grandfather of the Rev. Chas. H. Spurgeon, who so recently died, became pastor at Stambourne, Essex, England, in 1810, where he remained for more than a quarter of a century. This church had but four pastors in two hundred years; and he was the fourth. Nothing is said, however, of the spiritual prosperity of this church during these two centuries.

We clip the following from the Commercial Herald of Vicksburg:

The Methodist Sunday-school in the northeastern part of the city, which has been for some time suspended for lack of a place of meeting, will be reorganized Sunday afternoon, March 6, at three o'clock, in the new chapel on Jefferson street, which is just completed. A full attendance of parents and others interested in the enterprise, as well as children, is desired to witness the opening services of the new chapel, and the reorganization of the Sunday-school.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate asks this question:

What is the difference between a Christian speculating in grain futures—winning in the "bucket shops"—and a Philistine's gambling at poker, and winning the "jack-pot"?

Possibly we might ask one equally pertinent: What is the difference between the giddy girl or boy of "society," so called, and the average church member who takes lead in all the games and theatricals that come around?

We are glad to see this "note of victory" from our brother who is looking so carefully after the Master's interests just this side the Golden Gate:

During the past sixty days two hundred and seventy-five people have been converted in our California Churches. These reports show that as many more have entered our membership in the same time. This, we estimate, is less than fifty per cent. of the whole, for we call to mind that many of our larger churches have made no reports. It is not an extravagant statement, then, to say that since the Fall Conference fully one thousand people have joined the M. E. Church, South, in California.

We have just examined the first number of the first volume of the Epworth Quarterly, published in the interest of the Epworth Leagues of the M. E. Church, South. The title page is illustrated with a picture of the Epworth rectory, built in 1709, and the house of the Wesley family from that date to the death of Rev. Samuel Wesley in 1755, after which the home was broken up. Among the articles that enrich this new addition to our church literature we find answers to the two questions, "Why the Epworth League?" and "When did the movement begin?" Also an interesting and instructive article from the pen of J. R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn., on "Our First Epworth League." Let all our Leagues supply themselves with this quarterly. It is only ten cents a year.

Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D., closing an article in the Church Union, on "Denominational Rivalries and the Way Out," says:

It is an encouraging feature of current Christian sentiment that men are realizing so much more distinctly than ever before how much expense is to be caused of Christ is involved in treating every other domination except our own as though it were an auxiliary of anti-Christ. "Minds differ; hearts agree." Men that quarrel in the schools can with perfect facility fraternize on their knees. Denominations are reaching out towards each other in a way that has never been done before. The love of God is constraining us, and the needs of a world, lying in sin and wretchedness, are co-operating with the love of God to draw us into closer fraternity of fellowship in our faith, and into warmer conspiracy of hope and devotedness in our service.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Dr. Noah Porter, ex-president of Yale College, is dead.

An exchange, giving the results of a very successful revival, significantly adds: "The pastor needed no evangelist!"

Senator Randall L. Gibson has brought us under obligations for a copy of his select speeches delivered in the United States Senate during 1888-1891.

From W. A. Wildo & Co., Boston, we have received a budget of Sunday-school literature, which is good; but we like our own best, because it is the best.

Rev. Horace Jewell, at one time a member of the Louisiana Conference, is writing the History of Methodism in Arkansas. We believe that will be a readable history.

We find this personal in the Winston Signal:

Rev. J. A. Leech preached an excellent sermon last Sunday night to the young men, and we hope his kind words of advice and admonition will be carefully weighed, and pondered by every young man.

We greatly enjoyed in our office, last week, a quiet chat with Rev. C. M. Lyons, pastor of the Evergreen circuit, Louisiana Conference. His work is moving forward finely. He puts energy and vim in his work, and that will always succeed.

Our House at Nashville has prepared an appropriate Easter Missionary Service for the use of congregations, Epworth Leagues and Sunday-schools. Easter comes April 17; so if you would avail yourself of this, you have no time to lose.

We were gladdened last week by the presence and encouraging words of Rev. P. A. Johnston, presiding elder of the Woodville district, and Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, our pastor at Crystal Springs, Miss. These brethren report the Lord's work prospering in their charges.

We call the attention of our preachers to this from Bishop Haygood:

The new and big postal card is a daisy. Just the size for a report of facts from (each preacher) the work. The editor should receive, at least, one score each week. Using them will develop terseness of style. Each preacher likes to hear from all the others; and it helps to hear from the field of battle.

The St. Louis Advocate has this gratifying paragraph:

The St. Louis churches were never so prosperous as now. Not only do peace and harmony prevail, but there is a spirit of aggressiveness and progress which is most gratifying. Three new churches have been built within the past six months.

That success ought to "provoke" somebody else.

A private letter from Dr. D. J. Walker, the eminent secretary of the British Conference, and fraternal messenger to our last General Conference, says: "It was not my happiness to visit your city, and I regret not having seen New Orleans; but I have a lifelong interest in all that affects Southern Methodism. We are looking forward with pleasure to Bishop Galloway's visit to our Conference, and he may reckon upon a hearty welcome."

HOME NEWS.

Lake Providence, La., is now ablaze with electric lights.

Port Gibson, Miss., has shipped this season 10,603 bales of cotton.

A hardware store in Shreveport, La., burned recently; loss, $30,000.

Natchitoches is beautifying itself by planting trees along the streets.

Baton Rouge, La., is to be illuminated by the arc electric light system.

March 15, Hammond, La., will vote on issuing bonds for $5,000 to build a school-house.

Canton, Miss., is to have waterworks, electric lights and a handsome brick school-house. Three very good things.

W. A. Bright and F. P. Gravely have the privilege of furnishing Monroe, La., with waterworks and electric lights.

Rayne, La., shipped in one week 10,500 dozen eggs! That must be a good place for a Methodist preacher—eh, Bro. Blocker?

The Magnolia (Miss.) Gazette says that "quite a creditable start has been made with a subscription to build a Methodist Church at Tylertown."

According to Mr. Hester's monthly statement for the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, the amount of cotton in sight for the first six months of the season—from September to February, inclusive—is 7,917,954 bales, against 7,460,283 this date last year, and 6,745,089 the season before last.

The Shreveport Progress says: The firm of Whitte & Wheeler, of this city, sold 140,000 feet of lumber week before last, and 135,000 last week. This embraced shipments to Mississippi, Kansas and Nebraska. Think of Shreveport supplying those distant points with lumber! The old town is neither dead nor asleep.

Revival at Oxford, Miss.

Bro. J. E. Thomas, our pastor in Oxford, closed, last night, a very successful two-weeks' meeting. He did nearly all the preaching himself. His sermons were strong, clear and effective. Congregations large, orderly, attentive. Extra chairs in the aisles last night. The church has been greatly blessed by this meeting. Penitents were converted at the mourner's bench. The whole community, including our University students, took a deep and constant interest in the services. Other denominations cordially co-operated. Eighteen additions to our church. This makes forty-four new members. Bro. Thomas has received since Conference—twenty-nine by letter and fifteen on profession. Many touching incidents of the meeting might be told in a narrative of greater length. Bro. Thomas is making good proof of his ministry, and is eminently acceptable to our people. He is deeply pious, "well-rounded," and looks after all the interests of the church. W. R. S. University, Miss., March 7.

To the Members of the North Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: Please do not overlook the resolution passed by your Conference at its late session urging that a collection be taken for the Bible cause in every congregation in the bounds of your Conference during the month of April. Let your people know that money for the great work which the American Bible Society is doing is very greatly needed, and urge them to make a liberal contribution thereto. Please secure all you can for the work, and send it to me, if possible, by the first of May. Trusting that I shall have the pleasure of receiving a contribution from every member of the Conference, I am, very truly, Yours in Christ, J. W. McLAURIN.

A Protest.

Last week, year ago, our Woman's Board of Missions, for the benefit of Scarritt Bible and Training-school, called on everybody everywhere to observe the so-called "Easter;" and now our "senior" Missionary Secretary is following the folly and distributing programs broadcast for an "Easter Missionary Service." As a member of the M. E. Church, South, I want to enter a public protest against these innovations. If we wish to observe the anniversary of the resurrection of Christ, let us ascertain the proper day, and then call it the Christian Passover, and not ape some other folks by using the heathen word "Easter." Some of our Flora McFlimseys are already observing "Lent." Let a halt be called. T. L. MELLE.

Notice.

To Delegates to Woman's Missionary Conference, Meridian District, Mississippi Conference.

I have secured the usual reduction of fare on the M. and O. railway, viz.: Full fare in coming, and one cent per mile returning, if all the delegates will purchase the regular tickets and get from starting-point certificate on printed form of having purchased at full fare. These can be had March 11, and be good till the fourteenth. We trust each society will be represented by more delegates than one. We expect a good time.

J. P. DRAKE, Pastor. Shubuta, Miss.

The Missionary Collections.

BRETHREN: Move up in your missionary collections as speedily as possible. Those standing out on the border are feeling the pressure of the hard times. Please send the special fund, subscribed at Conference to the proposition of Dr. Morrison, to me. The other foreign missionary money you can send direct to the treasurer, T. B. Holt, Nashville, Tenn., and turn in his receipt to me at Conference. T. S. WEST, Treasurer of Conference Board. Wesson, Miss.

Correction.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please state through the ADVOCATE that there is a mistake in the financial table of the Minutes of our last Conference with reference to the preacher's salary of the Bayou Boeuf circuit. Instead of $112, the figures should show $172.80. W. M. BANKS. Babbs Bridge, La.

(AN INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.)

Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D. D., Atlanta, Ga.—

Dear Sir:—More than two years ago you were kind enough to allow us to publish a letter from you, in which you declared that you had been cured of Catarrh, by the use of King's Royal Germetizer. In the same letter you said that you had seen its curative effects upon various diseases.

Knowing your enviable reputation throughout the nation, and confident that the public would rely upon any statement coming from you, the manufacturers of King's Royal Germetizer would esteem it a real favor if you would consent to answer the following questions: 1st. Has there been any return of your Catarrh trouble? 2d. Have your observations of the effects of the medicine within the last two years strengthened the convictions expressed in your first published testimonials?

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience, I am, Yours truly, T. H. BLACKNALL, Gen'l Manager K. R. G.

Maj. T. H. Blacknall, Manager K. R. G. Co., Atlanta, Ga.—

Dear Sir:—In reply to your letter requesting me to answer certain questions concerning King's Royal Germetizer, I take much pleasure in saying that I am indebted to the medicine for what seems to me a complete cure of catarrhal trouble. My present health is almost perfect.

My observation within the last two years has so strengthened my faith in the remedy, that I am prepared to say that there is not a medicine on the market that is worthy of comparison with it. Thousands of intelligent and reliable people, among them some of the most distinguished men of the country, have expressed to me the same opinion.

Many of my friends have been cured of dyspepsia, others of rheumatism, and some of neuritis. As a remedy for cholera infantum it is absolutely perfect. Experience, or plain sense has a thousand living witnesses to its triumphs over La Grippe.

My conviction as to the merit of this medicine is as strong as any conviction can be made. Yours truly, J. B. HAWTHORNE.

If Darwin's theory is to be accepted, then the fact that I am the sole survivor in the trade of those who began with me the same line of business, grows significance to the fact that my sales of seed to market gardeners, well known to be the most critical of all buyers, has increased year by year until it has now reached vast proportions. That I raise many varieties on my five seed farms, make two tests annually for vitality, and test seedlings, that none may be imported on, will explain much to the thoughtful buyer. OBITUARIES.

CAMP.—Near Flora, Miss., Feb. 12, 1892, the liberated spirit of Mrs. MARGARET A. CAMP, having labored in the body fifty-six years, returned to God who gave it.

The writer is not acquainted with the history of her early life, nor does he know anything of the influences surrounding her in her childhood home. Reasoning from effect back to cause, and taking her well-developed, symmetrical Christian character as the standpoint of observation, we would reasonably suppose that her young life had been watched over with enlightened, scrupulous care.

My acquaintance with Sister Camp began with my pastorate of the church in Flora in 1890, where we lived in close contact, nothing separating the two residences but a division fence, which the intimacy and affection of our families failed to recognize and regard as anything but an incidental line separating the adjoining lots. Out of this continuity of residence, and consequent intimate and unrestrained association, grew up an attachment which warmed into the heartiest friendship and the sincerest Christian love. Suffice it to say: I knew her; I loved her; I honored her for her many excellencies which adorned and beautified her character, and made it a transcript of the blessed Christ.

She was a member of the Baptist Church in Flora. Her unquestionable loyalty to Christ was such that her great heart took into its fold embrace every child of God. She never allowed petty, insignificant, denominational peculiarities to shut her up to the circumscribed religious benefits of her own church. Here was a cosmopolitan, Christly expression of religion, which rejected and repudiated every semblance of sectarian narrowness and religious bigotry. This broadness of sentiment and affection characterized her in all the relations of life.

Constant and laborious for the comfort of loved ones in the home circle, her spare minutes and hours were cheerfully devoted to the sick and suffering within her reach. She was meek, gentle, loving, faithful and devout. Truly it may be said of her without mental reservation, "She hath done what she could;" "She has fought a good fight."

She leaves a fond husband, a grief-stricken daughter, an affectionate son-in-law and a group of grandchildren saddened and chastened sore. May God comfort you, my dear friends! C. A. POWELL.

CROSS.—Mrs. A. E. Cross, daughter of Malachi and Anna P. Ingram, was born in Union county, N. C., Nov. 30, 1839, and, with her parents, moved to Mississippi in 1849, and settled near Kilmichael, where she continued to live the remainder of her life. She professed the Christian religion and joined the Baptist Church in 1852. She was married to H. B. Cross, Nov. 19, 1856; and to them were born five children—five sons and four daughters—seven of whom still live to mourn the loss of a devoted mother, and, lessened, if possible, the sorrow of their disconsolate father. Her husband being a member of the Methodist Church at the time of their marriage, she joined the church with him and continued to live an exemplary Christian of full faith to the close of her mortal life.

In this noble Christian woman were combined the happy characteristics of the devoted and faithful wife, the fond and affectionate mother, the true and sweet-spirited friend and neighbor, and the meek and humble Christian. Those who knew her well loved her best and miss her most. Indeed, the light has gone out from that home, and the circle within which she moved misses its cheering influence.

She was a great sufferer for many months, but here was a spirit of resignation; for she knew in whom she trusted, and her faith in Christ Jesus, her Lord, remained unshaken until the last messenger came on Jan. 21, 1892, and bade her cease to live; and her immortal spirit, without a struggle of its frail moment, passed into the great beyond of perfect rest. On the following day, borne by faithful friends and followed by sorrowing loved ones, her mortal body was laid to rest in the quiet cemetery at Friendship, to await the coming of the last great day! "How precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints!" J. E. F.

MOORE.—Whereas, in the providence of Almighty God, our beloved sister, CHRISTINA MOORE, has been taken from us to the inheritance of the saints above; therefore, be it remembered, That we, the members of Winnsboro Baptist Church, deeply regret her sudden death, but, being an active worker in our Sabbath-school, her sympathy and prayers for loving reconciliation, our affection for her, and her pleading ourselves to renewed efforts in the work of the Sabbath-school, she so dearly loved.

Resolved, That, in sympathy with the bereaved ones, we tender them this expression of our sentiments of love and respect, trusting that the memory of her pure life may inspire them to press onward and upward until they reach the goal to which she has already attained.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent each to the Franklin and New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication. E. D. WALKER, Secretary of Committee.

HOLMES.—Mrs. J. A. HOLMES was born April 20, 1817, in Halifax county, Va., and died at her home in Scott county, Miss., Jan. 1, 1892. She was the daughter of Thomas and Judith Wilkinson. She was first married to Mr. John D. Wardell, and lived for a while in Christian county, Ky. After the death of her husband she moved to Brandon, Miss. Her second marriage was with Col. G. W. Holmes in 1848. She was the mother of eight children, four of whom are living. She joined the Baptist Church in early life, and in 1862 she became a member of the Methodist Church, and remained a consistent member until death.

This writer was acquainted with Sister Holmes for the last twenty-six years, and at different times her pastor, and can testify to her godly life. Her house was always a home for the preacher when he was disposed to go there. The aged and bereaved husband and the children can meet the loved one in the better land. C. McDONALD.

HANDY.—Died, Feb. 1, 1892, at Mer Rouge, La., JOHN HANDY, son of Chas. C. and Eliza Handy, aged seventeen years.

Johnny was a most promising boy, and greatly endeared to his parents and relatives, and liked by all. His peaceful death came on his birthday, Feb. 1, and he spoke fondly of his "birthday cake," which, alas! he could not enjoy! How grievously do his father and mother miss him! He was the Benjamin of his father's old age, and the pride and comfort of his mother. John was brave and peaceful in the hour of death. He spoke glowingly of his departure, and seemed happy in God. Though not a member of the church, he had led an orderly life, and took a lively interest in our protracted meetings last summer. He would, doubtless, soon have joined the church and made a profession of religion. May the Lord comfort his bereaved family. G. E. GREENE, pastor.

MUNHOLLAND.—C. T. MUNHOLLAND, son of Rev. C. T. and Mrs. S. J. Munholland, was born May 15, 1860; died in peace Feb. 7, 1892. He was converted at a camp meeting, held a few miles below Delhi in 1873, and joined the M. E. Church, South, in the same year under the pastorate of Rev. G. M. Liverman. He was married to Miss Mattie Rendell in 1883.

As a son, he was devoted; as a husband, loving and kind; as a brother, affectionate; as a friend, steadfast. His last illness was not of long duration; but he seemed to realize from the first that the end had come, and began the work of "setting his house in order." Expressing himself as fully prepared for the change, he died in the midst of relatives and friends, so that loving hands ministered to his wants in his last hours, and the friends of his boyhood held him to rest, where he awaits the summons to the grand resurrection. J. M. B.

LOVE.—R. G. LOVE, son of Benjamin F. and Martha Love, was born in Chester district, S. C., Sept. 30, 1828; moved to Choctaw county, Miss., September, 1860, where he died Dec. 1, 1891. Bro. Love married Miss Kate Gordon while at home on a furlough, Aug. 14, 1862. He joined the Methodist Church when young.

Bro. Love was a quiet, unassuming Christian, never saying much, but always doing his part. Whether at home sitting around the quiet hearthstone, in the war with its privations, or suffering the rigors of a Northern prison, his religion was recognized. As might be expected from such a life, his death was one of the most triumphant that the writer ever witnessed. A FRIEND.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in it. I bought a bottle and before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a six-cent bottle."

Life of Charles H. Spurgeon.

By the Noted Author, Pastor, Journalist and World Renowned Platform-Orator, RUSSELL H. CONWELL.

About 500 Pages. Elegantly Illustrated. Price, $1.50.

A TOWERING GIANT HAS FALLEN.

"The Great London Preacher has passed away, and the Christian world is mourning the loss of the model preacher, the devoted pastor, the beloved College President, the voluminous writer, the successful editor."

THE BEST KNOWN AND BEST LOVED MAN OF HIS AGE.

For combined strength of character, reach of influence, intellectual eminence, ripe knowledge of men, depth of piety, and earnest zeal, THE WORLD HAS NEVER KNOWN HIS EQUAL.

He belongs to no creed. His beneficence has come to poor ministers of all denominations, and in all his public work.

THE BREATH OF SCANDAL NEVER TOUCHED HIM.

Since the days of the "Son of Man" upon earth there has not lived a more simple, pure and stainless character.

His life is not one to be read once and laid aside, but as one of his former pupils, who is now a great evangelist, says: "It will sharpen the intellect, lead the soul and quicken the whole man with the purest thought, earnest will, richest experience and truest philosophy."

EVERY CHRISTIAN FAMILY WANTS THIS BOOK.

It is full of interest, interest, pure and wholesome, spicy and rich from beginning to close. Mr. Spurgeon had the largest church membership and congregation of any living preacher. To attend his church was one of the "sights of London," which no tourist would miss.

This book will be mailed to anyone as a prize for two new subscribers. Names to be accompanied with $4. Address, D. L. Mitchell, publisher, NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape a malarial fever by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Eleven deaths from typhus fever occurred in New York City on March 6. Silver and the tariff are the leading features in the program of procedure in Congress this week.

Duluth, Minn., is to have the largest docks in the world. They will have a capacity of 1,000,000 tons a year.

The Free Colnage question was before the National House on March 7, 1892, and an early date was fixed to consider the Bland bill.

Senator Hill, of New York, who expects to leave Washington City on March 14, for a tour of the Southern States, has received many invitations to speak in various cities.

The census returns for the city of New York are all in, with the exception of two election districts. The total population of the twenty-four assembly districts, according to the enumeration, is 1,795,295.

A bill of interest to Louisiana, which has been reported from the Public Lands Committee of the National House, is one to adjust the swampland grants and to fix a limitation for the filing of claims thereunder.

In the Naval Appropriation bill, which was under consideration last week by House Naval Affairs Committee, a new dry dock at Algiers, La., is provided for, the estimated cost of which will be more than $800,000.

A strike of longshoremen, which began in this city last week, and continued, has interrupted work on the levee, prevented vessels from loading and unloading, affected the business of the railroads, and turned away much freight destined for this city.

The attorney general of Kentucky has directed that proceedings be instituted against all lottery operators in the State. This step is in accordance with a recent resolution in the Legislature for the enforcement of the constitutional provisions. It is believed this is the beginning of the end of lotteries in Kentucky.

The Behring Sea matter has assumed a most serious phase, and public officials make no attempt to disguise their grave concern at the outcome. It is said that Lord Salisbury has refused to renew the modus vivendi, under which the Behring Sea was closed last season and the sealers forbidden to take skins in the disputed waters.

A statement provided by the commission of internal revenue in regard to sugar bounty shows that 2,523 claims for bounty, amounting to $6,014,654, has been received, and that claims amounting to $2,952,020 has been paid. The bounty on sugar was distributed as follows: Louisiana, $2,058,917; Texas, $129,827; Florida, $2,016. The beet sugar bounty was distributed as follows: Nebraska, $53,974; California, $139,534; Utah, $21,893. The entire sorghum bounty was paid to residents of Kansas.

FOREIGN.

A block of six-story cotton warehouses in Liverpool was burned on March 5. The loss is very heavy.

Chancellor Von Caprivi will shortly hold conferences with the leading distillers of Germany relative to a brandy monopoly scheme.

The Pope recently sent instructions to Paris for the formation of a Republican conservative party in the Chamber of Deputies to act as the mouthpiece of the Vatican in order to fight radicalism.

Fully 12,000,000 acres of barren land in the Sahara Desert have been made productive by a system of wells connected by means of ditches which are made thereby to irrigate land now used for wheat fields and for vineyards.

An open outbreak among the unemployed in Germany is possible at any moment. The condition of mechanics and unskilled laborers has reached such a state that the hungry men are capable of doing most anything to provide for themselves and those dependent upon them.

The longest electric railway in the world is to be constructed in Russia. The project is being considered of constructing a line from St. Petersburg to Archangel, a part of the White Sea, a distance of more than 800 kilometers (498 miles). The electric current is to be furnished by a series of generating stations distributed along the line.

An inquiry by the relief committee into the facts of the destination in Vienna shows that there are 5,000 shoemakers, 3,000 carpenters, 1,500 metal workers, 7,000 stone cutters and 2,300 unskilled laborers, 18,800 in all, out of work. These wage earners represent families aggregating nearly 100,000 souls. Many of them are reduced to the verge of starvation, and the equal and suffering disclosed is described as awful.

The presence in London of Mr. Foster, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, last week, attracted much attention from the journalistic and social world. He refused to accept social invitations, on the ground of poor health. The ready access he gave to all comers to his reception rooms in the Hotel Metropole amazed the people, who are accustomed to seeing statesmen environed by a wall of officialism.

Mr. Gladstone has returned from France much improved in health. Since his return to Parliament the tactics of the opposition is changed. Sir William Vernon-Harcourt's policy of trying to force dissolution by every possible device of worry and obstruction has been abandoned. It is now known that Mr. Gladstone hurried back owing to Sir William's acceptance of instructions to refrain from appearing desirous to hasten action on the part of the government.

"The Blood Is the Life."

Runs the old saying, and everything that ever makes part of any organ of the body must reach its place therein through the blood. Therefore, if the blood is purified and kept in good condition by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, it necessarily follows that the benefit of the medicine is imparted to every organ of the body. Can anything be simpler than the method by which this excellent medicine gives good health to all who will try it fairly and patiently?

Fraternity and Providence.

BY "HARNABAS."

Some recent passages at fraternity in our Methodist press, North and South, have alresh the question of divine Providence in American history from 1844 to 1865. It is not strange that very now and then our two Methodisms grow uneasy in contemplation of that eventful period. There was a bloody strife between the sections, and somebody is responsible for it. Like many other events in history, our Civil War came near not happening, and an influence as potent in forming public opinion as Methodism and has been, may have been that which turned the scales in favor of war. It is not pleasant to think what the result might have been if a little more charity had been shown by our Northern brethren and a little more patience by us. Out of the remainder, the Christy spirit which he found in them God wrought mightily for the overthrow of slavery, as by a residue of the same spirit in us he accomplished what was accomplished for the slave in fitting him, in a measure, for the dangerous gift of freedom. God takes the wrath of man to praise him, but that does not warrant the supposition that he inspires and blesses it. Men can easily find divine Providence in the successful cause, and all the more as that cause happens to be their own. We of the South lost, and we may take too much comfort in the thought that if we sinned, we have suffered for it. But our Northern brethren won. Never was victory more complete than theirs; never was defeat more crushing than ours. In all subsequent discussions of the cause, conduct and consequences of the war, they have had the ear of the public at home and abroad. Their heroes have gone into song and story in a blaze of "Daily," "Weekly," and even "Monthly Illustrated" glory; every excess, condoned, every excellence lauded, until one might well wonder how heaven or earth contrived to get on so long without them. In answering the world's demand for an explanation of the terrible four years of strife, it has been necessary to exalt the spirit which animated them, to magnify the glory of their victory and the beneficent results which followed it. That they have failed to explain to their own, or the world's, satisfaction the part they took in the transactions of the past fifty years, is evident from the recurrence of such publications as those of Bishop Mallalien and others. In the presence of the assembled Methodism of the world, recently, they had the floor, and we were silent, declining, in the interest of peace, to discuss matters not well understood, even at the expense of standing before the world as those who would not dance when fraternity piped, nor weep when mourned unto us. And yet they seem not to be satisfied; and, if the truth must be told, no more are we. It is not to be possible, after all, that we have each given too much attention to finding out what is the matter with the other, and not enough to the question, What is the matter with ourselves?

Suppose we try, for a while, to get God's pardon, and to forgive each other for all we have said and done these sad years under prompting of party spirit and bitterness of feeling and personal loss, and the mortification of defeat in battle, or the consciousness of an unworthy use of victory—all of which things must go down into history side by side with our profession of faith in God and love for men. Having done this, we may be able to do more perfectly what part of our brother's curse during the same period was instigated by the devil, and how much was directed by the Spirit of God. In other words, let us begin the work of reconciliation by forgiving each other as partisans, and then we may rise to the higher grace of forgiving each other as brethren beloved.

Can we not find enough of evil to combat in connection with living issues without lashing ourselves and each other into a fury over the portion of blame that rests upon a generation, a large part of whom have already atoned to their account, and that, too, concerning issues which one party, with increasing vehemence, and the other not reluctantly declare to be dead? We may, at least, be silent concerning a past which, it is charitable to believe, none of us fully understand.

A generation of silence might be rewarded by a more open vision.

Good men are not yet agreed as to the part God took in the Reformation, though that event is centuries old, and the good it wrought is everywhere apparent. One thing is certain; that it is not the part God took in the history of the past half-century that keeps us at strife.

We are glad that in recent discussions of the subject the sweeter spirit has been shown by writers of the Methodist Church, South. It costs us more to be sweet than it does our brethren in higher latitudes; for we lost more and suffered more than they. It is hard for us to forget, when provoked, that while a Northern Methodist Bishop seized our churches by force of arms and held them in the name of the Lord, Northern politicians went ball, in the name of humanity, for Jefferson Davis. And we can not complain if, when an evil spirit vexeth them, they also should remember that the first forcible words of peace and reconciliation which came to their section from us were spoken by a Southern layman on the floor of the National House of Representatives.

It is not wonderful that politicians should forgive when the professed followers of Christ are yet at variance. Party men understand each other. There is an undercurrent of buncombe in the most solemn deliverance of all party organizations. Their approval and denunciation are, in large measure, alike insincere; and when these have served their purpose, there is nothing left to contend for. But the church politician is not so. Men can not easily reconcile themselves to making God a party to a fraud, or committing his providence to buncombe.

A good moral of the whole matter is: Let the church beware of politics. To impress this lesson once for all may have been God's purpose during our diacords in Church and State as much as to free a slave already rather comfortable than otherwise, or to establish manhood suffrage in the United States. It is possible that the angels and the spirits of just men made perfect are not concerned to know how a Methodist stands on the tariff, or whether his grandfather held slaves or not.

Of one thing we may be sure: that no purpose of God will be served by bitter or uncharitable words. The attitude of the two great branches of American Methodism upon the question in dispute were as much a matter of latitude as anything else—and terrestrial latitude at that. It is probable that there was on both sides, in the division of the church, in the subsequent slavery agitation, and the Civil War they provoked, an amount of purely human passion and prejudice, which could it have been eliminated, there would have been no division, no violent agitation, and no war as a consequence. And the outcome of it all—the abolition of slavery—may be as justly attributed to the stubbornness of Southern resistance, which made it necessary as a war measure, as to any closer relations of the Methodist Church, North, with Providence, or any higher regard, on their part, for the rights of man.

The fact is, our human measurements take in a very small arc of the infinite circle of God's providence, and it is only natural that we get mixed sometimes in our efforts to give it meta and bounds. A little patience, and the generation which contributed hot blood to the first three-quarters of this century will have settled the account of responsibility and glory with One whose judgments are clear. A little while, and divine Providence will vindicate himself without our help.

Reduced to its last analysis, the trouble between us seems to be that while both are ready to forgive, neither is willing to be forgiven. And may not this spirit be of a kind with that concerning which our Savior said, "It cometh not forth but by prayer and fasting?" Brethren, don't; it is 1892.

Rev. E. R. Strickland.

Rev. Erasmus Root Strickland, a supernumerary of the Mississippi Conference, died at his home near Summit, Miss., on Feb. 23, 1892, in the eighty-fifth year of his age.

It is well for preachers of the present generation to stop occasionally and ponder the lives of sacrifice, zeal and toll of our fathers in the gospel who have just preceded us. We would scarce dare compare ourselves with them.

Bre. Strickland was one of the last who know the self-denial, exposure and tolls of the pioneer Methodists of Mississippi. He was born in Delaware county, N. Y., April 6, 1807. He was converted at Maple Ridge, Orleans county, N. Y., in the twenty-second year of his age, and seen after joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was licensed to preach at Coladesville, Ga., at the age of twenty-eight. In October, 1838, he was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference, and for thirty-seven years, without a break, he continued a most zealous and faithful traveling preacher. He was never stationed, and his circuits generally consisted of twenty-six appointments.

The earlier years, especially, of his ministry were marked by great success. In the first three charges that he served he received 1,057 persons into the church. On the Paulding circuit, in two years he increased the membership from 177 to 700. The Watts and many other of the most prominent citizens were among his converts. His work abides. A few of his original converts still survive, and are faithful; and the descendants of those brought to Christ by him are to-day pillars in the church. He was instrumental, in the hands of God, in the conversion of thousands.

He was noted as a church builder. On the Crystal Springs circuit, in two years he built eight churches. These were at Edwards, Brownsville, Terry, Utica, Cayuga, and other places—all these points at this time being embraced in his charge.

His cheerful self-denial was unsurpassed. In the poorest charges and hardest places he gladly worked. His yearly salary ranged from $93 to $500, the average falling below $200. He received as high as $500 one year only. Think of a man with a circuit of twenty-six appointments, with territory as large as our present district, preaching every day in the week except Monday, delivering forty or more sermons monthly, holding daily experience meetings, baptizing and receiving hundreds of converts into the church, doing much pastoral visiting, building numerous churches, constantly reading the Bible, visiting the sick, burying the dead, spending much time in prayer, and on a salary of $93 a year, and still all the time satisfied with his work, cheerful and happy, and you have a type of a Methodist itinerant of forty years ago.

De such lives afford no lessons for us? Is not the great secret of their success plain? Can we not, when we consider them, easily see why we so nearly fail?

Let us thank God for having given us such examples, and for having known them and been associated with them. May their mantles rest upon the younger sons of the prophets!

Vossburg, Miss.

B. S. RAYNER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. Armstrong, Lafayette, La.: "I ask for a card each month. Here is ours for March. We had rain here every Sunday in February, and the first Sunday in March was wet and sloppy. Congregations very good, considering the weather. Within the past eight days we have made seven pastoral visits, preached five times, held prayer meeting, baptized two children, and received three members by ritual, and received $22.50 on salary. This place has undertaken to stand alone this year for the first. Our salary is assessed at $500, payable monthly, and it is paid up to date. We have Dr. Clarke's Commentaries, six volumes, not a leaf loose, which we propose to sell for $8. Our health is still poor, but we can work."

Rev. W. G. Evans, Castor mission, March 10: "This is one of the new appointments made by the last Annual Conference, but it contains some old timber. I found two organized churches on the work when I got here on Jan. 2, with one church-building. I have since taken in one of these organized churches that had been dropped. I also have two other preaching places, one of them being at the new town of Olla, on the Houston Central, Arkansas and Northern railroad. This last is full of promise, and, by the grace of God, I hope to have a church there by the end of the year. This town only had one family there the first of this year, and now there are two general merchandise stores and a drug-store open, and a large two-story hotel, besides four residences and one store which have been completed, and there are now building two residences and a nice school-building. Pray for us, brethren, that we may take this place for the Lord. I am confidently expecting and working for a widespread revival of old-fashioned religion."

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Corinth, Miss., March 10: "Last Sunday was a high day in Corinth. Our beloved presiding elder was with us, and made himself felt as usual. He was evidently under the leadership of the Spirit. More than two hundred were at the communion table, and the blessed Lord was there. The love-feast in the afternoon was a time of refreshing. It was good to be there. The congregations were large at every service. We are advancing on all the lines. Prayer meetings largely attended; Sunday-school in fine condition; finances well up. Since Conference have had thirty-one accessions, and made two hundred and fifty visits. We are praying for, and expecting a revival of power and the conversion of souls."

Rev. J. W. Medlock, Minden, La., March 7: "Yesterday, the first Sunday in March, was a great day in our Methodist Israel in Minden. The new church, just completed and furnished throughout—or, rather, our remodeled church—was reopened, Bishop Galloway preaching morning and night to large and delighted congregations. The Bishop's sermons have left a profound impress upon our community, and his visit will be long remembered as a benediction. Our house is now in fine repair, and is a perfect beauty, costing about eighteen hundred dollars, the last seven hundred of which was subscribed on Sunday morning after the sermon. Out of debt and having a beautiful house of worship, we now thank God and take courage."

Rev. W. H. Lewis, Utica, Miss.: "Two of the churches on the Utica circuit enjoyed a feast of fat things on Sunday, the sixth instant. While the agent of Mississippi College was dividing the 'Bread of Life' to the hungry congregation of Utica, the assistant editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE feasted the good people of Learned. The presence of Bros. Watkins and Lewis proved a blessing to the two congregations to which they ministered. It was due directly to the presence of the assistant editor that we have secured several new subscribers to the ADVOCATE, with more to follow. At Learned the collection for Conference claimants was taken up and overpaid, while at Utica the foreign missionary and Conference claimants' collections were paid in full. The work on the Utica circuit is moving along very satisfactorily."

Rev. W. J. Dawson, Oktibbeha, Miss.: "I am at the post of duty full of hope for the success of the Master's cause. We are praying, planning and working for seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. This is my second year on the Linwood circuit. The people gave me a hearty welcome on my return to them. Have received one new subscriber for the ADVOCATE, with possibly others to follow. One brother has ordered his paper discontinued, giving as a reason that he had a family to support, and could not spare the money. Strange that retributions begin with religious papers. We were delighted with your editorial on the lottery question. This is one of the greatest moral conflicts in which the United States has ever been engaged. May the ADVOCATE long live to fight the battles of the Lord and of his church!"

Rev. W. W. Simmons, Gloster, Miss.: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." (Matt. v, 17.) Those words were the basis for a series of sermons by Rev. J. W. Ellison on the mode of baptism, which proved very interesting to the large congregations who heard him. Bro. Ellison's manner of discussing this question is truly his own, claiming the Word of God only as authority, and relying solely upon this Word to lead him into all truth. He proved to the satisfaction of every mind open to conviction that John was sprinkled, and that all his baptism was by sprinkling, and that Jesus was not baptized in the River Jordan, but in the country of Jordan, and by sprinkling, and so on down to the consecration of the apostles, and that it was all by sprinkling. Taking the eight sermons, they all showed deep study and a clear understanding of the Word of God. My people were delighted, and, I trust, have been greatly benefited."

Rev. J. M. Huggins, Grenada circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We are moving on very well in this charge. Had some difficulty in moving to the work; lost some important household goods. Found some dissatisfaction among our people, growing out of changes made in the circuit. All, I believe, has been amicably adjusted. We have six churches. The membership is very much scattered, making the pastoral work heavy. We have some very excellent people in the charge. The members of our church in Duck Hill, learning of the loss we sustained in moving here, sent us many nice things, both in the dry goods and grocery line. May the richest blessings rest upon that noble little band! Among the nice things above mentioned was a quilt pieced by the little girls. Much praise is due them, both for the skill manifested and the motive that prompted to such work. I hereby acknowledge myself under obligation to the people of our church in Grenada also for much kindness shown us. Dr. Wheat is doing a splendid work in Grenada, both in pulpit and in the homes of the people, as pastor. The Grenada Collegiate Institute still maintains its hold upon our people."

Rev. T. J. Upton, Lake Charles, La., March 8: "We are still alive and working away in Lake Charles, though not with such manifestations of success as is desirable. I think, however, that good is being accomplished. The good ladies of the church have kindly furnished the pastor with an excellent horse and buggy, and now there is no good reason why he may not visit his flock as never before. We have not been the recipients of any huge, spasmodic poundings; but have to date been able to procure a sufficiency to keep soul and body together, and in good working trim. We are holding a series of meetings this week, which, we trust, will result in great good to the community, the revival of the church, and the conversion of sinners. On May 15, next, Rev. Geo. S. Inge is to begin a meeting (in his tabernacle) in this city. I hope that the Christian people will all pray for the success of said meeting. Wickedness prevails here to an alarming extent, and can be antidoted only by the power of the gospel of Christ, and it is that power which we propose to bring to bear on rebellious hearts. Our city still advances, and we hope to give the Conference a hearty welcome and a royal entertainment."

Rev. W. D. McCullough, Indianola and Falsonia charge, March 5: "At our last Conference this charge was taken from the Greenville district and placed in the Winona, with Rev. S. M. Thomas as presiding elder, and we were returned for a second year. We came back from Conference with new resolutions for a better year's work than we had ever done. We are trying to put into effect that resolution. Our power to do good is weakened by the fact that I lost my horse last year, and have not been able to buy one since, and we are, therefore, unable to do the pastoral work that we would gladly do. We have received three by certificate since Conference, and expect others soon. Lost one by death—Sister Gillespie, a good woman, and for many years a consistent member of our church. The ladies will soon have our church and parsonage inclosed. Our first Quarterly Conference has come and gone. Bro. Thomas, our new presiding elder, gave us a feast of good things. Our people are favorably impressed with him. The open season is a thing of the past in Indianola. The last license expired in February, and the people say no more. We are hoping, working and praying for a prosperous year in the Lord. Pray for us, brethren; pray for us."

Rev. F. M. Koen, Anguilla, Miss., March 7: "Our first quarterly meeting for the current year was held at this place yesterday and the day before. Our new presiding elder was with us. He preached three sermons, which were good to edification. He made a good impression upon the Conference.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, which kept a great many away, we had a good meeting. We reported for all purposes $300. A large portion of this was expended in repairing and furnishing the parsonage. On the fourth Sunday in February I preached at Rolling Fork on the subject of missions, and raised in cash and subscription $60, this being the amount assessed that church for foreign and domestic missions. The planters have about arranged for another year. This, in many instances, was hard to do, as some of our planters have been practically broken up. A great deal of land has been ploughed, planting has begun, and the unsettled state of affairs that has existed here for some time is fast giving way to that which is more settled. Planters are beginning to look on the bright side. Oh, this time next year we will forget that we ever had this convulsion," said a prominent planter to me the other day while talking about the hard times."

Rev. G. W. Ferrer, Stonewall, Miss., March 4: "After a several weeks' siege of busy haste, I have succeeded in getting my better-half and little ones tolerably comfortably housed, temporarily only, as we contemplate building a parsonage in the near future. Also have visited a great many of my people, who I find to be a most generous and excellent people. I doubt very much if there is another circuit in the Mississippi Conference that will tally with Whittington circuit in Christian generosity and manhood. They seem to be perfectly intent upon meeting the financial demands of the church; and I don't think that I would be exaggerating should I say that as many as one hundred, or more, of our members, both male and female, pray in public when required. We have a great many family altars; also several flourishing Sunday-schools. We have a society of 'Willing Workers' among the lady members that is doing a noble work. They are helping the church finances in weak and faltering places. They have just ordered a nice lot of furniture for the parsonage. They are simply looking and longing to help the dear cause that they love so much. God bless and prosper their efforts! Again, we have perfect harmony and brotherly co-operation among the different branches of the Christian Church, and we may state just here a circumstance that makes us feel proud of the people among whom it has fallen our lot to labor, to wit: a good member of a different branch of the Christian Church has spent about one hundred dollars in ceiling and painting one of our church-houses, because his wife was a member of our church. What a noble spirit this!"

Rev. W. W. Drake, Shreveport, La., March 3: "By invitation of Rev. S. H. Whitley, I lately visited Logansport, a small town at the head of navigation on the Sabine river, where the Shreveport and Houston railroad passes from Louisiana into Texas. Though the place has only about 600 inhabitants, it handled last season some 12,000 bales of cotton, and from this it may be inferred that quite a large volume of business is transacted. The morals of the community are not the best, and covetousness seems to be the besetting sin of the people. It is said that thirty-nine 'justifiable homicides' have been committed on the streets. The Baptists have a church-building in which services are held once a month. The Methodists are obliged to content themselves with the use of a school-room used for all kinds of purposes. Bro. Whitley, assisted by some of the people, is endeavoring to erect a house of worship in which Methodism may be at home and independent. A call will probably be made on the Church Extension Board, which will have an opportunity of assisting in a grand work, and making a profitable investment of its funds. On the whole, Logansport presents a very fruitful field for the spread of the gospel. We held a meeting for several days, during which many were seriously impressed, and several united with the church, promising to lead lives of Christian effort. At the close of the meeting an Epworth League was organized with twenty members. It promises to grow to larger proportions, and, if persevered in, to unite the scattered elements of power into a successful organization. May it assist in the extension of the Master's work!"

PROPHECIES.

Some time you will look back to these bright days.
With tearful eyes,
And think of all our joy, happy days
With love and bliss.

You will remember how we read or talked
In the quiet room,
Or summer evenings how we rode or walked Through fragrant bloom.

Sometimes alone or in a busy throng
Again will ring,
Soft clear and sweet an echo of some song
We used to sing.

And on awake or sleeping, you'll recall
This cozy room—
Books, music, even the pictures on the wall,
And the flowers in bloom.

You will remember every tender word
You've said to me;
The knowledge that you've spoken no harsh word
Will comfort be.

Sometimes you'll weep and pray, but all in vain—
As far you roam,
For one short hour to rest from grief and pain
In this sweet home.

Dear heart, I grieve that I must leave you here
To walk alone,
But sometimes we will find each other there
Around the throne.

"Church Finance."

MR. EDITOR: I read with pleasure and some curiosity your symposium on church finance. It has been charged that Methodist preachers are the greatest people in the world to take a collection. What were the demands upon them in the days long gone, when they acquired this reputation, I have now no means to ascertain; but in this day, when the claims upon us demand all the way from six to a dozen collections—far too many, in my humble judgment—we are forced to give some study to the subject. My hope was to find some new, yet untried, plan suggested which would run without so much coaxing, and easily reach the pocket of the closest Methodist in the land—one that would move even the chronic grumbler and opposer of foreign missions to turn his pockets wrong-side out and break the strings of his much-loved pocketbook.

While there is some diversity in the plans suggested, there is a unanimity in the one idea of doing your best, with any and all plans, to get the money, which, after all, is the main object sought, and that plan is the best which best succeeds. No plan, in my opinion, is so good as that suggested by our Discipline in making the assessments, and executed under the direction of St. Paul's plan of "laying by in store on the first day of the week as the Lord has prospered." This is the installment plan which has been adopted by the world, and upon which great businesses are being run to-day. The children of this world are wise in their generation, and have adopted our divinely inspired plan, while the church either ignores all plans, or goes off in search of something new. Brethren, the old is better. Only educate the people to a weekly or monthly systematic giving, and we will have secured all we desire. Any assessment made is more easily paid in fifty-two installments than all at once, or divided into half or quarters. This relieves the member, and greatly helps the pastor, especially if his salary is withheld until the last of the year.

By the way, I find from my papers and Conference Minutes that I am committed, by my own action, or that of others in authority, to ignore the Pauline plan, and make extra and desperate efforts to crowd three collections into the first quarter. It is resolved to take domestic and foreign mission collections by the first of April. It is also resolved to take collection for Conference claimants by same time. Again, we are to have the Bishops' money at Nashville at an early day. How it relieves us to find that, at least, two collections—church extension and education—may be deferred a little time, though Dr. Morton is calling insistently for early collections! It has never been charged upon me, nor have I ever claimed to be a great financier; but I do think there is wisdom in St. Paul's plan, that the people may have time to lay by something for our gathering when we call.

Finance! church finance! Was there ever a question fraught with more anxiety and perplexity?

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

"Be of Good Cheer."—Jesus.

The duty of the church is to educate the world, morally, through the press and the pulpit. Under our government an unprecedented opportunity is afforded for this divine mission. Never before has the church so squarely faced and so boldly attacked the "rulers of the darkness of this world" and "spiritual wickedness in high places." In God's providence, through the ages, all revolutions, all things have been working to the development of this opportunity. Religious literature never had such universal publication and access to the masses, and public opinion has never so generally shown itself in rebuking crime of all sorts—political, social, or domestic. Whatever the philosophy of history may teach us, there is a directing Force connecting causes and effects, and this is certainly the result, thus far, that Christianity in these ends of the earth is confronting the enemies of God and man with unprecedented freedom and boldness, and with a prospect of success that awakens and thrills every Christian heart and encourages us to push the battle to the very gates of the enemy—aye, to enter the very citadel and to pull down the strongholds.

The better understanding of each other among the churches, the more enlightened and liberal dealing amongst the sects, the increasing thoroughness and system called for in the religious instruction of youth, a livelier interest in the social privileges of the church, the constantly increasing number of Christian families co-extensive with our settlements, the increasing facilities for intercommunication, the cheapness of literature, the large sums turned into educational, eleemosynary and missionary enterprises, the princely fortunes sometimes dedicated to God, are all indications of a coming victory, under God, over the powers of darkness, which victory is the burden of prophecy and the promise of God.

There are murmurings, complaints and unbelief. There will be growlers and disgruntled sore-heads riding sore-backed hobbles, and old fogies saying the former times were better than these. But the great churches move forward, ambitious only for the crown above, purging the Church and the State alike from their corruptions.

"The Conference Collection."

It has been charged that we are a careless church, and indifferent to the welfare of our old preachers and the widow and orphan of him who has fallen by the way. It may be that the charge can be proven to be well founded; but I very much doubt it.

If these old veterans of the Lord's hosts are hungry and cold, homeless, friendless and moneyless, it is because the church does not know it. We have not been told of it; or if we have, the voice that told it was so weak that those in the pew could not hear it. When the people thoroughly understand the object of the "Conference collection," it is easy to raise it. One of the troubles has been that this collection has oftentimes been made to bear the burden of some of the others. The preacher rarely ever finds a man, that will give anything at all, who will refuse him when he asks for money for this cause. The following is an actual conversation as I heard it from the preacher:

"Bro. B., can you help me some to-day? I am raising my church assessments."

"Well, I don't know. What do you want?"

"I must raise $150 for foreign missions, and I—"

"Don't believe in foreign missions."

"Charity begins at home."

"Here is our domestic mission assessment, $100. How much will you give me for that?"

"Not a cent, not a cent; money wasted; them that don't work shan't eat."

"I must raise $15 for church extension."

"Better put that $15 on our church. Needs a new roof now, besides painting both inside and out."

"Our assessment for education is $25."

"Never went to school but three months in my life. Had to work too hard, for my money to let it go for such foolishness."

And so on throughout the list, till he gets to the one that he has purposely kept for the last.

"Our Conference collection is $90. I am sure you will help us on it."

"Conference collection! What is that?"

"Why, it is the fund that is raised for the support of our preachers when they can no longer do effective work. It is also for the families of those who have died in the ministry. It is the most popular collection we have. I find no trouble in raising it."

"Yes? Well, Bro. Smith, I will give you $10 with the distinct understanding that it is to be used for that purpose."

"All right; all right; thank you, sir."

And the preacher takes the $10, and when he gets home he puts it into the Conference collection, which is already fully paid. But as he puts that $10 in he takes out another $10, and in that way evens up things. You see how it is; don't you?

I say, preacher, have you started to raise your collection yet? If you have not, when are you going to go about it?

Brother, has your preacher asked you for anything for the Conference collection? If he has not, won't you please, the next time you see him, ask him when he is going to do it? And, brother, won't you please tell him that he is not doing what he promised to do—that he is not doing his duty?

"Church Finance."

Prof. Ricketts, in a very able digest of the money question, says: "It is sad to think, and yet it may be true, that there is a different kind of reckoning for the steward who thus pays the quartermaster of the unwilling or unformed, and, in so doing, degrades the self-respect of his church, rather than use the patience and take the time to educate his people to better things."

Let me give you an instance along this line. December, 1885, I became connected with what was then "Crystal circuit." My church was Mt. Pleasant, and I was made a steward of it. When the stewards' meeting was held, February following, in making distribution for my church, I accepted $40 for our share—membership about sixty. Old Bros. H. and S. raised the question of my ability to collect, and told me that I did not know that people. I answered that I knew that sixty members ought and would pay $40, and laid $10 of it on the table. When I got home and reported, my people were mad. Twenty dollars had been the amount the previous year, and that they hadn't got, and since they could not pay it all, they wouldn't pay a cent. I answered that we would pay it all; but they kept their word. That year, about April 1-10, old Uncle Johnny S., the bell-wether, lost his horse; and, fortunately, it did not inconvenience me seriously to furnish him one to make and harvest his crop. The next year Georgetown circuit was formed and our assessment was doubled. I was educating our people; hence left the $20 on the table. But, my! my! weren't our people madder! You see their self-respect was stinging them sorely, and they thought (as many a man makes a mistake along this line) they were mad at me, and told me so. I talked to them; told them, Yes, I would pay it; but that they were dwarfing souls, etc. Turning to Uncle Johnny, and, laying my hand on his shoulder, I said, "I'll pay this till your consciences sting you into duty; and, in the meantime, if the good Lord sends his sheriff and levies upon your horse, I hope to be able to supply you another." He burst into tears, and, throwing his arms around my neck, said, "Sonny, do you go home and make a list of what you think each one ought to pay, and they shall do it." I accepted with one condition, to-wit: At the next regular meeting I would submit this list for their amendment and approval. From that day till this (barring of which more hereafter) that church has been the least trouble to its stewards of any that I have ever known. The spirit of fairness and promptness prevails to this hour. This method became the rule of Georgetown circuit, and I am told that the venerable E. G. Cook gave its details to a member of the General Conference Committee when the disciplinary plan of the Discipline was adopted, which is the law of our church, and any Board of Stewards that ignores it is responsible to make "something better," which he substitutes a success. But "barring"—

I have read carefully this "symposium," covering nearly one and a half pages of the ADVOCATE, and have failed to see an allusion to one of the most important factors in the financial working of the church—the worthiness of the workman of his hire. In all my experience as a steward I have never seen a failure of support to the pastor in charge when a faithful steward could go to his people, and say: "Bro. A. was sent here by the Conference. He preaches the gospel. A. ministers the law of the church intelligently. He visits his people. He ministers to the sick. He buries the dead. He does all the work of a minister of Christ in the spirit of the Divine Master."

An intelligent Board of Stewards know that they are set over this matter; yet a discreet steward will make his pastor his counsellor. A faithful steward will deal frankly with his pastor upon every interest of the work. A judicious steward will take the law of the Discipline as his rule, however he may, with consent of pastor and people, vary in its details.

Pencil Points for Young Preachers.

Preach the oughtness of right-doing. Open your study window, and throw out that stereotyping machine. Study divinity. Study humanity. The neglect of either will make you one-sided.

It would do in some pulpits yesterday. But it will pass nowhere to-day. We refer to slang.

Distribute pastoral visiting throughout the congregation as evenly as possible. Show no decided favoritism.

"He is so kind to sick people." That is what a lady said to us about her pastor. She could not have said a better thing.

Let the janitor pound the dust out of the pulpit cushion. It is hardly the thing for you to do it—especially on Sunday.

Do not coax people too much. Do not pet them. Do not carry those who ought to walk. Incessant coddling breeds religious pigmies.

Learn the names of your people. That will be a difficult task to some, but the effort will pay abundantly. Most persons like to hear the sound of their own names. You do.

We know a young pastor who makes it a rule to call on his poor people twice while he visits the homes of the well-to-do ones. The brother is on the right track. He is winning. And will.

It is not always best to pray in every home you visit. Circumstances must determine. But you may always leave the benediction of a praying man upon those with whom you have talked.

"He seems to know the Lord pretty well, but is absolutely ignorant of men." So said a thoughtful layman about his young pastor. The saying contained both a compliment and a reflection.

Vary the question a little. Do not always ask your spiritual children, "How is your soul?" Change it occasionally to "How is your life?" Not always, "How do you feel?" but, "What are you doing?"

Do not give out hymns at random. Our leader did the other night, and when we got along to the third verse we found we were singing a hymn for infant baptism. The discovery did not promote the devotional spirit.

Efficiency is more than ever the passport to promotion in the ministry. We meet laymen every few days who are eagerly looking for young fellows who possess winning qualities. "Afraid your good points will not be discovered?" Nonsense!

You remember Simple Simon's fishing exploit, of which we sang in childhood? It was a good deal like some ministers who go fishing for souls, but who go where no souls are to be caught. To confine one's efforts to the few highly respectable families to the neglect of the crowd is like fishing in a pail of water, when, by launching out into the deep, a multitude may be taken.—Epworth Herald.

Mrs. Cornelia Gunning.

When, on the morning of Dec. 31, 1891, Mrs. Cornelia Gunning closed her eyes upon earthly scenes and opened them to behold the realities of heaven, one of the purest and best of women was taken from the walks of life.

The dying year took in his arms the body of the dying saint, and the gladness of the new year in heaven was greater far than any that earth could give.

The weary watches of the night were passing away, and in the early morning her husband, thinking she was asleep, leaned over her. She opened her eyes, placed her arms about his neck and kissed him, saying, "Good night, my darling husband," then quickly closed her eyes and fell asleep.

You need not whisper now, except that grief and sacred awe have hushed the voice; the muffled footsteps will not disturb the sleeper now, the sob of sorrow will not call forth the look of loving reproach; this is the sleep that knows no waking until he who is the resurrection and the life shall touch the sleeping dust and it shall live again.

Cornelia, the eldest daughter of Capt. Daniel G. Renner, was born in Natchez, Miss., on Feb. 27, 1851. Most of her life was spent in the city of her birth, and only while attending school at the Woodville Female Seminary was she long absent from her home.

She was converted and joined the church when sixteen years of age, during the pastorate of Dr. W. E. M. Linfield, and became at once an active Christian.

On Dec. 17, 1873, she was married to Mr. Wm. A. Gunning, of Natchez. They had known each other from childhood and were singularly congenial.

Mrs. Gunning was one of the most admirable characters I have ever known—honest, candid, affectionate, impulsive, sympathetic and true. She was independent and womanly—ever mindful of her own self-respect and never forgetful of the rights of others.

There was no assumption of superiority, but no trace of inferiority; she was self-reliant, but considerate; strong, but gentle; brave, but tender.

Her childhood was largely spent in the association of two brothers, between whom and herself there existed an unusually strong affection, and with whom she often shared the active and hardy sports of boyhood. This may in part account for the frankness and fearlessness that characterized her.

When in young womanhood she gave her heart to Christ, she threw all the energies of her impulsive nature into her Christian work. She was one of those whose confession of their Lord is rather in the service of their consecrated lives than in the words of their lips. Not that she failed to voice her love and faith, for she was ever ready to bear witness for her Lord; but her's was the unimpeachable testimony of a life spent in the activities of Christian service. There was no open door that she did not enter. The Sunday-school, the prayer meeting, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Wesleyan Society, the Missionary Society, the supplying of the needy, the comfort of the sorrowing, all laid their claims upon her willing love, and in all she was a leader because she was a devoted and unselfish worker. She was always delicate in body, and the shadow of an early death hung over her, but her zeal knew no tiring. It was as if threatened death admonished her to "redeem the time," and when at last the expected summons came she was ready and willing to go.

Her married life was especially beautiful. There were no children in the home, herself and her husband composing the family. They were everything to each other, and in their well-ordered lives were rarely for more than a few hours absent from each other. Many will miss the strong and gentle woman; but none half so much as he who bears alone the burdens made heavier by her going. He says: "I am what I am because of her; how much she has done for me, and how much I owe to her, I can not begin to tell."

Her life was full of plans—plans for the church, for promoting the usefulness of her pastor, for the help of the poor, for the glory of her Lord; but when in the midst of her plans her Father said, "Come," like a dutiful child, she laid down her work and went to him.

Our Best and Only Defense.

Two weeks ago we dwelt at some length on the magnitude of the American city problem, urging that for various reasons our cities were the centers of danger to the republic. There is only one way to avoid the ominous ruin with which our cities threaten us, and that is to evangelize them. The church must evangelize the cities, or they will overthrow our government and disrupt and destroy our social system. The evil and corrupting forces centered in our cities will certainly overwhelm and ruin us unless our churches, by the wisest and speediest means, and the most liberal expenditure of men and means, plant the gospel agencies strongly throughout our cities and supply their teeming millions with gospel privileges. Just here arises another difficulty to which we wish to call attention. In another column we urge the necessity of co-operation among the different denominations.

In no part of the Master's vineyard would such united and harmonious work among the churches exert a more happy influence than in the cities. We wish to add here that with such co-operation secured, there is one point which must receive the prompt and persistent attention of the pulpit. The Lord's stewards must "come up to the help of the Lord." The cities contain most of the wealth of the churches. These rich Protestants must open their purses and furnish the means with which to erect edifices and defray the large expense incident to city evangelization. The pulpit must address itself to the obligation that men owe to the kingdom of God. If the treasury of the Lord is kept locked and barred by the church members to whom the Lord has committed its keeping, the great work of city evangelization will be impeded, and our perils will continue to grow and the work become more and more difficult from this delay.

The covetousness of the church must be faithfully exposed, and it will require men brave and fearless to do it. A pulpit baptized with the Holy Ghost, and aflame with zeal for millions of souls perishing in darkness amid the blazing light of the meridian of this, our gospel day, can accomplish the task. God can work through such consecrated hearts and tongues. Selfishness will yield, hearts will soften, hands will be outstretched to help, under the pleadings of earnest, loving, prayerful men, who feel upon them the burden of unbaptized millions and within them the infinite throbbings of a divine compassion.

A consecrated, holy, Spirit-filled ministry is the key to the solution of this and all the ills that afflict or environ our blessed Israel. We need earnest, agonizing prayer for the divine endowment of power from on high.

The clouds overhanging us are dark and ominous. The social perils are thick and powerful. The enemies are defiant and aggressive. The apathy and aversion within our ranks are deep-seated and deplorable. These and other facts make the problem and the prospects complex and difficult, but not discouraging. Heart-earnestness and soul-earnestness in the ministry will break the clouds. Love is powerful. Love is incessant, inventive, invincible. A love-filled heart will theorize less and evangelize more. It will break through the obstacles to reaching the masses, and the latter will follow where the holy light of heart-fire leads the way. Money will come thus as fast as it is needed, and can be successfully and wisely used for the Lord's work. Against the churchless millions in the purloins of crime and fifth let us have a commissioned ministry in the prayer of contrition and faith, and speedily the mists will clear away, the sunlight will gladden many sad homes, and the kiss of love and peace will be felt by thousands of hearts now strangers to God and allons from the commonwealth of Israel.—Tennessee Methodist.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—March 20, 1892.

By Rev. W. H. LA PRADRE.

Review—First Quarter.

TIME.—B. C. 715-587.
PLACES.—Jerusalem, Babylon.

Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they that testify of me."—John v, 39.

The lessons for the quarter now ending concern principally prophecies uttered between the overthrow of the kingdom of Israel and the downfall of Judah, except that the hopeful words of Ezekiel were spoken soon after Judah was overthrown, to encourage the captives in Babylon.

The period covered is about one hundred and twenty-five years, during the last two decades of which Judah had been tributary to Babylon.

Throughout the series of lessons several truths are kept prominent:

First. That with nations, as with individuals, righteousness is the condition of permanent prosperity.

Second. That sin will be punished.

Third. That God is long-suffering with evil-doers, and merciful to the penitent.

Here and there, as in lessons 1, 5, 6, 11, across the dark history of the sin and punishment of God's chosen people is thrown the light of promise. Salvation through the coming Messiah, redemption from sin, an everlasting period of joy and gladness—these are set over against the shame and captivity and corruption of the rebellious nation. Yet, even in the midst of these prophecies of good things, the enormity of sin and the incalculable cost of salvation from its power and its consequences are pictured in the lesson of the suffering Savior, from Isaiah liii.

As Judah, under the leadership of ungodly rulers, is seen, in the succession of lessons, surely approaching her downfall, the patience and love of God is more and more apparent. But this love had in it none of that indifference to sin which so frequently passes current for charity. Israel is beloved, is as "the apple of God's eye;" but sin doomed Israel, none the less. From David to Zedekiah, from royalty enthroned over an obedient and prosperous people to royalty in chains, and the people scattered and impoverished—the decadence was gradual, but it was sure.

Sin did it. Sin has done it for "all the nations that forgot God." Sin will do it for our own loved nation if the principles of righteousness shall ever give way to lust for gold, or for pleasure, or for power. "Righteousness exalteth a nation;" nothing else does. Iniquity ruins—ruins a nation just as it ruins a man.

Let it be understood that at no given time was God left without a few true, devoted followers. Not only such grand characters as Josiah among the kings, and Jeremiah and others among the prophets, but numbers of humble men and women were true to right. The "seven thousand" of Ahab's day had representatives all along down the line. These looked back at the glory of other days with sighing and tears, and at the surrounding sinfulness with horror and dismay. To such the promise of deliverance were always sweet. The thread of the divine purpose to redeem the world runs through the entire record, and sometimes the prophet seems to forget the present gloom in his glad expectancy of the coming glory. Waste and weariness give place to rest and plenty. Fountains spring from the desert for "every one that thirsteth." Olive and fig flourish, and are fruitful. The den of the wild beast and the cave of the serpent become the sporting-places of childhood. The horns burst with fatness; the enemies of Israel are scattered.

But all this was to be, not by man's power nor wisdom. The Spirit of the Lord should do this. The Messiah should come, and the distinguishing glory of his reign should be the glory of righteousness and of purity. To the eye of the prophet it is not so much power set over against weakness, wealth against want, freedom against captivity; it is, rather, righteousness against iniquity, holiness against sin. Far away, it may be, but with clearness of vision, he saw the kingdom of "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost"—the eternal kingdom of the Lord Christ filling the whole earth.

Such are the teachings of the quarter's lessons. Happy the teacher who fixes them firmly in the mind, impresses them on the consciences of the pupils!

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. L. Howell, Athens, La., March 8: "Prospects good for this year. Have taken two missionary collections, amounting to $40. Have two more to take. I wish to-day five names of new subscribers to the ADVOCATE, making six since Conference. We are saying Amen to your fight against the lottery. Keep up the fight. The 'possum' is not dead every time he shuts his eyes."

Rev. E. S. Lowe, Dublin, Miss., March 8: "We have nothing very new or striking to report from this charge. We have not been stormed, nor are we living in our own hired house. Your advice is the only one in the above. Hence we need not a paragon, nor a hired house; but he wouldn't make an occasional storm. The condition of the work gives very little reason for rejoicing. Some of these bottom country appointments don't amount to much during the winter. What a shaking up this country does need! Our first great need, and it is an imperative one, is more pure religion, unadorned before God the Father. Our members need to feel more concern about the success and welfare of the church. Our church members need to feel the sacredness of the vows they have assumed and to comply with the requirements of the same. We long for the time when all of our people will rather go to church to hear the preached Word than to the saloon to sip the drunkard's bowl. The saloon is our curse, and the Sunday selling is a menace to our Christian civilization."

Rev. J. J. Kelly, Sparta, La., March 8: "The cause of Christ on the Sparta front in many respects is encouraging. We have some devout and staunch soldiers of the cross here. Large congregations, and good order generally. Several Sunday-schools well attended, and a remarkably large prayer meeting at Sparta. Have received one into the church, and collected nearly twenty dollars for missions. The town newly building up at the junction of the Beardsley-railroad, known as Blenville, promises to be a strong point for us soon, as the entire town—with two exceptions, I believe—are Methodist or Methodist adherents. It is, I believe, generally conceded that the parish site will move to this place soon. We are going to make an effort this week to secure a lot on which to build a church and parsonage. We learn that a certain gentleman promised to deed to us a sufficient amount for this purpose. We preach and also hold a fine Sunday-school there now in a vacant storehouse. Our superintendent, Bro. Jesse Murphy, thinks great interest is being taken by many. I have received several new subscribers for the ADVOCATE and some renewals, the money accompanying them. We are not troubled here with any strange doctrines, but enjoy the pure gospel and the class meetings of the old style. We hope to have a camp meeting this year and hope you'll be with us."

The Gospel of Good Roads.

THE ECONOMIC VALUE OF ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

No subject can be of more general interest than that of good roads. It is one in which every person, though not owning even a rod of land or driving over a mile of roadway, is more or less directly interested. The increased wear and tear of vehicles, the added number of animals needed for the transportation of necessarily small loads, and the longer time consumed in going to and from marketable points, are all an added tax which goes upon everything sold, and which the buyer pays—a tax which in the aggregate amounts annually to a sum running far into the millions.

Whether or not the roads in this country are worse than those of any other, that they are bad enough is beyond dispute. That this is a new country, and that we have been too busily engaged in solving the great problems of self-government to give such attention to anything else, may have had something to do in this matter, but the time has come when longer neglect would be inexcusable. And we are glad to note that many prominent men, and notably the "American Wheelmen's Club," who have made a thorough study of the subject, are seeking to awaken public interest in the matter by a series of publications presenting facts and figures which can not fail to impress and convince the public mind, and lead in the near future to some right action on this important subject. We regard this as a legitimate object for the Department of Agriculture to promote by means of broadcast publications on the subject which should properly educate our farmers up to the point, for it is a fact that the farmers themselves, who would be chiefly benefited by good roads, are the most reluctant to take the matter in hand. The general circulation by the government of such a carefully prepared statistical pamphlet on the subject of road-making as that of Mr. Isaac B. Potter, entitled "The Gospel of Good Roads," which brings the whole matter home to the farmer as a practical investment, would be productive of far more good to the country at large than many of the elaborate treatises which it has recently been issuing on the history of instruction in mathematics in this connection, the natural history of the English sparrow, and treatises on many other topics of a similar nature, sent out at government expense by the Department.

The average rainfall in the United States is something over 40 inches per year. The dirt road absorbs these 40 odd inches of water, freezes and thaws, dries, pulverizes, changes from paste to powder, and back again from powder to paste, and for weeks at a time is practically impassable. Farm traffic is tied up. The farmer may have produce to sell, purchases to make, grain to grind, timber to haul, bills to collect, and obligations to meet, but all these must wait because his only avenue of travel is taking its annual soak. A dozen times a day he looks out of his barn door with the hope of seeing some struggling vagrant of whom he can inquire, "How is the road?"

There were about 10,000 farm horses in this country, and for about four weeks all the country roads had been in just this condition. Teaming was out of the question; to haul a load to town was impossible, and the 10,000 farm horses stood in their stalls "eating their heads off." At what cost to the farmer? Assume that the cost of keeping each horse is twenty-five cents per day, including labor, food and all other items, and in half a minute we compute that it costs $2,500 per day, $17,500 per week, and exactly $70,000 for the four weeks that these horses have been standing practically idle. A bad road, you see, is an expensive thing.

Let us now look at this subject in the light of a few official statistics. The farmers of this country in the year 1890 had upon their farms draft animals as follows: Horses, 14,213,437; mules, 2,331,027; oxen, etc., 36,349,024; a total of 53,393,888, valued at $1,721,635,798.

Thus we have nearly $2,000,000,000 invested in motive power of a perishable, uncertain and expensive kind. Busy or idle these animals must be fed and cared for every day. They are boarders that you can't get rid of when the busy season is over, and it stands you in hand to keep them at work. Two thousand millions of dollars make a large sum. Invested at 5 per cent interest, it would produce nearly $2,000,000 per week. Then you see, there are more than sixteen millions of horses and mules alone, and to feed and care for these it costs the modest sum of $4,000,000 per day. A little while ago a very clever and intelligent citizen of Indiana estimated that had roads cost the farmer $15 per year for each horse and mule in his service. This means a loss in the aggregate of nearly $250,000,000 per year. Add wear and tear of wagons and harnesses, $100,000,000; depreciation value of farm lands, $2,000,000,000; total, twenty-three hundred and fifty millions of dollars.

Making the utmost allowance in favor of the farmer, and granting the necessity for the liberal use of horse power in the maintenance of agricultural traffic, it is certain that the farmers of this country are keeping at least two millions of horses more than would be necessary to do all the hauling between farm and market. If only the principal roads were brought to a good condition. If we assume that each of these horses is fed the ordinary army ration of hay and oats, it requires 14,000 tons of hay or fodder and 750,000 bushels of oats per day to feed these unnecessary animals, which themselves have a money value of $140,000,000. The value of hay and oats fed to these horses per day is about $300,000, or something like $114,000,000 per year.

The common roads of the country are the veins and arteries through which flow the agricultural productions and the commercial supplies, which are the life-blood of the nation, to those great ducts of travel and transportation, the railroads of the country.

While our railway system has become the most perfect in the world, the common roads of the United States have been neglected and are inferior to those of any other civilized country in the world. They are deficient in every necessary qualification that is an attribute to a good road; in direction, in slope, in shape and service, and, most of all, in want of repair. These deficiencies have resulted not only from an ignorance of the true principles of road-making, but also from the varied systems of road-building in force in the several States of the Union, due to defective legislation. The principle upon which the several States have based much of their road legislation is known as the "road tax" system of personal service and commutation, which is unsound as a principle, unjust in its operations, wasteful in its practice, and unsatisfactory in its results. It is a relic of feudalism, borrowed from the "statute labor" of England, and its evil results are ill-conditioned in the neglected and the country. It is a question of vast importance to the welfare of this nation and commercial life of agriculture that the attention that should be made to remedy the defects now existing and establish a system that could be made uniform and efficient in all the States of the Union.

By the improvement of these common roads every branch of our agricultural, commercial and manufacturing industries would be materially benefited. Every article brought to market would be diminished in price; the number of horses necessary as a motive power would be reduced, and by these and other retrenchments millions of dollars would be annually saved to the public. The expense of repairing roads and the wear and tear of vehicles and horses would be essentially diminished, and the thousands of acres of land the products of which are now wasted in feeding unnecessary animals in order to carry on this charade of transportation, would be devoted to the production of food for the inhabitants of the country. In fact, the public and private advantages which would result from effecting this great object in the improvement of our highways are incalculable, not only to the agricultural community as a whole, but to the whole population as a nation. Gladstone, who is perhaps the greatest Englishman of the century, says: "The duties of a government include the whole scheme of honest Statecraft. It is this principle that pervades the road laws of every civilized country in Europe and insures to all the people a fair and equitable opportunity to enjoyment, untrammelled, the full blessings of their vocations and live their lives in the pursuit of happiness."

How more appropriately can this article be closed than by urging upon your consciences two Scripture texts:—"A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast;" and "The prudent man looketh well to his going."—Christian at Work.

Gough's Apostrophe to Water.

Taking in his hand a glass of water, Mr. Gough exclaimed:

Did you ever feel the tongue dry, the lips parched and the throat feverish; and then bringing a goblet filled with pure water to your lips, do you remember the sensation as it trickled over your tongue and gurgled down your throat? Was it not a luxury? Surely; it is a luxury to quench thirst in pure spring water. Here is a beverage brewed for us by our heavenly Father—brewed, too, in beautiful places, and not amid the smoky fires, the horrid stench and rank corruption which foster around the brew-house or distillery. Our Father brews a drink for His own children in lovely places, down in your grassy dell, where the red deer wanders and the child loves to play; down there, where the brook murmurs and the rills give out their music; there he brews pure water, far away on the mountain-top, whose granite peak glitters like gold in the sunlight; away again on the wide, wild sea, where the hurricane howls its mournful melody, and the storm sends back the chorus, sweeping the march of God!

There brews the beautiful water! And beautiful it always is! You see it glistening in the dewdrop; you hear it sparkling in the lee gem, when the trees seem loaded with rich jewels! Look at it as it glitters in the hoarfrost on which the sun is shining! Beautiful water!—dancing in the ballroom, leaping, foaming, dashing in the oarcase, sparkling in the fountain!

Beautiful water! See how it weaves a golden gauze for the setting sun, and a silvery tissue for the midnight moon! Watch it descending in the feathery snowflake, or painting with fairy pencil flowers and leaves upon the window-pane, or covering with a mantle of white the wintry world! Look at it as it trickles down the mountain-side, like silver ribbons, mixing with the heather bloom! Mark it settling on the mountain-top till it seems as if it lifted up its glorious face to kiss the very heavens! Beautiful water! rolling up the valley in the cloud mist, or weaving the gorgeous rainbow; its warp, the raindrop of the earth; its woof, heaven's bright sunbeam!

Beautiful water! There is no bloodstain in its crystal depths, no madness and no murder in its foam! It never broke a mother's heart; it never ruined a reputation; it never sent a poor wretch shrieking to the gallows. No poison bubbles on its brink! Never did pale-faced wife, or starving child, or broken-hearted mother weep into it a bitter tear; never did drunkard howl back from his death bed a fearful curse upon it! There is no curse here. Sing songs of ruby wine if you will; hand round your goblet if you choose, but—

"Give water to me, bright water to me; It cooleth the brow, it cooleth the brain, It makes the weak man strong again."

Young women, in the glory of your womanly beauty, speak out and tell us; young men, in the majesty of your intellectual power, stand up and tell us—have we not common sense on our side when we would dash from the lips of the young forever the drink which debases and degrades, and give them as their best and purest beverage the gift of God, brewed in beautiful places for his children? Because our principle is lawful, and good, and expedient and reasonable, and sensible, I say we shall succeed. I shall not live to see it; but when I die I pray God that it may be in harness, battling for the cause, with "Excelsior!" for my motto, and the hope that a better day is coming, and the humble, reverent faith that God will speed the right.—Sketches.

Good Advice.

In Winter more exercise is required for the body than in Summer. Wear warm underclothing, material of open texture is preferable. Avoid catching cold, but should you develop a cough take immediate steps to get rid of it.

The most effective remedy for coughs or colds is Marsden's Pectoral Balm; it is pleasant to take and never fails to cure.

Ask your druggist for it, and don't be persuaded to take any other instead.

BRIEFS.

Paul thought that a preacher ought to be "apt to teach;" but it seems that some preachers have discovered a new "reading," which they translate, "apt to entertain." There is this distinction which we commend to such preachers. The preacher who is "apt to teach" always "entertains," and the preacher who is "apt to entertain" rarely "teaches." Teaching includes entertainment, but entertainment does not always include teaching.

There were published in this country last year 4,655 books of all kinds. Fiction leads in number, being 1,105; next come books on theology and religion, 528; and next to those juvenile books, 460; then books on education, 355; then law books, 348; literary history and miscellany, 251; fine arts, 228; biography, 211; political and social science, 197; poetry and drama, 193; travel, 139; history, 124. This shows what is mostly read by our people.

The Christian at Work thus sums up the first year's work of General Booth's "In Darkest England Scheme."

During the year the sum of $125,000 has been expended on the Over-the-Sea colony. The sum of $200,000 has been devoted to the purchase and leasing of land for city refugees and workshops, while the amount of $205,000 has been expended on the farm colony. The food and shelter depots have been self-supporting. There has been a large deficiency in the anti-sweating workshops. The match factory has given profits of $2,275 in four months. The knitting factory and bookbinding have each earned profits. There have been 15,000 applicants during the year. There have been supplied 2,381,184 cheap meals, of which 1,097,866 were halfpenny dinners, 96,555 farthing dinners and 52,000 free meals. The work produced in the refuges in the labor factories realized $75,650. The chief value of the work, however, is very apparent in the reformation of criminals, ministering to the sick and poor and exerting a general elevating influence.

The election of a new General of the Jesuit Order has been set for May, the convention to be held in the German-Hungarian College in Rome. In connection with this announcement the Rome correspondent of the Paris Temps gives the latest official statistics of the Order. The Society of Jesus now numbers 12,947 members; of these 1,764 belong to Italy; 2,863 to France, 3,470 to Germany, Austria and Holland, which three countries constitute one province; 2,570 to Spain, 2,307 to England and her colonies. To each of those provinces certain missions over the globe are assigned. The direction of the work of the entire Order is in the hands of the General, to whom the members must yield absolute obedience. The General is assisted by a special college of twenty-two, ten of whom are lay brethren. This college meets once a week, under the presidency of the General. The final decision in all cases rests in the hands of the General, and from him there is no appeal. The last General since the Italian government took possession of the magnificent cloister of Gesu, in Rome, have resided in Fiesole, near Florence. Never in the history of the Order has it had a French General. The recently deceased General was a Swiss.—Independent.

A Special Call to a Definite Work.

The Methodists believe and teach that God calls men to the office of the Christian ministry. The paramount duty of the man thus called is to preach the gospel. This has ever been the view of the evangelical church, and it has ever been considered by the world as the veriest "foolishness." And yet it has always "pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." God calls the preacher to a definite work. He sends him on a special mission with a special aim to accomplish a special object. The man who is called of God has no alternative. He can not turn to this thing or to that without rebelling against the authority that called him and assigned him his line of duty.

If he has a definite duty, he must do that duty in a definite manner. Indefiniteness will mar the beauty and reduce to nothing the effect of any work. This is especially the case in preaching. We have had many sad examples of this in the past, and are having many equally as sad to-day. There is much preaching now that is greatly deficient in definiteness, and thus greatly deficient in power. All the complications of a great machine result in producing power at one point only. If there should be any indefiniteness, there would be no power produced, and, of course, there is no result, and the machine is a failure. As in mechanics, so in spiritual work. All the wonderful agencies which redemption has put in motion are intended to produce one result, and one only. And these agencies are all so connected that that result is produced only when they work in harmony. All these agencies concentrate in the preaching of the gospel as the final agency to produce the great result—the salvation of souls. Now, if the preacher does not preach with a definiteness that ranges itself in harmony with the preceding work of the other agencies, he interrupts the great plan of God and stops the work short of its grand consummation. The only thing needed to finish God's work in redemption is to preach a gospel in harmony with that work. In this matter God has crowned men with immortal honor in calling them to preach, so as to round up his own work.

So when he calls men to preach he tells them what to preach. He gives them the most definite instructions. If they have the "hearing ear," they can make no mistakes at this point. And this was the last word Jesus Christ spoke to his church—as if he would have his disciples remember this above everything else. He said: "Preach the gospel." He says the same thing to the man he calls to-day, and that is definite enough to any man who will seek for the meaning of the words in which the command is given. It evidently does not mean science nor philosophy nor subtle speculations in metaphysics. It evidently does not mean theories of religion nor vagaries of theology. The gospel is a definite fact, and that fact is as simple as it is definite, and this is what God calls men to preach. Now, the preacher must learn this: that this fact has two sides, and that unless these two sides are plainly presented in preaching, a full gospel is not proclaimed. Sometimes we hear preachers make a distinction which is not necessary. We hear them talk about "preaching the gospel" and "preaching the law." Such talk does not recognize the truth that the gospel is a fact with two sides. There is no necessity for such a distinction, and we believe it really discounts the power of the gospel. It is as much as to say there are some people whom the gospel can not save. Paul had no such idea and made no such distinction. Speaking of the gospel in the first chapter of Romans, he says that it is a two-fold revelation. It reveals to faith God's method of saving a sinner by faith. That is one side. It also reveals "the wrath of God against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness." That is the other side. The latter is as much the gospel as the former. These two revelations show the gospel in its entirety. And these two sides of the gospel are to be preached by everyone called of God. There is no other gospel. God calls the preacher to proclaim salvation by Christ to every penitent who believes, and to proclaim with equal directness his wrath to be visited upon those who will not forsake their ungodliness and unrighteousness. As the New Testament exhibits the love of God for penitent men as it was never exhibited before, so it declares his wrath against ungodliness in terms the Old Testament knows nothing about. Then, as the preacher has a definite call to preach a definite gospel, let him study and pray and agonize for that endowment of power which will enable him to preach with that definiteness which will make saints joyful in God's love and cause sinners to tremble under the wrath of God revealed against their ungodliness.

Centenary College.

Rev. Robert Harry, agent for this time-honored institution, spent several days of last week in our city. Since his appointment to this important position he has been quite busy and earnest in meeting the responsibilities of his agency. He has just returned from a tour up the Red river as far as Shreveport, La., and is very much encouraged with the results of his work. He has had private conversations with a number of prominent persons, who have promised to aid him in securing a permanent endowment for the college. During this trip he secured several good round sums on this behalf and the promise of several students. One gentleman of prominence gave him to understand that between this time and the commencement in June he would be able to report a handsome subscription in cash for the endowment fund. Bro. Harry is thus vindicating the wisdom of his appointment to this agency, and we verily believe that the college will now take a new start. We have believed and said all along that the college needed an active agent more than anything else. The best advertisement a college can have is an enthusiastic agent. He not only secures money for endowment and pupils for the class-rooms, but he awakens a widespread interest and sympathy for the educational work of the church—and in some respects that is better than money. We do not think it will be a great while before Agent Harry will find the man or men who will meet Bro. James' proposition, and thus turn over to the college $50,000. It will be recollected that Bro. James proposed to give $25,000, provided any man, or the church, would give as much; and he did not set any time limit, so that the proposal is still open, and Bro. Harry proposes to close it by securing the amount required.

And now we correct an erroneous impression in regard to some remarks some weeks since on this subject in this paper. The impression created was that Bro. James had withdrawn his proposition. We are sorry that such an impression was made, for we had no authority to speak on that point. Our remarks were made upon the dilatoriness of our Methodist people to close in with Bro. James' most liberal offer, and to show that such dilatoriness had postponed the realization of his beneficence. Our mistake—as is sometimes the case—was in the use of one wrong word.

And now, we think, that under Bro. Harry's earnest and persistent efforts the day of realization of Bro. James' donation "draweth nigh."

The old college is not dead, nor is it dying; on the contrary, it will be flourishing and doing its good work in its own quiet way a long time after we all are "sleeping with the clouds of the valley."

Forgetfulness, Indifference or Covetousness, Which?

In conversation the other day with a prominent steward of one of our churches we learned a fact which prompted us to ask the question above written. He stated that there were one hundred and twenty members of his church who, as far as the Board of Stewards knew, never contributed a nickel apiece during the whole year for the support of the church. In answer to a question, he also stated that every one of the one hundred and twenty was able to contribute something; they are not classed among "the poor." What is the matter with those church members? They came forward of their own accord and assumed the church vows, and in the sight of God and before the church altar and in presence of the congregation promised most solemnly to "support the institutions of the church." Have they forgotten that vow? Such forgetfulness is a sin. What! Shall a man or woman live for weeks and months and years utterly oblivious of such a promise and be blameless? The thing is absurd.

Have they become indifferent to the obligations which that vow imposed? That is worse than forgetfulness. Indifference anywhere and in anything is death. The rankest fanaticism is preferable to indifference. Fanaticism may bring some good somewhere, but indifference accomplishes nothing anywhere. Indifference to voluntary obligation exhibits a state of mind that can not, by any kind of logic, be reconciled with the weakest requirements of the religion of Jesus Christ. A religious man indifferent to his responsibilities as a religious man! The thing can't be! If those one hundred and twenty are indifferent to their obligations, then the proper place for them is the mourner's bench. Let them repent before God says to them as he did to the Laodiceans: "I will spue thee out of my mouth."

It may be, after all, that those one hundred and twenty are covetous people. Worse and worse, because there is less hope for a covetous man than for any other sinner. In the Scriptures the sin of covetousness is catalogued with the worst of crimes. It is put alongside of murder and adultery, and is expressly said to be "idolatry."

Has this church of the Lord Jesus Christ one hundred and twenty idolaters within its pales? The covetous men and women love money, or what represents money, more than they love God, and, of course, are not Christians. Christians love God above everything and above every being. If those one hundred and twenty are covetous people, then they can never reach heaven, unless there is a complete renovation of their natures and a complete revolution of their character. "No covetous man hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God."

What is to be done for such people? The man who answers this question will not only save souls, but he will solve the financial problem of the church.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Last Sunday was spent in Clinton, Miss., the seat of Mississippi Baptist College, and at one time the proposed location of Mississippi's capital. The site selected is now washed into almost irredeemable gullies.

We have had the pleasure of meeting in the city during the past week Bro. R. M. Standifer, prosiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference. He spent several days with us, watching with much interest the action of the Senate on the "Dram-shop" chapter.

Bro. Dominick, manager of the Mississippi Conference Depository, laid several hooks on our desk a few days ago. Among them we noted "Sketchy Pages of Foreign Travels," by Dr. R. A. Young, and "Methodist Union," by Dr. Harrison. Dr. Young caught the ear of the people by his "20,000 Miles," and it is conceded by all that no man was better qualified to write "Methodist Union" than Dr. Harrison.

On Monday, Feb. 22; delegates from the several Epworth Leagues about the Bay met in the rooms of the Methodist Union in the city of San Francisco, and organized a Pacific Union of Epworth Leagues of the M. E. Church, South. Monthly conventions are to be held in San Francisco, Alameda, or Berkeley. No doubt, this movement will result in much good to the Leagues of the Far West.

We spent a few hours in Bolton, last Wednesday, found Bro. Jones and wife comfortably domiciled in the parsonage and well pleased with their work. He says from the route his mail takes the shortest way to Bolton is via Port Gibson. For the convenience of Bro. Jones, we take the liberty of calling the attention of his correspondents to the fact that Bolton, Miss., is his postoffice, and not Port Gibson.

We are in receipt of the first number of Light, a monthly magazine to be published in the city of Natchez, Miss. "In the interest of justice, kindness and mercy to every living creature." It is edited by Mr. Richard F. Reid, one of our boyhood friends. We speak for this new enterprise a kind reception. The need of "Light" on the subject of cruelty to animals and humanity is apparent to even a casual observer.

We have had the pleasure of meeting quite a number of our friends this week in Jackson, among them Bro. H. J. Harris, of Hattiesburg; Prof. W. R. Sims, of the University of Mississippi; Dr. B. D. Watkins, a prominent young physician of Natchez, Miss., and others. We are sorry we were absent when Bro. Caldwell, of Fannin, called. Our brethren and friends will always find a cordial welcome at the branch office.

We have been reliably informed that Rev. J. J. Tigert, D. D., of Kansas City, Mo., has been appointed fraternal messenger from the M. E. Church, South, to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, in place of Rev. W. A. Candler, D. D., who will be prevented from attending. While we are sorry that Dr. Candler will not be able to represent us before that body, we feel assured Dr. Tigert will not permit the banner of Southern Methodism to trail one whit.

Greenville, Miss., has sent a memorial to the Legislature, urging them to pass the bill on "Dram-shops," now pending. In the memorial we find these words:

We live in a community where the effects of the saloon and its concomitant evils are felt to a very painful degree, and it is our humble judgment that the salvation of our city and country depends upon the removal of the saloon from our midst.

It was adopted by the "Christian people of Greenville, Miss., in convention assembled." How different this from the phraseology of memorials sent up the early part of the session signed by "Business Men" and "Boards of Trade," but really in some instances, if not in many, concocted by the saloon interest solely.

The big postal card is coming into use in reporting from the work. We are glad of this. It is large enough for that purpose. We are having loud complaints about the length of some preachers' reports. We have exhorted time and again for brevity. And now comes the big postal to "sketch" our exhortation. Brethren, be brief enough to get your report on that postal. Our readers demand it.

The Epworth Herald says: "Failure to win men ought to drive us to our closets and to our knees. The fault can be said to lie with Christian workers, when souls are not saved. Christ is the same, the Holy Spirit is the same, the Word is the same, human nature is the same; where then is the failure? He who looks for the reason of failure outside of his own heart is usually deceiving himself."

In the postal service in this country 184,431 persons are employed, and in other departments of the government 62,863, making in all 247,294 persons in the government service.

NOTES.

It has been said that mankind is "the only part of God's creation disloyal enough to disown him."

The amount of information which some people acquire is immense, and the amount of misinformation which some other people acquire is "immense."

The number of universities in the world is set down as 110, with 13,642 teachers and 150,045 students. The average number of students to each university is 1,201, and to each teacher is a little over 10.

The man who "never learns anything" is to be pitied, the man who "never forgets anything" is in a worse condition; but the man who "never learns anything and who never forgets anything" is a Bourbon.

"Silas Ganderfoot," we think, has a very respectable following. He says: "My experience is that belated religion meets in preaching that most makes you feel like shouting in wun thing, and keepin from hockslidin when the kow gits into the korn is annither."

The Christian Union is responsible for this:

The greatest vice of the American pulpit is its imprudence. Its most needed virtue is an impolitic courage, a courage that dares speak out and takes no account of consequences. Paul knew even in his own experience the temptation to a coward's prudence, and begged his friends that they would pray for him that he might speak boldly. No record of his ever seeking prayers for him that he might be prudent! And yet Paul was no coward.

We read in the papers that Jay Gould has given the Presbyterians of New York $10,000 for church extension purposes. Now, we ask again, will not some of our rich men or women give us $5,000 for church extension in this city? If there is a place on this continent which needs a church extension movement, with thousands of dollars to promote it and carry it forward to a splendid success, that place is New Orleans. Who will answer this call of perishing thousands!

The London Times thus comments on the heer bill of England:

It must be confessed that those $400,000 for heer is a figure that is hard to be proud of. It means that down the national throat there flows enough to provide the country with two navies and two armies, with the Civil Service thrown in—or very nearly so. It means that the beer drunk in one year would pay the interest on the national debt for three years; or that, if funded in nine years, it would pay the whole debt and leave us with no more interest or annuities to pay. Or, from another point of view, it amounts to a probable fifteenth part of the whole national income—that is, everybody in England may be considered to spend six, or seven per cent. of his revenue on beer, and twelve per cent. of his revenue on beer, wine and spirits taken together.

The worst feature of the whole thing is, there has been a large increase over last year. And we suspect the same may be said of our Christian country.

We have the highest regard for the school teacher and appreciate the value of his work; but some of them are, we fear, using methods that must in the end be injurious to the pupils. Minds can not be developed in groups—that is, not to the highest degree. Minds differ, and, to reach the best development, must be treated differently. The problem presented to the teacher is to find the right method to develop the moral and mental powers of each pupil. He is the wise teacher who cares for the individual scholar and studies his peculiarities and makes the instructions fit his condition. Schools in which the pupils constitute a sort of mechanism, though they are run with admirable skill, are not the best for the perfect development of young minds. Children are not machines any more than grown people. Wise parents will look into the methods of their children's teachers. Wise teachers will learn their pupils, and then teach them.

Two proposed amendments to the Federal Constitution have been introduced into the United States Senate. One provides for the election of United States Senators by the people instead of by the State Legislatures. Some think this would be a wholesome change inasmuch as it would "separate the party complexion of State Legislatures from Federal politics, and it would not be so easy for wealthy men to purchase a senatorship."

The other amendment is in these words: "No State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property or credit or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used for the purpose of founding, maintaining or adding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses or otherwise, any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution, society or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control." It is thought that the effect of this amendment will be to "solve the vexed public school system in every State in the Union."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The Bishops' annual meeting will be held in Nashville, Tenn., May 3.

We hope every city reader, clerical and lay, will give particular attention to the editorial from the Tennessee Methodist, on the second page.

Bishop Keener spent last Sunday in Mobile, Ala., whence he goes to hold the Baltimore Conference, which convenes on the twenty-third.

Our symposium on "Finance" seems to have been read with a good deal of interest. We publish this week two more articles which are well worth perusal.

To Cincinnati, on Wednesday, March 2, during the revival meeting conducted by Mr. Mills, three thousand business houses closed their doors. This is the greatest revival Cincinnati ever had.

About as helpful a thing as you can do, reader, is to show your pastor, in an unmistakable way, that you appreciate his labor. It will help him, and what helps him will help the whole church.

We understood Dr. Wier's question in regard to "S. P. Q. R." was for our little folks to hunt up. We have received several answers by preachers. Is that fair? Let the little folks find the answer.

One of the most interesting and instructive articles about the South we have seen is from the pen of Gen. E. P. Alexander, of Georgia, on "Industrial Progress of the South," in the March Forum.

Rev. T. J. Nowell writes: "Mrs. Mary G. Wyatt, wife of our dear Bro. J. Wyatt, of the North Mississippi Conference, died in Como, Miss., March 6, 1892. I will write you of this good woman in a few days."

We call the attention of our country readers to the article on the third page entitled, "The Gospel of Good Roads." It shows in a very emphatic manner the value of good roads and the loss sustained by bad roads. We trust it will do good.

Our papers seem to be on a boom. Last week "The Texas" put in appearance decked from head to foot in a "span-new" dress. We congratulate our friends on the improvement. Such an appearance as it makes ought to be good for Bro. Campbell's "rheumatism."

And now we have a handsome portrait of Bishop Galloway to hang alongside of Bishop Keener's. The adornment of our office by these portraits is very fine. Readers may now expect the Advocate to grow better all the time. And the expectation will be realized.

Dr. Hoss, of the Nashville, suddenly popped in on us last Monday morning. We were agreeably surprised and delighted at this unexpected visit. Dr. Hoss visited the preachers' meeting, where he was warmly welcomed, and he gave the brethren a very interesting talk. He left Tuesday morning for Dallas, Texas, to attend an Epworth League Convention.

Rev. C. B. Carter writes: "On Saturday, March 5, Rev. G. E. Chandler, the Presbyterian evangelist, came to Crowley to hold a meeting. He held it in our church. He asked the co-operation of all denominations. This was gladly given. He preached until Sunday night, March 13, and the result is that twenty-eight persons have united with the different churches here, distributed as follows: Presbyterians, 15; M. E. Church, South, 10; Baptists, 2; M. E. Church, 1. The church was revived; good seed were sown, and there are indications of more to follow."

The immediate cause of baldness is loss of nourishment in the pores of that part of the skin where the hair is accustomed to grow. In recent years it has been found that the roots of the hair are sometimes attacked by a parasite.

Each hair has a separate and individual existence like a blade of grass. It is tubular in form, hollow, and to sustain its vitality it requires a certain amount of moisture and vital essence given out through the pores of the scalp which are the same as those of the skin. When this substance is from any cause withheld the hair withers and falls away in the same manner that the stems of a plant when deprived of its sap droop and die.

No matter what may be the cause of loss of hair or decay of its vigor, it can be restored by the use of the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, a remedy that has been tried with the most marvelous results in nearly every State in the Union. It is especially recommended for the use of ladies, as it serves as a delightful dressing as well as tonic, being a purely vegetable preparation. Ask your druggist for it or send to the Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, drafts on country banks, registered letters, drafts on checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility in collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

Be Considerate.—Don't worry your friends and family with that worn and faded appearance. Get a bottle of Geole Female Tonic. It will change your pallid cheeks to the rosy hue of health.

District Conference.

The New Orleans District Conference will convene in Carondelet Street Church, April 7, at 10 A. M. The recording stewards will please bring up their Quarterly Conference Records for official examination.

The Annual Conference Board of Missions has arranged to hold an anniversary meeting during the session of the District Conference. A program is being prepared, and several eminent speakers will appear on the platform. Let all the preachers and delegates so arrange their temporal affairs that they may give all the time set for the Conference to earnest deliberation upon the affairs of the church in the district.

C. W. CARTER, P. E.

Special Notice.

We call the attention of our city Methodists to the fact that at the general meeting in Carondelet Street Church, in January, an adjournment was made to Sunday, March 27, at 3 P. M. This will be an important meeting, and we trust the preachers and members will so arrange their affairs as to be present.

The meeting will be held in Carondelet Street Church.

Pastors will please call the attention of the societies to the above notice.

M. G. STREATER, Dist. Sec.

I would like to call the attention of the preachers of the Winona district to the matter of organizing a preachers' meeting, or I would prefer to call it a "Wesleyan Institute." Will all the preachers of the district, who will take part in it, write me at once. I would ask Dr. J. D. Cameron to act as president for this year, and to suggest a time and place of meeting and also a programme for the meeting.

Brothers, we can have an old-fashioned prayer meeting, if no more, and get organized for another year.

W. H. SANDERS.

Sidon, Miss.

To the Brotherhood of Traveling Preachers of the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: You have seen the official notice of the death of our late brother, Rev. E. R. Strickland, and have also received from the secretary, Rev. B. F. Jones, an official notice in regard to your mortuary fee, now due on account of said death. Permit me, pursuant to a standing resolution of our Brotherhood, to urge upon you the prompt payment of this fee. Bro. Strickland was the fourteenth beneficiary member of our Brotherhood to die since our organization in Natchez in the year 1882. Who of us, surviving members, will be the fifteenth?

Already this Brotherhood has done much good in the line for which it was organized; but its possibilities have not yet been fully developed. We hope, in carrying out the resolutions of our late meeting in Brookhaven, to greatly enlarge its membership, and thus increase its usefulness.

In remitting our mortuary fee to Rev. I. W. Cooper, D. D., treasurer, Hazlehurst, Miss., we will not neglect to remember, at a throne of grace, the bereaved family of our lamented Bro. Strickland.

W. B. LEWIS,

President Miss. Conf. Brotherhood.

T. B. HARGROVE.

Rev. C. H. Parkhurst says this: A man who uses his abilities, his money, or his official position under government other than as a steward so far responsible for the common weal, is a fraud. However reputable he be, if he is utilizing his opportunity to the end of his own self-aggrandizement, even though he stand at the head of the Commonwealth, he is no true governor, but a beast of prey; sucking the blood that he ought to warm and quicken; gorging upon the body politic, that is his high privilege and royal opportunity to nourish, strengthen and ennoble.

From personal knowledge we recommend our readers needing photographs to go to the artist, E. Simon, No. 153 Canal street. None better in this city.

This is a very readable little book of eight short chapters: Jesus as a Witness; History as a Witness; Experience as a Witness; The Enemy as a Witness; Reason as a Witness; Christ, the Life; Christ, the Light; Christ, the Way. OBITUARIES.

NEILL.—Mrs. LAURA C. NEILL died, of pulmonary consumption, at her home near Monroze, Jasper county, Miss., Feb. 14, 1892. She was born Aug. 25, 1857, and was married to Mr. G. L. Neill in the year 1879. She was the daughter of Rev. Thos. Chapman, a minister of the M. E. Church, South. Mrs. Neill joined the same church of her father in 1870. After the death of her mother her father moved to Paulding, Jasper county, Miss. Her membership was moved to Paulding. In a year or two she came to make her home with the writer and wife, her sister. She also moved her membership to Price's Chapel, in which church she remained a member until she died. Her mother was a model Christian woman. Like the good Samaritan, she would not neglect an opportunity to do good to others. She would deny herself any pleasure and make any sacrifice for the good and comfort of suffering humanity. With all this she was not forgetful of duty to her own. She early pointed her children to the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world.

The deceased had been a sufferer from August, 1891, till Feb. 11, 1892, patiently waiting the will of God. She said she did not fear to die, but would like to live for her children; but her way to heaven was clear, as well as she could see at present. She said, "When the time comes, it may be different." Oftentimes when she thought all the family asleep, and she could not sleep from continued coughing, she would say to herself, "My time will come when I can sleep." After patient watching and waiting the time has come. Death, with its icy hand, has now commenced his work to finish it. She spoke in a loud voice, and said, "The time is come; there is nothing in the way." She then commenced shouting and praising God, giving up her little children to the care of him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." She said she was happier than ever before. "Oh," she said, "what a sweet resting-place the graveyard will be to this worn-out body! The time is now come." And one long and joyful look heavenward reveals her baby. She spoke, and said, "There is my baby in the arms of Jesus," and was gone.

She leaves husband and five children, two daughters and one brother, many relatives and friends, to mourn her loss.

Dr. Wm. E. Smith.

SIMMONS.—J. M. SIMMONS, JR., was born Nov. 1858; was married to Miss Clara Fredrick in the autumn of 1880. He joined the M. E. Church, South, a short while before his marriage, and lived a consistent member of the same up to the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 12, 1891.

Bro. Simmons was a good and true man in every aspect of his being. He was truly the preacher's friend, always assisting them in every possible way that he could. He gave liberally of his substance, and was always ready to cooperate with his pastor in the spiritual work of the church. He was a good steward and faithful Sunday-school superintendent as long as his health would permit him to attend. The writer had only known him something less than a year; but that was long enough to have learned to love him. I never knew him to be anything but upright and honest in all his dealings with his fellow-men. He was a model husband, very much devoted to his good wife and little boy. He was tender and affectionate in his dealings with his two brothers and sister, and a dutiful, obedient son. He honored his father's gray hairs and feeble step, and since his mother's death has taken care of and provided for him in his own home. He has not always been a Christian; but since he united with the church he has, by God's grace, been faithful and true to its obligations and has endeavored not to throw any reproach upon the name of Christ, and when death came upon him he was calm and resigned, patient through all his sufferings. He committed his wife and babe unto the Lord before he died, and exhorted those who were around his bedside to meet him in heaven.

God rest, fond wife; your loss is his gain. The true it is said to have part with him when you too much need him; but the Lord is wise and merciful in all his dealings with his children. He faithful, loved ones, friends, and you will meet him again when the mist has cleared away. There will be no sickness, no suffering, no parting, but all will be joy, and forevermore.

J. C. CAMPBELL.

RAWLS.—ALLEN H. P. RAWLS was born May 23, 1830, in Marion county, Miss., and died in peace at his home at Poplarville, in Pearl River county, Miss., Dec. 31, 1891, aged seventy-one years seven months and ten days. He was the eldest of nine children, and left an orphan by the death of his father at the age of thirteen, and was raised by his widowed mother, who walked in the fear of the Lord to a good old age, and was then transferred to a brighter climate, only preceding her son Allen five years.

Bro. Rawls left eleven children who, with the widowed mother, weep not as those who have no hope; but, believing in the resurrection of the dead, they expect to meet him again beyond the ruins of the tomb. He was happily married to Obeldence Pope, Feb. 3, 1841, who joined the Methodist Church the year following. Their home was always a welcome retreat for the way-worn traveling preacher. He was always kindly received and kindly treated.

Bro. Rawls was esteemed and honored by his fellow countrymen. By them he was elected as a member of the Board of Supervisors of Pearl River county, and was president of the Board when the Master said, "Come up higher." H. D. HOWELL.

HUBBARD.—On the evening of the first day of this year the home of Bro. J. H. Hubbard was made all joyous and happy by the birth of a son and brother. So as the inmates of that happy Christian home entered upon the duties of the new year with new courage, zeal, resolutions and hope for good, they had given unto them an object worthy their bestowment of these deep emotions. But he was not long to be their constant joy and pleasure, for on the morning of Feb. 10 God called the dear little one back to himself. He was a fine child, and, no doubt, roused his father's aspirations to a loftier and more devoted plane, and unlocked fresh and deeper fountains of his mother's love. Although his stay was short—only one month and twenty days—yet he had a mission, and that being filled, God called him to himself again. The Lord giveth, the Lord taketh away, and may God help us to say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

At blessed thought, that through the abundance of God's grace, the infant loses all taint of the Adam's sin and is admitted to the everlasting joys of heaven! Rev. C. H. PRITMAN.

FEARN SPRINGS, MISS.

HEACHAM.—SAMUEL P. HEACHAM was born July 25, 1824; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1851, at Pleasant Valley Church, Copiah county, and suddenly fell asleep in Jesus, March 12, 1891, near Caseyville, while at work in the field. Bro. Heacham was married, May 23, 1845, to Miss Sarah J. Baker. Bro. Heacham was a true Christian of the Methodist type. As a citizen, he ranked with the best; as a husband, he was faithful and tender; as a father, he was loving and indulgent; as a neighbor and friend, he was highly esteemed by all. There are few Christians who deserve public notice more than Bro. Heacham. For many years he was the pillar of the church where he lived, keeping it up after many had moved away.

May God bless and guide his surviving family unto death, and gather them all in heaven an unbroken family. J. W. ELISON, Ex-Pastor.

GREEN.—Resolutions of the M. E. Sunday-school, Hickory.

It grieves us, it pleases our heavenly Father to remove from our midst and carry to that bright world above our beloved sister and co-worker, Miss MILLIE GREEN; therefore, be it Resolved, That it is only a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that, in regretting her removal from our midst, we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect and regard.

Resolved, That while we sadly realize the loss of a consistent member of our Sunday-school, we trust that she has crossed the beautiful river, and that her spirit is mingling with the redeemed "over there."

Resolved, That we sincerely condole the parents of the deceased on the dispensation with which it has pleased Divine Providence to afflict them, and commend them for consolation to him who orders all things for the best, and whose chastisements are meant in mercy.

Resolved, That this heartfelt testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be sent to the parents of our deceased friend; also a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication. LORA GILMORE, for Committee.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers who have saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottle holds two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

As dark misery settles down on us, and our refugees of lies fall to pieces one after one, the hearts of men, now at last serious, will turn to thoughts of truth. The eternal stars shine out again, as soon as it is dark enough.—Our Life.

The Conversion of a Pilgrim.

A touching incident that occurred several years ago in Tokyo, Japan, has just been published. It has moved many hearts here, and deserves a wide reading. The story presents, briefly, just a glimpse of these people in their hopeless efforts after light and help; but that one glimpse should be enough to move a heart of stone to help spread the glad news of the Savior's love.

Annually tens of thousands of men and women of all ages throughout Japan make pilgrimages to distant shrines, enduring all sorts of hardships from exposure, insufficient food and long marches, in order to prostrate themselves before some idol-god, in the vain effort to satisfy the yearnings of their immortal souls. "How foolish!" you say, and so it appears to us; but, remember, they know no better way, for they "sit in darkness and in the shadow of death." These people have the same soul-hunger that we had before Christ satisfied it, but with this difference: they have no Christ to whom to go. They know none but Buddha, and he is "a broken cistern that holds no water." A man dying from starvation will eat anything that will satisfy his hunger. The prodigal in the parable "would fain have filled himself with the husks that the swine did eat, and no man gave unto him." And it is so now. Millions of immortals in these lands, who are dying of spiritual starvation, are seeking to fill themselves on the husks of idolatry, because no man gives unto them the Bread of Life. With them it is idolatry or nothing, for they have nothing else.

Among the reasons given for the condemnation of some at the last day is this, from the lips of our Lord: "I was an-hungred, and ye gave me no meat; I was a-thirst, and ye gave me no drink." Such a warning should come with impressive force to those who have the Bread of Life and refuse to send it to the dying millions in these lands.

The story referred to was related by Miss Spencer, of the M. E. Mission, who is the principal of a girls' school in Tokyo. It is as follows:

"A revival was in progress in the school at the time. Two young girls, full of zeal, were returning to the school from some labor of love in the city. They met a little pilgrim woman, who inquired of them the way to a certain shrine. She had on her bosom a linen bag, on which had been inscribed by a Buddhist priest sentences something like the following: 'You must travel through four provinces, visit eighty-eight shrines, travel all the way on foot, live on the bounty of the people by the way, and when you return, you may have the hope of catching a glimpse of your child during the eternities to come.' The young girls were reading these characters when she exclaimed, pious little woman that she was, 'Is it not a happy thing to have a religion that gives such a hope as to see our dear children?' The young girls replied: 'We have a better religion than that. Our religion teaches that if we love and serve the Lord Jesus Christ, when we die we shall go straight to him and to our dear Christian friends that have died, and be forever with them.' Her motherly yearnings caught at the story. 'Tell me more of it,' cried she. They took her to the school, got down with her upon the mats, told her the gospel story, and taught her to pray, and to pray with faith for the pardon of sins and a new heart. The Lord opened her heart to hear and understand the words. She prayed with faith, following them in their intercessions. It was not long before she cried out, 'It has come, it has come, the bag from her bosom, and tore the rosary from her neck, breaking the string and scattering the beads around the room. One of the girls ran up to Miss Spencer's room, exclaiming, 'She's converted; she's converted.' Miss Spencer thought it was one of her own girls that was born into the kingdom; but, on going down, found this little pilgrim woman, who a couple of hours before was a heathen, now a happy and exulting Christian."

How wonderful is the satisfaction which Christianity gives to the motherly instinct when it has been robbed by death of its little children! No other religion can do anything that will compare with this in similar cases.

W. E. TOWSON.

Kobe, Japan, Feb. 15, 1892.

Worshipping by the Watch.

This is folly. Who has a right to lay down a standard as to the length of time any given service shall be held? Some say that thirty minutes is as long as a preacher should preach. Where did that come from? and who has the right to fix a standard? God has mercifully given to man six days out of seven in which to labor; and how compromising and sacrificing to the whims of the world to limit any service on God's holy day! Imagine our Savior preaching to his disciples with his watch on the table or pulpit, or his apostles with a time-piece open before them, while discoursing on subjects pertaining to the souls of men. Such a thing appears ridiculous, but not more so than at the present day, and yet this is what men are doing under the pressure of a worldly sentiment. The Savior, it is true, would have us do everything decently and in order, but a too great haste and restlessness in worshipping God he does not approve. Other interests are dear to us, but none so important as those belonging to our souls, that we need be in a hurry to run through with a service in a perfunctory way, in order to get at something else.

I was once asked by the pastor of a fashionable city congregation to conduct his prayer meeting, saying that I must not hold more than forty minutes, as his people would not stand it if held longer. We conducted the meeting by the clock on the wall, and had an unenjoyable service. Some time after this, this pastor asked me again to hold the prayer meeting. I refused on the ground that I did not like to worship God in clamps. He insisted, and I agreed on the ground that he would let me run the meeting until I saw proper to close. He so agreed, and the meeting closed in less time than usual with more satisfactory results. The reason I felt then was that we worshiped according to dictates of interest and the Holy Spirit, and not the watch. We are not in favor of long, tiresome services, and, ordinarily, it is not prudent to hold long; but there seems to be a growing evil in the disposition to hurry up and shorten everything in the church. Preachers should begin at the appointed time, and exercise discretion in closing; but they need not educate wrong by exhibiting of the watch. Our prayer meetings and other services should not be burdensome, but spiritual and lively, and closed at the time dictated by the prevailing interest and sound judgment, and not by the time fore-announced, regardless of interest. We do not write in favor of long services, but we do believe the disposition to rush through is destructive to seriousness and proper concentration of mind. Many are becoming too restless, and are too much disposed to complain at long services without any real cause. The church and immortal souls are important, and should receive due attention.

HEALEY.

Church Finance vs. Societies.

A PLEA FOR THE DEFENDANTS.

In his article on church finance Prof. R. S. Ricketts comments unfavorably on societies. The Professor's point of view is that of a look-oner; mine is that of an interested worker. It would be easy to say much in defense of our societies; but, for the present, let this suffice.

First, as to the motive governing those who keep up this work. We have regarded these organizations as open doors set before us by the church, and have passed through and entered upon the path, believing that in so doing we were supporting institutions of the church. Our inspiration has been, not the glory of a particular society, but this, "The love of Christ constraineth me."

Second, as to whether working in societies causes neglect of family or church duties. Let the facts answer. The membership of our societies constitutes only a small proportion of the membership of the church. Compare the women who support the societies with those who neglect them, and let the facts show whether the society women are found wanting. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Third, as to the management of the Woman's Board of Missions, which seems to be arraigned, it has been, in the main, wise and successful. If mistakes have been made, even that is not without precedent in the history of Methodist institutions. Women fear debt much more than men do, and the members of the Board have known from the beginning that the one unpardonable sin, in the eyes of their constituency of women, would be for them to go in debt. Hence they have aimed at keeping ahead of expenses without intending to create a permanent sinking fund. The surplus is being expended in the regular and only legitimate way.

Fourth, as to the extinction of societies. Success is an effect. If the societies are injuring the church by their success, as intimated, it becomes important to inquire into the cause of that success. Unless the same cause can be put in operation in the so-called regular work, it is not likely that the church will benefit by the extinction of any existing society.

MRS. ROBERT SOMERVILLE.

The Symmetry of Life.

This is the title of a deeply suggestive discourse by Bishop Phillips Brooks to young men, recently published by E. P. Dutton. He urges them to pursue with singleness of purpose and absolute devotion some noble object which shall thus afford the measure of the length of life, not in years, but in development. If a youth discover in himself an aptitude for the law, then let him adjust his friendships, his reading, his recreations, his culture, his struggles to the attainment of a mastery of legal power.

But life has breadth as well as length. This young man ought, therefore, to remember that he sustains relations to others. Whilst seeking to do the best he can for himself in the line of growth, self-development, and ability to use his faculties with ample success, yet he is never to forget the ties of privilege and responsibility that bind him to his fellow-men. To be a member of society, to sympathize with a neighbor or friend—nay, with those not neighbors or friends—is to redeem life from narrowness and selfishness. The rich is to take the hand of the poor in human fellowship, the believer is to help the doubter, the hopeful to cheer the despondent, the liberal is to exercise charity toward the bigoted, the saint is to lift up and bless the sinner. "The holiest soul, pitying the brother soul which has fallen into vilest vice, gains, while it keeps its own purity unsoiled, something of the light of that other side of God, the side where justice and forgiveness blend in the opal mystery of grace, which it would seem as if only the soul that looked up out of the depths of guilt could see."

This is true and well said. No man can be a complete, all-rounded character who simply thinks and acts in the direction of his own individual success—no matter what the nature of the success be. A wholesome altruism is to be set against his egotism. His human brother is to summon him beyond self and its narrow sphere out into the realm of cosmopolitan views, feelings, and ends. Guizot says that it is the mark of a noble mind to desire to share in the duties and burdens of society. And Jesus says that the disciple is to love his brother and his neighbor as himself.

Nor are length and breadth of life all. It should also have height. Self-developing egotism and catholico-minded altruism (though the Bishop does not use these terms) must be crowned with upward yearnings after God and heavenly truth. The height of life reaches upward towards something distinctly greater than humanity. A soul without thoughts of God would be a world without a sky! Nor must this activity in regard to God be an exceptional and solitary part of life. It must rather pervade all an atmosphere everything each one of us does, says, thinks. The great drawback has been treated as if it were a special and exceptional exigency, and not as if it were the possible loftiness of everything that a man could think or do. We should realize that our very ambition is not the arbitrary chain of our own will, but a wise assignment of God's love; that our relations to our brethren are not the result alone of our own impulsive affections, but the seeking of our soul for these souls, because they belong to the great Father-soul. But here is a passage in his own words:

"Think for a moment of the life of the great, the manly, the many-sided Paul. I press toward the mark of the prize of my high calling," he writes to the Philippians. "That is the length of life for him. 'I will gladly spend and be spent for you,' he writes to the Corinthians. 'There is the breadth of life for him. 'God hath raised us up and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus,' he writes to the Ephesians. 'There is the height of life for him. You can add nothing to these three dimensions when you try to account to yourself for the impression of completeness which comes to you out of this simple, lofty story.'"

Here undoubtedly is the solution of the problem of duty and the revelation of the secret of happiness. To make life symmetrical by rightly adjusting all our relations to self, to others, and to God, is the sum of noble living.—Christian at Work.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. A. D. MoVoy, Jr., Natchitoches, La., March 15: "Our Methodist annuals have been placed in every available spot in the yard, and are already exhibiting their attractive beauties. Applications 'to rent' or 'exchange' will not be considered. Many of the brethren write exultingly of a reception, 'a pounding.' Our reception has extended through the first quarter, and the end not yet indicated. Our pounding is daily, and increases as our capacity develops. Harmony prevails in our societies. We are expecting glorious revivals."

Rev. W. T. Griffin, Terry, Miss., March 17: "Bro. J. L. Tynes, one of our stewards, died here Monday night. He suffered intensely, but died triumphant. His last words were, 'Jesus is still precious.' He has been a faithful member for thirty-six years. Every store closed, and all turned out to pay a last tribute to a good man. Two other members very sick. Our people show their appreciation of their pastor, which encourages us. Our work is moving upward, and we hope to do much good this year. We have prospects up to to-day for a fine fruit crop."

Rev. H. C. Morehead, P. E., Sardis district, March 12: "I send you second round of quarterly meetings of Sardis district, which you will please publish in next issue of CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Will you allow me to add that the preachers, a noble band, are at the post of duty, and are beginning the work of the year with a spirit and determination which promises much for the Lord's kingdom? In the main, liberal estimates have been made by the officials for the support of the preachers. Already the tide is rising; prayer meetings, Sunday-schools, family altars on the increase. Conversions and additions are reported. The Lord be magnified."

Rev. R. M. Blocker, Rayne, La., March 14: "I have had a favorable beginning this year. Congregations fair, and at most points increasing. Good service at this place last night. At Roberts' Cove, yesterday afternoon, we had three applicants for church membership. It is my ardent desire to confine myself to the limits of my own circuit this year. For the whole of my ministry I have devoted too much time to revival services abroad for the good of my own charge. If the brethren will not insist on my services this year, I shall take it as a favor. Yes, Doctor, Rayne is a good place for a Methodist preacher. Eggs and chickens abound throughout the circuit."

Rev. T. S. West, Weason, Miss.: "I have not yet secured me any of those large-sized postal cards; so I will just say here that the outlook for Weason is favorable, or so it appears to the preacher. Our audiences are large and attentive, and prayer meeting increasing in the number attending. Probably 200 were in attendance last night. My habit is to call on some family every evening at seven o'clock, when there is no service in our church, except Saturday evening. Commonly, two or three families near by send in representatives; so we often have from ten to twenty present, and then we have a free class meeting, or a passage of Scripture read and exhorted on, or a free talk on."

Rev. S. H. Whitley, Keachie, La., March 10: "Caddo circuit—Feb. 7, at Keachie, 180 in attendance, morning and night. Sabbath-school good; 80 present. Prayer meeting well attended. . . . February 13, eleven A. M., Bell Bower, 105 at preaching; Sunday-school, 40. Four P. M., Longstreet, 95 at preaching; no Sabbath-school. . . . February 20, Logansport; W. W. Drake preached; 109 present, 3 applications for membership; Epworth League organized with 19 members; weekly prayer meeting, 63 to 80 present. . . . February 27, Greenwood, 80 at the morning Sabbath-school and preaching. Monday night, preaching by Bro. John Adams, presiding elder of Marshall district, East Texas Conference; good attendance."

Rev. J. A. B. Jones, Bolton, Miss., March 17: "We have been domiciled in the parsonage here since Jan. 8. Entered upon my work Dec. 18, 1891, fourth day after Conference adjourned. The elect women have given their unwearied attention to secure our comfort; have very much improved the parsonage within, without and around, and have plans to be executed in the next few weeks which will make this parsonage a most desirable home for an itinerant. We had 'Arbor Day,' and planted a tree in each space where a tree was needed for shade or ornament. Choccol shrubs, vines, bulbs and annuals have been placed in every available spot in the yard, and are already exhibiting their attractive beauties. Applications 'to rent' or 'exchange' will not be considered. Many of the brethren write exultingly of a reception, 'a pounding.' Our reception has extended through the first quarter, and the end not yet indicated. Our pounding is daily, and increases as our capacity develops. Harmony prevails in our societies. We are expecting glorious revivals."

Rev. G. A. Gnice, Rocky Springs, March 14: "We have just closed our first quarterly meeting for this year. Had our new presiding elder, Bro. D. A. Little, with us. He preached two splendid sermons, and we are delighted with him. He tells us we had one of the best financial reports of the district, and I will say, in addition to this, Bro. Little requested that a collection be taken up for the purpose of furnishing the district parsonage, stating that $12 was the amount assessed to this work, and in a few minutes the sum of $13.65 was raised. So you can judge from this how we are, spiritually. We anticipate a very pleasant and profitable year here. We have at Rocky Springs a little girls' weekly prayer meeting, composed of girls from the age of fourteen years downward, and it is learning them to work for the Master's cause. A short time ago our cooking stove gave out, and three of these girls—whose names are Minnie Lum, Katie Harvey and Bea Jett—took the matter in hand, and in two days they had raised about $15, which, added to what we already had in the Parsonage Aid Society at Hernando, put the parsonage in possession of a nice new stove at once; and thus they learn to work for the Master. May God's richest blessings rest on each of them! Is the prayer of their pastor and his wife."

Rev. J. C. Ellis, Hillsboro, Miss., March 9: "Our first Quarterly Conference convened March 7. Presiding Elder McDonald was on time. The Conference session was a pleasant one, each church being represented, which our local elder, Rev. M. H. Lack, informs us there hasn't been such a representation in about five years. As to the members, but few are doing their duty toward the support of the gospel, or attending upon the ordinances of God, or supporting his institutions. Many of them seem to think that the machinery of God's work should run without their assistance. Many persons who belong to the church are doing nothing perceptible. However, we can truly thank God for a few members who are ready to open their hearts and purses. We, wife, May Neal, and myself, moved into our new parsonage the second day of March. We found Bro. Lack, who was doing the carpenter's work, ready to welcome us to a warm fire. Since then he has completed his contract. We owe Bro. Lack a debt yet on the parsonage; but we hope soon to be able to have every dollar paid. Brethren, I have fully surveyed the field, and I must say that there is too much for me to do, and do it right; but, by the grace of God, I will do all in my power. Pray for us."

Rev. B. F. Phillips, Boonville and Baldwin, Corinth district, North Mississippi Conference: "I have wanted to write to the ADVOCATE ever since I reached my new field, but have always thought that a preacher who never did anything for his paper should take up little, if any, space in that paper. I have at last secured a new subscriber, sent the name to the office, and so will write a few lines. To begin, the 'preacher in charge' reached Boonville (I thought I would see how many times I could put in 'preacher in charge' in this communication, but I won't) about ten days after Conference adjourned. The presiding elder and some of the brethren met wife and I at the train. Young Bro. Falls showed us the way to the parsonage. There we found two other young men and three young ladies, who had kindled fires and had prepared a nice lunch for us. This was Friday. Sunday I commenced my year's work, and, by the blessings of God, I have been able to meet every appointment to date. I have received into the church twenty-nine; baptized nine infants. Have all the collections ordered by the Annual Conference in hand in cash and subscription. I have sent to the treasurer of Pinnock Board my full assessment for Bishop's fund, and to Bro. T. B. Holt my full assessment for foreign missions. I have started at the first of the year to do a year's work. I am pleased with my new appointment, as I have ever been with every work I have ever been assigned to after I commenced my work. Boonville has 800 or 1,000 inhabitants; Baldwin, 600 or 700. We have no legalized whisky shops in either place. The Methodist Church at Boonville is the strongest, numerically, in the place. At Baldwin we stand second. Our 'beloved presiding elder' is not only 'proficient,' efficient and sufficient, but covers all the ground (not with his feet) in church work."

Rev. J. A. Miller, P. E., Opelousas district, Louisiana Conference, March 18: "Our district is in a good, healthy condition, and is steadily growing. I have nearly closed my first round of quarterly meetings. We had a good spiritual time; at some places quite a revival season and an ingathering of souls. Two of my appointments were left to be supplied at Conference—Huron mission and Sabine mission. These I have been able to supply with local preachers—Thos. F. Webb on Huron mission; and C. E. Haynes on Sabine mission. We have also established another mission, with good prospects of a fine field for development. It is just above Lake Charles, around the saw-mills. An eligible lot has been secured and paid for. The lumber for a good, commodious church is on the ground, and the work of erecting the house has commenced. With money enough in hand to pay for lumber and the building, it will soon be ready to preach in. The preacher has already put up a neat, comfortable study on the church lot, sufficiently commodious for a study and sleeping apartment. At West Lake, on the Sulphur Mine work, we have a good lot donated, and the ladies of the place have in hand about $100 towards building a church there, which they hope to complete this year. We are having another spell of Winter weather. It is feared we will have but little fruit here next Summer and Fall, though we are praying for and expecting a harvest of souls. Doctor, the ADVOCATE has lost nothing in this section, because of its 'anti-lottery' principles. It is always safe to defend truth, right and justice, and to condemn error, fraud, bribery and corruption."

Rev. J. P. Drake, Shubuta, Miss., March 14: "Something new and very interesting has happened among us. The enterprising and industrious secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, Miss Sallie Smylie, has fairly launched another vessel of mercy for sending the glad tidings—an annual district meeting, or Conference—a heretofore 'missing link,' as one of the visiting brethren called it. Saturday and Sunday were the days appointed; but by Friday night (March 11) a number were present, and the good work began with a stirring sermon from Bro. J. V. Penn. Our railroad, the M. & O., extended courteous favors. A number of delegates and visitors—about thirty—honored us with their presence; the Lord graciously favored us with pleasant weather; the whole community attended. Thus were our godly women greatly encouraged. The reports and plans of work set forth during the two business sessions—Saturday morning and evening—were encouraging and helpful. Saturday night we had an address of welcome, response, president's address, and reclamation by the gifted teacher of eloquence in East Mississippi Female College. Sunday was fully occupied—morning, afternoon and night—by sermons and addresses by Rev. A. F. Watkins and the pastor, interspersed with much that was pleasing in music, recitations and essays read by the ladies. The children had their share of attention. At the Sunday morning service one gifted girl consecrated her life to missionary work. Two earnest little boys did the same. Several parents dedicated their children to this arduous, but glorious work. On the whole, we think the meeting a great success as a seed-sower and delightful interchange of views. May it stir and encourage all our sisters to efforts in a like direction!"

THE MISSION OF SONG.

Song should breathe of peace and flowers;
Song should bring back scenes and hours
That we loved—ah! long ago.

Song from baser thoughts should win us,
Song should charm us out of woe;
Song should stir the heart within us
Like a patriot's friendly blow.

Pains and pleasures, all man doeth,
War and peace, and right and wrong,
All things that the soul subdueth
Should be vanquished, too, by Song.

Song should spur the mind to duty,
Nerve the weak and stir the strong;
Every deed of truth and beauty
Should be crowned by stately Song.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—March 27, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LAIRDALE.

Isaiah xl, 1-10.

TIME.—B. C. 712.
PLACE.—Jerusalem.

The Blessings of the Gospel.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together."
—Ver. 5.

Isaiah was still living when the ten tribes were carried into captivity. Assyria, then, at the height of her power, was the great foe of his country during his life; Chaldees was just beginning to show signs of her coming glory. Nearly one hundred and fifty years before the event he foretold the downfall of Jerusalem, and named Babylon as the destroyer. Looking farther still into the future, to the time of Cyrus the Mede, and mentioning him by name, he foretold how, as the instrument of God, he should deliver Judah from the hands of the Chaldeans and cause the walls of Jerusalem to be rebuilt.

Taking this restoration as the type of greater things to come, Isaiah peers into the period of Christ's coming and reign, the establishment of a holy and abiding kingdom. He seems so full of gladness at the coming good as to forget that it is yet in the future, and rejoices in it as a present experience. His speech is full of Christian thought, so that he has been well described as the "gospel prophet."

Would God ever again visit his people in power for their deliverance? Had he, who had so often, during their long history since their coming forth from Egypt, shown himself to be long-suffering and full of mercy? Had he forgotten to be gracious? Would Judah's penitence be recognized, her sins pardoned? These were questions that would naturally arise in the minds of the captive Jews; and to these, after faithfully foretelling the disasters that should come, Isaiah gives answer in the chapter from which we take our lesson.

Ver. 1. "My people... your God." Here is the ground of comfort. "My people." They had rebelled; they had been inexcusably foolish; they had been fearfully and persistently sinful; yet all along God loved them, and punished them because he loved them. He was still their God.

Who shall "comfort" them? All, everyone who hears the glad tidings that help is at hand; just as in Revelation xxii, "Let him that heareth say, Come."

Ver. 2. It is love that speaks now. Love that has waited for penitence, so that it could speak. And love speaks "to the heart"—the literal meaning of the expression translated "comfortably." Since Judah repents, let the past go. God does not fire syllogism nor reproach against the penitent. He "reasons together with him" to produce penitence; after that it is just the heart-touch, the embrace, the ring, the kiss, the fatted calf. "Warfare is accomplished, iniquity is pardoned;" punishment has been followed by repentance. Love can have its way now.

Ver. 3, 4. With reference to the Jews in Babylon, this is the call to preparation necessary for their return to Jerusalem. In the broader sense, John the Baptist applies it to himself in his ministry of repentance. Every gospel preacher is in the line of heralds, if he be true to his calling. So is every person who makes way for God to get to a sinner's heart, whether here, or in Mexico, or China.

Sometimes organized crime, such as the liquor traffic, stands as a mountain that "must be made low." Whatever is in the way, whatever obstructs the coming kingdom, must go. Against such God's heralds must cry.

Ver. 5. The glory of the Lord is revealed in all his acts—to each eye as much as it has capacity to see. Some "seeing, see not." The return of Judah from Babylon all could see. The greater glory, "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father," which John and his fellow-apostles saw—God in Christ Jesus—this, too, "all flesh shall see." "In all nations" the gospel shall be preached. God's own promise is the pledge. (Read Philippians ii, 9-12.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8. "All flesh is grass." So Egypt was at the Red Sea, when God would lead his people out—mere wisps of straw before the flood. So Egypt was, as Judah's hope, in the days of King Zedekiah. So always; short-lived, nipped by frost, scorched by heat, inconsequential at best. "All power" belongs to God only; his Word endures. (Turn to I. Peter i, 23-25, and see how the apostle uses this passage; how he glories in the enduring, indestructible basis of the Christian's hope.) All earthly things—riches, honors, power, knowledge—things on which men love to lean, and on which they count for happiness—all are of the flesh, all perish. Only God can "redeem Israel from all her troubles."

Ver. 9. The good tidings are to be carried everywhere. Zion, Jerusalem, must lift up the voice; must tell all around the gospel of salvation. To proclaim, on God's authority, is the chief duty of the church. "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel." "Ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." So said Jesus to his disciples. On God's authority; therefore, "not afraid." The Lord hath spoken.

Ver. 10. "Will come as a mighty one" is a more exact rendering, and, in its far reaching significance, refers to Christ. In chapter ix Isaiah calls him "the mighty God." Jesus said, "All power is given unto me, in heaven and in earth." He is "mighty to save," "able to save to the uttermost." His strong arm will do the work; and in his strength and goodness he is just, giving "to every man according as his work shall be." (Rev. xxii, 12.)

Note.—We are to comfort people by telling them, not that God is indifferent toward sin, but that he will forgive the penitent sinner.

God seeks admission into every heart. True repentance is preparation for his coming. So with communities and with nations.

To "have no confidence in the flesh" is a mark of spiritual regeneration. To lean on man is to trust in weakness.

Our highest duty as Christians is to spread the gospel.

The might of the Lord is the strength of the church—not social, nor political, nor financial power.

Institution for the Blind.

By REV. CHAS. F. EVANS, D. D.

Through the courtesy of Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, LL.D., I was permitted to inspect the buildings and grounds of the Institute for the Blind, located at the State's capital, and supported by the State's bounty. The principal building is a handsome three-story brick, constructed in the most elegant style of modern architecture, with slated roof, and trimmed in imitation of sandstone. The rooms are adapted to uses of study, recreation and sleeping, with ample provision for offices, library and parlors, and organized and furnished on a scale worthy of the object contemplated and of the philanthropists who projected the enterprise. The walks are shillingered, and the spacious grounds are ornamented with beautiful shrubbery and trellised vines. It is one of the most imposing buildings in the State, and finely illustrates both the benevolence of our citizens and the scientific discernment of the Board who had the construction of this plant.

Most of our people have erroneously supposed that this institution was an asylum where provision was made for indigent unfortunates of this class, who were assembled for purpose of economic supervision and support. Twenty-five years ago this was about all that any government contemplated for this class, and, with rare exceptions, all that any hopeful parent dreamed possible. With large views dwelling upon our civilization for all other unfortunates, the sphere of the blind has also been enlarged, and the possibilities of education along all lines, both professional and industrial, have been demonstrated to the satisfaction of all enquirers; consequently, the purpose of the Institute for the Blind is educational. It is really a university, with the Nestor of Louisiana education, Dr. W. H. N. Magruder, as chancellor. Of course, with the limited number of pupils—only about twenty-eight—much of the instruction given is necessarily of primary grade, though, at least, one of the inmates is conversant with integral calculus.

To Mrs. Mary S. Lane, the principal of the Institute, I am indebted for personal knowledge of the work done in some of her classes. It was quite a feat to follow one of these through a recitation in arithmetic; and, though I have some skill along that line, one of her fourteen-year-old boys absolutely made me dizzy with the rapidity of his demonstration of a problem in fractions. I listened to some very superior papers which rehearsed recollections of classic biography, read to the pupils by their teacher, and was surprised at one little girl who read with faultless elocution. The specimens of penmanship examined will compare favorably with pupils of the same grade in any school.

The professor of music and his wife, an expert teacher in calligraphy, have had notable success in their work. The smaller boys and girls were seen at their play, and were as cheerful as I have ever seen blind children at their homes. Though no minister of the gospel ever preaches in the Institute, some attention is given to Bible study on the Sabbath, and a recitation from the International Lesson Paper would equal the average of our best Sunday-school Bible classes.

In a large library, I was delighted to find a judicious selection from the best English and American literature, and to learn that these poorly volumes in raised letters were eagerly devoured by the children.

The worthiness of the faculty to have in charge these dependent youths was fully proven by the evident tender confidence which the children unconsciously displayed in my presence. How could it be otherwise, since every member of the faculty is a member of some branch of the Christian Church?

It is said that in our zone one out of every thousand of the population is blind, and, consequently, there ought to be in Louisiana not less than 1,000 blind people, of whom 600 are children and youths of school age. Where are the other 572 blind children of Louisiana? Can it be that their parents spurn what they suppose to be a liability, or that they despair of getting any substantial benefit for their children, or that they fear unsympathetic treatment from the teachers, or are they binding their children to a life of perpetual helplessness from sheer ignorance of the possibilities of self-support, self-amusement, and development afforded by the State?

If only the matter of self-support can move them, let me say that in music, mattress and broom-making and chair-sewing, instruction is given here. There is no reason why any blind boy or girl should not be a competent teacher if they have even ordinary mental vigor to start with. In Cambridge University, Sanderson, in the chair of mathematics, and Faucett, in the chair of political economy, were both blind. Authorship, among its most distinguished names, points to Ossian, Homer and Milton among poets, Huber among naturalists, Euler and Gough among mathematicians, Prescott and Abbott among historians, and Holman among writers of travel, upon whose visual orb no light ever fell. Dr. Moyes, of Kirkcaldy, acquired great reputation as a lecturer on ornithology, Milburn as a preacher, and Wm. Metcalf as a builder of roads and bridges, while Patrik Lane, the original founder of the Louisiana Institute for the Blind, though totally blind, like the others named, made a reputation as an author, an educator, a philanthropist, a scholar of profound learning, a minister of pure character, classic culture and fervid eloquence.

There are many industries for which the blind are peculiarly fitted, by the delicacy of their touch, the acuteness of their hearing, and the tenacity and breadth of their memory. It is one of the worst forms of homicide, and a charge no parent of the blind can escape, when, from any reason but the imbecility of their child, he or she, by refusing the generous aid of the State, perpetuates the helplessness of his blind offspring.

The State is, at this moment, through Prof. Magruder, the president of this Institute, actually begging of parents and guardians of the blind the privilege of conferring upon them resources of happiness and means of independence, self-respect and self-support. It even offers to send to their homes, and, with free guardianship and passage money, conduct their helpless children to a beautiful, comfortable, sympathetic home, and a well-appointed and successful school.

"The Six Days of Creation."

Under this caption, there recently appeared in the ADVOCATE an article addressed to Bro. A. D. Miller, in which it is contended that the earth was created in six literal days of twenty-four hours in length, and an attempt is made to reconcile the teachings of geology with this view. I am a firm believer in the plenary inspiration and complete infallibility of the Bible, and fully agree with the author in the statement that between it and Nature there can be no real conflict; that since the two emanated from the same source they must of necessity harmonize when rightly understood. They both speak to us as the voice of God, and when they testify upon the same subject their testimony must be the same. But between human interpretations of the Bible and the so-called sciences (most of which are nothing more than interpretations of Nature made by men) wide and irreconcilable differences have often arisen, and must continue to arise as long as the human mind retains its proneness to err and does not cease to thirst for and make new explorations in quest of knowledge.

It must be conceded that the revelation which God has given us in his written Word is clearer and fuller, and, in consequence, much more likely to be rightly interpreted than that which he has given us in the volume of Nature, and when points in conflict are presented which can not be brought into accord by careful investigation, it is undoubtedly the duty of the Christian to stand bravely by the Scriptures, however plausible the contrary theory may appear. But, while this is true, it is, in my judgment, neither wise nor right to turn—without first making a close examination—our backs upon the accepted and reasonable postulates of science, and blindly and persistently cling to our own preconceived ideas of what passages in the Bible mean. Such a course as this is unworthy of an honest seeker after the truth, and is liable to greatly injure the cause of Christianity by arraying it on the side of error and making it serve as an impediment to the mental development of mankind. It has already been sufficiently followed to give to skeptical writers the opportunity of boasting that the discoveries of science have overturned many of the accredited teachings of the Holy Writ, while in reality they have disproved nothing but the unwarranted inferences of some individual or sect. The principles and theories of natural philosophy are in the generality of cases arrived at by the most painstaking study and extended research on the part of great and gifted minds, and have too often thrown light upon the inspired pages of the Sacred Canon to be thus rashly and thoughtlessly cast aside. On the contrary, we ought, out of respect to these men of learning, and in justice to the cause which we love, to exercise much forbearance, and be sure that what they teach is in actual conflict with the Bible, and not with our pre-existing conceptions of it, before we begin to cast aspersions. Such, in the opinion of the writer, is the spirit that the child of God should ever manifest when confronted by these apparent discrepancies between Nature and the Scriptures.

In regard to the creation, it may be remarked that there is no difference between the teachings of the Bible and of science as to the order of its successive stages. They unite in declaring that the substance of the earth and the elements first came into existence; that vegetable life had the precedence over animal life; that the lower classes of animals were created before the higher, and that last of all man made his appearance upon the stage of action. But we are told that this perfect harmony, which is so beautiful and pleasing, entirely disappears, and that the two divine revelations which but a moment ago were at peace and in mutual agreement assume toward each other a hostile and antagonistic attitude when interpreted as to the length of these successive stages of creation.

Natural historians have gone to cliffs and oases and bogs and mines and other excavations, and interrogated the various strata of the soil and the relics of extinct life as to the age of the earth, and confidently assert that tens and, not improbably, hundreds of thousands of years have elapsed since its formation began. On the other hand, biblical students have opened the Book of Genesis, and equally as emphatically affirm that it teaches that our planet and all things found upon it were created in six brief days, each of twenty-four hours duration, and that the world even now is less than six thousand years old. These two views are widely different, plainly antagonistic, and both can not be true. They can not be reconciled. The effort of "G. T. V." to bring them into a state of concordance by conceding that the body of the earth is much older than its inhabitants is absurd in the extreme. That such is the case is probably true, but it has no bearing whatever upon the question at issue. Geologists do not merely contend for the antiquity of the substance or soil of the earth, but also claim that they have found fossils so far beneath its surface that they must have been deposited there for multiplied myriads of years. They hold that plants and animals, as well as the spherical body of our planet, have been in existence for an almost indefinite period of time, and the concession of Bro. "G. T. V." is wholly inadequate to effect a reconciliation between the opposing theories. But even if it were amply sufficient for the accomplishment of his purpose, would place him in a most deplorable condition; for to admit the extreme age claimed for the earth's body, and deny the antiquity of vegetable and animal life, is equivalent to saying with one breath that the word "day," in Gen. i, means a vast era, and with the next that it only means twenty-four hours.

If these two views, respecting the days of creation, can not be harmonized—and that this is impossible is evident to everyone who will carefully note the radical points of difference between them—one of two things must be true: either the scientists have misinterpreted Nature, or some of us have misinterpreted the Bible. Now, which is it? Of course, I do not propose to undertake a thorough discussion of this question. To do this would far exceed the intended scope of this article. Suffice it to say, on behalf of the geologists, that the arguments advanced in support of their theory are numerous, cogent, and, to many honest minds, conclusive. They can not be overthrown by laughter or by sneers, nor can they be met by simple denials unsupported by proof, such as are made by Dr. Anson West in his work on "Sin and Salvation." The fact that a large number of men possessed of a high order of intellect, and some of whom, at least, were free from every taint of skepticism, have laboriously studied the phenomena of Nature in sections widely separate, and without conference reached the same conclusion, awakens a strong presumption in favor of the scientific theory, and almost precludes the possibility of a doubt as to its truth.

But how about the other theory? Are we sure that the Bible teaches that the world was created in six literal days? I maintain that it does not. Our day of twenty-four hours is the natural result of two concurring causes: the revolution of the earth upon its axis, and the emission of light by the sun. In the Mosiac account of creation the word "day" occurs before the latter of these two causes was in existence. We read in Gen. i, 3 and 5: "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." "And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night: and the evening and the morning were the first day." Our sun had not yet made his appearance, nor did he appear until on the fourth day. Manifestly, then, the first three days of creation were produced by different agencies, and were not the same as the days of the present time; and no one has a right to insist that because the two are designated by a common term that they must agree as to length. Of course, it is possible that these days which passed away before the formation of the sun lasted only twenty-four hours; but I can hardly conceive how a rational man can cling to a mere possibility when there is an opposing theory equally as consistent with the Scriptures and well backed up by logic.

Whether the creative days which transpired after the formation of the sun were of the same duration as those which preceded its formation, is a question upon which the Bible sheds no light. Geology, though it has no means of ascertaining the exact length of these successive periods, earnestly contends and adduces strong evidence to prove that, all of them—both those which preceded and those which followed the creation of the sun—were vast eras of immense duration. This view I accept, since it commends itself to my reason, and the Sacred Oracle is silent.

But it may be asked if my position does not destroy the sanctity of the Sabbath and annul the obligations to remember and keep it holy. Most certainly it does not. Neither the design nor the laws of the Sabbath require that it shall agree, in point of duration with the day upon which the Lord rested from his work. The purpose for which it was made sacred and set apart was that it might typify and commemorate that great day, and surely it is not necessary that it should be of the same length to do this. The obligations to observe and respect it have their foundation in the express commandments of God, and are equally binding whether its great antitype was, or was not, of the same duration. So this view which I, with many other Christians, hold with respect to the creative periods, leaves the Sabbath as it has ever been,

"Day of all the week the best,
Emblem of eternal rest."

The Reflex Action of Good and Evil.

The idea of offensive war is an idea existing only in the mind of the infuriated man. War against self is the ultimate terminus of war against an enemy. Revenge is a suicidal dagger. Treachery prepares the poison, but by an unexpected shifting of globets dies from a quaff of the fatal liquid. The boy that runs after the switch, exulting in the hope that his school-mate may be punished, is often the first to receive chastisement. Laughing at a mistake, or deformity, places the world free license to point the finger of scorn and make all manner of fun. Man can not avenge; for it is written, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." Therefore, the only just and sweet and complete revenge is that which annihilates an enemy by returning good for evil, which is heaping "coals of fire on his head."

It pays to treat things well. The good horse that receives no attention from its master soon becomes incoordinated to do him service. The ault of clothes that is never cleansed soon becomes indecent. The well-cultivated grain of corn soon becomes a luxuriant stalk, the fruit of which helps to put a crust into the mouth of the farmer's family; whereas, the yellow, sickly blades of the uncultivated stalk look like so many bony fingers raised in accusation.

The seed, ground and labor in preparing the soil for cultivation are lost, and in cases of indifference the last crust has been knocked from the starving members of the sluggish family. Thus we see that fruitfulness is proportionate to cultivation; and this is a natural law that can be applied to man in his dealings with his fellow-men.

The world is generous to a kind deed, and will pay back with compound interest. But an insult, a loss of opportunity to exercise charity, a town where a smile should have been, may be remembered and paid back in its own coin. God is concerned in the affairs of men. Therefore, it pays to deal gently and fairly with every human creature. Good deeds, rebounding, magnify a thousandfold and terminate upon their author.

God accepts every smile we give to an appreciative man as a compliment to himself, and if we live with pure hearts, he will give us a thousand smiles. A copper tossed in charity to a needy beggar will be placed in God's great bank, where it will yield one thousand per cent. interest through the rolling ages of interminable eternity.

The reverse of this is true. Strike a man's body which soon crumbles back to dust, and the lick, in rebounding, wounds the soul. Scandal your neighbor, and you may injure his reputation, but your character is thereby injured. Cheat a man, and you rob him of what thieves may steal, but you rob yourself of the joy of your heaven, and heaven the joy of your soul. Murder a man, and the same dagger, poisoned with humanity's gore, is plunged into the soul, and, wounded, it goes forever, and a "wounded spirit, who can bear?"

So we conclude that truly "It is better to give than receive."

Domestic Mission Reports.

Mr. Editor: Bro. D. G. W. Ellis, in your last issue, asks a very proper question: "Why not publish in the Minutes the amount each laborer received?" I am the only living man that can give any light on that question. I consulted Bro. Drake on that subject. He is wiser and more familiar with such matters than I am. He said, Publish the names of the missionary and the amount paid each. So it was settled. But when I handed in my report that part of it was left out. Just now it happened this deponent sayeth not. When I received the Minutes, I thought to myself, Bro. Drake will be surprised when he sees this report. I notice another error in the report. It shows $3,017.05 collected for domestic missions, and $3,075.05 paid out. That is not the truth in the case. I am sure I did not pay out more than I received. I called no attention to this, for I have been just a little—well, I don't know exactly what word to use—at so many of us preachers calling attention to slight inaccuracies in the Minutes through the ADVOCATE.

Mr. Editor, please state in your valuable paper that my report in the last copy of the Minutes is not correct. We were assessed $11.75 for foreign missions and paid every cent of it, and the published Minutes shows that we only paid $11.50. I always feel like saying, "Request the brethren to cut out the above slip and paste it in the back of the Minutes."

The second question: "Why preachers that get a reasonable support from the people they serve are called missionaries." I see no objection to their being called missionaries, if anybody desires to call them so. But I do see a good reason why they should not receive assistance from the Board. There is more or less sharp discussion in the Board over the appropriation. This presiding elder represents this work in his district as of vast importance, and needs, at least, $250. Less than that would not do at all. The Board begins to raise him down. Would not $150 do? By no means. That presiding elder says, "We must give the place, at least, $100." The Board says: "Brother, is not that place self-sustaining?" "No, sir," and thus it goes. If each presiding elder should be allowed the amount appropriated to their district, that they honestly believe ought to be, our collection would not pay twenty-five cents on the dollar. What we conceive to be our abilities is far below their conception of the needs.

Bro. Ellis is right in wanting light on this subject. Where money is handled, you had better keep the light turned on. And if anybody thinks that publishing the appropriations would embarrass the collection, I ask, is it not better to let the truth be known anyway? Bro. E. says, "Some of us would be better satisfied, provided the explanation was reasonable." And if not satisfactory, we could show grounds of complaint. I would now furnish the information for last year, but I can't find that part of my report among my papers.

T. S. WEST.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. J. P. DRAKE.

An Appeal in Behalf of Our Home Work.

At some future time I hope to show that much missionary work is being done by every true preacher in the home field. At present I would strive to stir the hearts of all pastors within our borders to begin at once and prosecute vigorously the collection of funds for the supplemental support of those who have been sent to the outlying and hard places of our Conferences. Not one of these brethren will receive more than a meagre support if appropriations be paid in full. Should this fail, there will be actual and keen suffering by these fellow-servants. There is not one of them within my knowledge whose salary (in total) will aggregate more than $800—most of them far less. And this, too, while serving works without a paragonage. I am sure none of us would willingly have or greatly straiten our comrades in the field duty—even though they have the honorable position of missionaries. I've always thought that men who serve such outposts are worthy of double support. They have not the comforts that well-organized and established stations afford. But, on the contrary, they are usually more sorely pressed for bare support than any other class. If we are going to do anything for the "heathen at home," let us have done with a parsimonious policy, and give adequate support to our workers. They are worthy.

In order to this end we must use greater diligence than heretofore. In illustration I give figures from our Mississippi Conference: Last year the total amount raised and disbursed for this work among us was $3,075.05. Our Board, after cutting down and lopping off many places that really need help, felt compelled to appropriate as much as $3,400 for this year. That, too, with no increase in the assessments. Beginning the year under the reign of "hard times," and with this additional $325 to be raised, it is easy to see that great diligence and althfulness is needful. The appeal is made specially to the stations and circuits which usually pay in full. If these would determine to go 25 percent beyond the assessment, the problem is solved. How refreshing it would be to hear, something beyond the minimum" reported from our well-ordered stations, which pay their own pastors (including parsonages) two and three times as much as we ask for our most laborious, able and deserving missionaries.

Brethren, can we enjoy our soft pillows and well-set tables unless we make every effort to relieve the situation of those who must otherwise suffer want—or, still worse, go in debt? If such reproach come upon the church, will not a heavy share of responsibility rest on our shoulders? May God help us to rouse from ease-fed luxury, and to the conscience of the church at this vital point!

We take pleasure in calling attention to a new organization for the propagation of missionary intelligence. It is called "The Cross-Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle." Originating in Missouri, most of its directors reside in that State. Its secretary, Rev. Z. Williams, at St. Joseph, Mo., invites correspondence. An appeal for co-operation of "the Christian ministry throughout the world," in bringing the matter to the attention of the people, is given in brief and stirring terms. It has endorsement of many noted men in our own and other churches. It is intended as a kind of Missionary Bazaar. We unjoin the course of study for 1892, and an extract from "Hand-book."

The course of reading for this year is as follows:

"Life of William Carey"..... 75c
"The Coming Kingdom," Rev. W. W. Wadsworth..... $1.00
"Life of James Hannington, Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa," Rev. E. C. Dawson, M. A..... 1.00
"The Great Value and Success of Foreign Missions," Rev. John Higgins..... 75c
"The Missionary Review," Funk & Wagnalls, per year..... 1.50
Initiation fee, per year..... 50c
Conscience and I sat down together to consider my Master's last command. We found:
That at home there is a Christian minister to every 800 souls; in heathen lands only one to 500,000 souls.
That about 98 per cent. of our gifts are used in Christian work at home, and about two per cent. in foreign lands.
That three-fourths of the people in the United States have at least a nominal connection with his church; while three-fifths of the entire population of the world have never yet heard his gospel.
That if each Christian would give a cent a day, the amount given for foreign missions would grow in one year to at least $15,000,000 per annum.
Therefore: I have resolved that I will be more to obey my Lord's command. That I will give one cent a day extra, as a prayer for some one missionary. That I will hand the amount monthly to the treasurer of our auxiliary as an offering to foreign missions.
That I will do this for his sake and his name.

"I am only one, but I am one. I can do everything, but I can do something. What I can do, I ought to do. What I ought to do, by the grace of God I will do."

The subjoined from a sister church has much interest to all our readers—especially those of the Mississippi Conference territory, since the venerable superintendent of our Japan Mission is to receive all his support this year from our members—and not for this year only, we hope.

It has been generally supposed that Christianity in Japan had taken no hold upon the upper classes, and was confined solely to the uneducated portions of the country, but recent developments are putting a different face upon the state of things in that wide-awake and rapidly improving empire. Since the new Constitution has gone into effect, and since the institution of a Parliament elected by the people, there has come to the surface a strong Christian element, and many important State offices have been filled with persons of the Christian faith. Among the members of the present Parliament are thirteen baptized Christians, and others who, though not baptized, are instructed in Christianity, and inclined to its acceptance. It is said "that whereas the percentage of converts in Japan does not exceed twenty-seven in every ten thousand, the corresponding percentage in the class from which the House of Representatives is drawn is four hundred and thirty-three." It is further estimated "that the number of converts of all denominations in Japan is one hundred thousand." These facts are worthy of note, and are calculated to inspire the church of God with hope and courage in pushing forward the gospel among the Japanese, and warrant the bright future, which many anticipate for this people. We have thus a fine showing for twenty years' work among them. The progress heretofore must be proportionately greater. With all classes, more or less, permeated with the gospel, and its converts occupying, molding and controlling positions in the State, its influence is bound to be more aggressive and rapid. The next few decades will, doubtless, witness amazing results. Buddhism and idolatry will before long find their vocation gone, and the cross will be recognized and honored as the dominant religion of the land. Sooner or later mere national religions must give place to the only known world-wide religion.—Presbyterian.

Africa is wide open now to the gospel. The explorations of the last thirty years have revealed a hitherto unknown world, and where the old maps had "Great African Desert" the newer maps have rivers, lakes, and mountains and great peoples. Railroads are being built to supplement the splendid water highways which nature has provided. The doors of language are also being opened.—Missionary Reporter.

Though we have, as yet, no mission in Africa, there are many reasons why we of the South have vital interest in its redemption. Moreover, the same shameful contrast between the grasp after earthly gain and the gathering of heavenly treasure is painfully apparent in every direction.

Gold or Souls—Which?

Gold! Gold! Gold! This is the never-failing topic which greets the eye of the reader of South African newspapers.

Now it is the new countries which are being opened by the enterprise of the British South Africa Company, led by the masterful mind of Mr. Rhodes. Nothing deters. Obstacles seemingly insurmountable are overcome. Millions of gold poured all in before a dollar of result is realized. Thousands of eager men bent upon making a fortune, but all more likely to rest in unknown graves in the wilderness. All for gold!

These men are ready to run any and every risk, even to being massacred by the warlike Matabele, who are just now preparing for the conflict. They are ready to die by fever, or harassed, in its grasp, to lead a miserable existence; they look with steadfast gaze on the long and wearisome journey, fraught with danger; they are ready to quit home and friends and live any and every how for gold!

But why this pressing haste? Will not the treasure wait? Of course, it may. It has waited ever since the famous Queen of Sheba, for aught we know, found her untold wealth from her hidden store, and the ships of Hiram returned laden with their costly burden. For ages these fields of gold have waited untouched—waited for the enterprise of the nineteenth century to reopen their long-concealed treasures.

What does all this stir mean to the Christian world? Must the Master blush with shame for his church when he sees all this frantic rush for gold, and when in Mashonaland, among the Matabele in Gaza Country, and the vast regions beyond are priceless treasures untouched, unsought, save by here and there a seeker? Souls, souls above price, everywhere unsaved, left, alas! not to stay pure and undefiled like the gold till the time shall come when the church shall awake to its privilege and duty, but souls that are dying, that have been given down into an unknown future for generations on generations—a steady, solemn and awful procession!

The march of civilization is opening up the dark depths of Africa. The cry of gold has brought thousands where before the cry of perishing millions was all but unheeded. How long is the church to sleep, or, half awakened from its stupor, to send out a handful of missionaries where hundreds, yes, thousands, are needed? The thoughtful mind is puzzled at the contradiction. America, and England, as it were, full of Christians, knowing the awful condition of their dark brothers, are sending the most meager succors; but at the cry of gold the people of the world, and often the people professed of Christ as well, will leave friends, risk health, property, comfort, and even life, for a bare chance of grasping the glittering prize. Is it true that souls are of more value than gold? Can it be possible that Christians believe what they proclaim? If they do, should we not see millions of dollars where we now see thousands, and hosts of eager workers where we now see a weak handful, ready to do or die in winning these lost multitudes to Christ?

No wonder that skeptics sneer at our professions when they see the world a hundred times more anxious for perishable gold than the Christian Church claims to be in winning lost souls. Africa has been baptized with martyr's blood, but a whole army of followers need to take up their standard, "The world for Christ!" and win Africa for God. The pierced hand of the Master beckons his church to the conflict. Will it turn from this tender call and leave these newly-opened countries for the capitalist, the trader, and the gold-digger? Let the answer be, No! And let that answer come in men and supplies, so that the perishing ones may be reached and saved.—The Missionary Herald.

Woman's Work.

Our president wrote, "I am glad to say some of our districts are doing well; others I have not heard from." She desires that Auxiliaries be urged to collect the Conference and Auxiliary contingent funds. The former, as is well known, is to defray the Conference expenses, including the annual meeting. By attention to the latter money may be on hand to pay the expenses of the Auxiliary delegates to and from the annual meeting. By sending a representative, who will take notes and report to the Auxiliary on her return, new life may be infused into the work. The money will be wisely expended.

"Train up a child in the way he should go" is, I fear, a lesson unheeded regarding our Missionary Society. Emphasis was given to this duty in a lengthy paragraph in the "Plan of Work" of the last annual meeting. Only one new organization reported since that time, unless recently. Are we discharging the duty of reading the minutes of the annual meeting to Auxiliaries? Some members have inquired as to the time of holding the next meeting. The last paragraph of the "Plan of Work" reads thus: "That the annual meeting convene Saturday morning before the fourth Sunday in June, time and place to be changed only by a two-thirds concurrence of the Executive Committee."

Let us endeavor to meet our obligations, and be true to our Methodist polity by progressing beyond the report of last year, else we will not keep pace with the demands upon us. The general treasurer expressed mortification at the falling off of receipts from the work at large. For the quarter ending Jan. 15, 1891, receipts were $26,294.53; Jan. 13, 1892, $17,912.05—a difference of $8,382.48 in one quarter. Mrs. E. D. Jones, Editor W. M. S., Miss. Conf., Carlisle, Miss.

Good Advice.

In Winter more exercise is required for the body than in Summer. Wear warm underclothing, material of open texture is preferable. Avoid catching cold, but should you develop a cough take immediate steps to get rid of it. The most effective remedy for coughs or colds is Marsden's Pectoral Balm; it is pleasant to take and never fails to cure. Ask your druggist for it, and don't be persuaded to take any other instead.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

Thursday, March 24, 1892.

"Did the editor of the Richmond see 'part of Bro. Hawley's article' in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE? Or did he see it in the Nashville quoted from the NEW ORLEANS? We were very much surprised to see it in the Nashville credited to the NEW ORLEANS, when we never saw it in our own paper. We suppose the credit had been given to our paper by mistake. But the mistake has lowered us in the eyes of the Richmond! We have always tried to be careful on this point of giving proper credit to what is published in our paper, for we believe that everybody should get credit for what he does. And we have no recollection of the extract spoken of being given in our columns. This is not the first time we have been credited with somebody else's work.

We understand that Col. J. W. Nicholson, president of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, has been elected a Fellow of the London Mathematical Society. This is an honor which has been conferred upon only a few Americans. We congratulate Col. Nicholson that he has thus been honored.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Miss Belle Kearney is to lecture in Lake Charles, La., March 30 and 31, for the benefit of the Y's.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix is to preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College, Jackson, La., May 29, proximo.

Rev. J. W. Chambers, our pastor at Waterprase, Miss., has charge of the Epworth League column of the Clark County Times.

When a Christian comes to the point where he has neither "the vitality to live nor the courage to die," he is in a perilous position.

The Sanitary Era gives the names of eight centenarians who have died recently. The average age is one hundred and six years.

We regret to see by the Texas Advocate that Editor Campbell is still suffering from rheumatism. In the meantime Rev. C. O. Jones occupies the editorial chair.

Rev. J. J. Tigert, D. D., of Kansas City, is our fraternal messenger to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, in place of Dr. W. A. Candler, who finds it impossible to attend.

One of our exchanges says that these four things will make a prayer meeting "go bounding along from beginning to close"—promptness, brevity, spontaneity, variety. Test it and see.

Rev. J. B. Stone, presiding elder of the Verona district, North Mississippi Conference, says: "We are doing finely on the district. The preachers are all at work; cheerful and expecting a gracious revival."

President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College, was to see us last Saturday. His college work is moving on very satisfactorily, and the church work, under the leadership of Pastor Weems, is progressing finely.

We are indebted to the comptroller of the city, Mr. Otto Thoman, for his "Report embracing a detailed statement of the Receipts and Expenditures of the City of New Orleans from July 1, 1891, to Dec. 31, 1891."

Rev. James Campbell, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, is to preach the commencement sermon at Whitworth College this year, and Rev. A. C. Smith, of Vanderbilt University, is to deliver the annual address.

Prof. Grote, of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., is spending a few days of rest in our city with his brother-in-law, Pastor LaPrade. He gave us an appreciated call last week, and represents the university as doing excellently well.

We are indebted to Dr. I. G. John, Missionary Secretary, for "Missionary Hand-book No. 8." It is a very interesting account of the founding and development and progress of our Brazil Mission. We are sure these hand-books are doing good.

We have received the first number of the Epworth Methodist. It is published in Fort Worth, Texas, and edited by Rev. I. Z. T. Morris. It is devoted to the promotion of the Epworth Leagues in Texas. This number is bright with promise for usefulness.

Rev. T. L. Mollen, presiding elder of the Meridian district, writes: "The Quarterly Conference for the Binnville circuit unanimously granted a license to preach to William Edward Mabry Brogan, the only son of the late Rev. J. C. Brogan, of the Mississippi Conference. May a double portion of the Spirit be given unto the young man!"

Again, L. Prang & Company, Boston, have sent us a sample package of their Easter publications for 1892. These souvenirs of the Easter time are executed in the best style of art both as to pictures and letter-press, and are as beautiful as can be imagined. They are real dainties. This company has secured popular favor in the past, and the publications for this year, we are sure, will not diminish in the least, but rather enlarge, that favor.

Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E., Woodville district, March 17: "Woodville district, one has said, is without center or circumference. It extends from Fort Adams, on Mississippi river, to Tallahatchee, St. Tammany parish, La. It is certainly long, if not very wide. The preachers are all at their posts working and praying for a revival. They are as happy and contented a set of men as I have ever seen. The people are making larger assessments for their support this year in spite of the 'hard times.' We will expect you at our District Conference. Bishop Hendrix is to preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College, May 29. Some new churches are being built, and others projected. The outlook for a prosperous year's work is hopeful. The Advocate shall have an airing on the second round. We hope to get a large number of new subscribers."

To the Preachers of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: We all have felt, and still feel, that the claimants of our Conference have never been cared for as they ought and deserve to be. The support of the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased brethren has not, I fear, been laid upon the hearts of our people. I feel that if the matter were properly presented to our people, they would respond liberally. At our last Conference the Joint Board of Finance took an advanced step toward a more liberal and prompt support of our Conference claimants. The Conference adopted the report of the Board, and, to carry out the plan of the Board, passed resolutions requesting the preachers to take their collections for Conference funds in the early part of the year and forward to the treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance by the first or middle of April. By so doing the Board will be able to make quarterly payments, thereby giving quarterly support to our brethren.

Now, brethren, let us not be behind in this good work. Other districts are coming up. Let us send in our full assessment at once, and a large surplus. Remember that this assessment is increased above last year's. We had to increase it, but dared not increase it as much as we ought, to meet the righteous demands of those who had given their lives to the church.

Dear brethren, consider the assessment, the very least your people ought to do, and not the most; so if you can raise more, do it, and God will bless your people in so doing. If your assessment is $40, get your people to give $50. If the brethren will do this, they will gladden the hearts of widows and orphans, and make bright the last days of our worn-out ministers.

Louisiana Avenue Epworth League.

There was organized on last Friday night, by Rev. John T. Sawyer, the pastor of Louisiana Avenue Church, an Epworth League with a membership of thirty-five. The young people of that church are very enthusiastic, and the prospects for large success in League work are excellent. The officers elected for 1892 are as follows:

President, Harry W. Riskey; first vice-president, Rev. Wm. B. Van Valkenburgh; second vice-president, Miss Mabel Fuller; third vice-president, Mrs. Wm. B. Bartels; secretary, John T. Crehlin; treasurer, Miss Lillie Johnson.

It has been said that in a man or woman, decay begins at the top. Just as it is the highest peaks that are the hardest, and are quickest denuded of verdure, so often it is the hair that is the soonest touched by the frosts of age and shows the first sign of disintegration.

No matter what may be the charm or perfection of feature in woman, it is much discounted if the hair shows waste places, or is deficient. There is absolutely no occasion for any woman resorting to "false fronts" or artificial additions when an ample and sure tonic and preservative is provided in the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which removes all dandruff, destroys the animalcules that attack the root, stimulates growth and gives the hair just the properties it requires to become luxuriant and healthy.

It appears especially to exercise a remarkable influence upon the coloring properties of the hair, so that in a little while, sometimes with a few applications, hair that is losing its color is restored, and regains a natural beauty it has not had for years. This has been demonstrated in hundreds of cases, and a trial of the preparation is all that is necessary to bring conviction to any mind. The price is one dollar per bottle, and it your druggist or merchant should be out of it, send to the Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

Special Notice to Preachers.

The preachers in charge will confer a favor on the publisher if they will report in full as to collections for new and old subscriptions to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE their approaching District Conference. A representative of this paper expects to be present at same.

BOOKS.

A CLASSIC TOWN. By an Old-Timer. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Chicago.

This is the story of Evanston, Ill., by Miss Frances E. Willard. It is a very interesting story and told in a happy style. It is finely illustrated.

THE HIGHEST CRITICS VS.—THE HIGHER CRITICS. By Rev. L. W. Munhall, Evangelist. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago. Price, $1.

"The Highest Critics" are Jesus and the Holy Spirit, and the Higher Critics are those scholars (so called) who are endeavoring to overturn the Scripture. The author makes some good points in that he brings the testimony of eminent scholars of all past ages to the support of the Bible. His style is rather loose, and he makes some curious blunders. On the whole, we think the book will do good amongst the common people.

IMMORTAL HOPES. Compiled by Mary J. Chisholm Foster. With introduction by James M. Buckley, D. D. 21mo. 50 cents. Illustrated. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

Those who are looking for an Easter token, either as a gift or for personal use, will find this dainty volume an appropriate and charming souvenir of the season. It contains just those poems which appeal to the heart and give comfort and fresh inspiration in the midst of sorrow and despondency. The book contains text-cuts and beautiful full-page illustrations, printed in a delicate tint, and is daintily bound in both white and lavender and silver, with title in gold, and gilt edges.

THE PAULINE THEOLOGY. By George H. Stevens, Ph.D., D. D. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. For sale by G. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $2.

Dr. Stevens is professor of New Testament criticism and interpretation in Yale College, and this book of his is a study of the origin and correlation of the doctrinal teachings of the Apostle Paul. He begins with Paul's conversion in relation to his mission, and then considers his style and modes of thought and the shaping forces of his teaching. Having thus introduced the subject, he discusses the sources of the Pauline doctrine, and then enters upon the consideration of that doctrine under these heads: Doctrine of God, of Sin, of the Law, of Christ, of Redemption, of Justification, of the Christian Life, of the Church and the Pauline Eschatology. The author discusses these various points with learning and discriminating judgment, and in such a way as to produce a very readable and profitable book. As all such books ought to have, this has a valuable index.

A DICTIONARY OF HYMNOLGY. Edited by John Julian, Vicar of Wincobank, Sheffield. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price, $10.

Here is a book that will make glad the hearts of all the hymnologists, for it is nothing less than a "setting forth the origin and history of Christian hymns of all ages and nations, with special reference to those contained in the hymn books of English-speaking countries and now in common use, together with biographical and critical notices of their authors and translators and historical articles on national and denominational hymnody, breviaries, missals, psalters," etc. This is a wonderful book of over 1,600 pages, double column to the page. It gives the author of every known hymn, the changes the hymn has undergone, the date of its publication, the success it has had among churches, and much other interesting information. The amount of labor required to produce such a work was stupendous. It is just simply a monument of amazing diligence and perseverance. The price will keep it from general circulation, but the hymnologist will revel in it.

PERIODICALS.

—UNIVERSITY EXTENSION, for March, has several articles of value. J. Haseltine Shinn, Philadelphia. Price $1.50.

—DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for April, opens with a finely illustrated article entitled "The Evolution of a Great Exposition," by Frances B. Johnston. Several papers on Easter make this an Easter number. W. Jennings Demorest, New York. Price, $2.

Sold by All Druggists.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

Within the last month the immense business of King's Royal Germetuer Co. has been more than doubled and large orders are pouring in from all directions. On February 20th I. L. Lyons & Co., of New Orleans, gave them a cash order for seven thousand and two hundred bottles to be delivered at once.

It means: 1. That when such men as General Longstreet, General Turner, Governor Hubbard, Colonel Avery, Rev. W. G. C. Cunningham, Rev. J. B. Hawthorne and Rev. Sam Jones try a medicine and give it their unqualified indorsement the people believe them. 2. That Germetuer has done all that its most ardent friends have declared that it would do. 3. That it has mastered La Grippe, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, Insomnia, Kidney Troubles, Asthma, Summer Complaints and Catarrh wherever it has been tried. 4. That the discovery of Germetuer is the most valuable contribution that this century has made to medical science.

As a spring medicine it has no equal; it invigorates the stomach, aids digestion, tones up the system, and thus brings health and happiness. In this respect no other remedy can compare with it. Germetuer is not a nauseous compound, but as pleasant to take as a glass of lemonade; the patient loves it and looks forward with pleasure to the time of taking it.

Rev. R. M. Thompson: I have found this book one of the most pleasant companions I ever met. I wish everybody had a copy of it and would read it.

New Orleans Christian Advocate: The author has evidently given thorough study to his subject, and presents some new views of old doctrine and urges some strenuous proofs in reply to objections to the "second blessing" theory of sanctification.

We are a patient people—the ox is nowhere in comparison. We buy lamp chimneys by the dozen; they go on snapping and popping and flying in pieces; and we go on buying the very same chimneys year after year. Our dealer is willing to sell us a chimney a week for every lamp we burn—a hundred or more a year—and we plow for him, pay him for goading us. Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" do not break from heat; they are made of tough glass. As likely as not our dealer would rather his chimneys would break; "it's good for the business," says he. He buys the brittlest ones he can get. "What are you going to do about it?"

HOME LIFE.

SPECTACLES.

If in our own homes we would use the same "speers".

That we use when we visit next door. And search for the flaws as we did over there. I think we would find many more.

If we'd use the same "speers" when we look at ourselves.

That we don when our company's near. I fear we would need what would magnify less. Or astonish we'd be, never fear!

But I find still possess (where'er they may live) For their own use a kind ditty made.

With the glasses all darkened, to hide half the view.

So their own faults remain in the shade. But the ones which they use when at others they glance.

Have the glasses transparently clear. With a power to magnify things twice the size.

That the same through the dark ones appear. Now I think that the world would much happier be.

If the "speers" once for all, we would change. And within our own rooms use the spectacles clear.

With the dark for the much broader range; Then the faults that appear to us jaggedly rough.

Would melt into outlines so fair. We would find that the world was a beautiful place.

And good people lived everywhere. —Christian Index.

The Baby—What Is It?

London Tid Bits has just awarded a two-guinea prize for "The Best Definition of a Baby." The prize was won by Miss Nellie Braidwood, of Glynn, England, who sent in this answer:

"A tiny feather from the wing of love dropped into the sacred lap of motherhood."

The following is a selection from some of the best definitions submitted:

The hatcher's horror, the mother's treasure, and the despotic tyrant of the most republican household.

A human flower untouched by the finger of care.

The morning enliven, moonday crawler, mid-night bewilder.

The magic spell by which the gods transform a house into a home.

A stranger with unspeakable cheek that enters a house without a stitch to his back and is received with open arms by everyone.

A burbling bud on the tree of life.

The only precious possession that excites envy.

The latest edition of humanity of which every couple think they possess the finest copy.

A native of all countries who speaks the language of none.

The unconscious mediator between father and mother, and the focus of their hearts.

About twenty-two inches of cocoon and wriggle, writhes and screams, filled with suction and testing apparatus for milk, and anatomical alarm to regulate supply.

A quaint little craft called Innocence, laden with sympathy and love.

A thing we are expected to kiss and look at as though we enjoyed it. The smartest little craft afloat in home's delightful bay.

A mile of humanity that will cry no harder if it is stuck into him than he will if it is stuck into him.

A little stranger with a free pass to the heart's best affections.

The most extensive employer of female labor.

The pulp from which the leaves of life's book are made.

A padlock on the chain of love.

A soft bundle of love and trouble which we can do without.

It's a sweet and tiny treasure, A torment and a tease.

It's an autocrat, an enchanter, Two awful things to please.

It's a rest and peace disturber, With little laughing ways.

It's a walking human night alarm, And terror of your days.

The sweetest thing God ever meddled and forgot to give wings to.

A pleasure to two, a nuisance to every other body and a necessity to the world.

An inhabitant of Leplund.

That which makes home happier, love stronger, patience greater, hands busier, nights longer, days shorter, purses lighter, clothes shabbier, the past forgotten, the future brighter.

THE POWER OF EXAMPLE.—Let only one soul in any community become deeply awakened on account of guilt, and with an absorbed gaze look away from self to Christ to find peace and pardon in his name. What an influence will be exerted upon others! No form of opposition can effectually resist it. No secret skepticism abroad can withstand such an example of conquering and genuine repentance. Many widespread revivals have originated in the regeneration of a single individual—possibly an obscure person, without worldly position and brought to Christ through the agency of some individual equally unknown.

This is just as true of a soul earnestly seeking a clean heart. The Spirit dwelling in such persons is quickly contagious. The silent prayer will be lifted all around. "Create in me a clean heart," the meetings for prayer will be forthwith enlivened, the awakened attention of believers to their high privilege in the gospel will soon become general—all the result of the new life of faith wrought by the Holy Spirit in a single soul. Who has not seen all this again and again illustrated in his own community? And if this be God's method of bringing in the fullness of his kingdom upon earth, every Christian should inquire, Am I all that God would have me to be in inward purity and outward life? —New York Christian Advocate.

CHANGED THE SUBJECT.—One of the most difficult things to do gracefully is to change the current of an unpleasant conversation. But the small boy can do it with circumstances make it necessary.

"Thomas, will you please tell me why you pulled up the onions from my Danvers' onion-bed? How many times have I told you to keep away from the garden?"

Thomas grey red in the face, and his grandfather went on to deplete the evil fate that was sure to befall boys who went around destroying what their elders had planted.

Meanwhile, Thomas had pulled himself together, and as the harangue was concluded, he said, with a smile, referring to an event of the previous week:

"My old rooster died, wasn't it, grandpa?" —Selected.

The harder our work, the more we need solitude and prayer, without which work becomes mechanical and inane. —McLoren.

How She Lost Her Boy.

Mrs. Mason had one son and three daughters. She was a very careful and devoted mother, and wanted to do the very best for her children that could be done. Frank, her son, was a nice boy, rather delicate in his physique, fond of books, pets, and pictures. He had a blooded spaniel when he was about ten years old, which he loved dearly; but the dog was a much pain to him almost as pleasure.

"Frank, Frank, don't bring that dog into the house," his mother would say. "Frank, Frank, don't disarrange that library." "Frank, Frank (always repeating his name twice when nagging him), don't leave the door open." "Don't bring your muddy feet into the house." "Don't lie down on your face to read; sit in a chair like folks." "Don't be saucy," if he expostulated.

So it was don't and don't, and don't all the time till there seemed hardly anything that had not some kind of restriction attached to it. His school teacher saw how matters were going, and tried to do something about it. One evening when she called she asked to see Frank's dog, for she was very fond of dogs. "You know," she said to the lad, "you are to tell to-morrow all about a dog's hind foot, and how it differs from a cat's."

So Frank's mother consented to have the two little animals in the parlor, and they lay on the sofa between Frank and his teacher all the evening, as contented and well-behaved as a cat and dog could be, and Frank was really happy that evening.

He got out his pictures, too, to show to his teacher, and he arranged them on the piano, as he was fond of doing, so as to bring out by contrast and harmony the best effects.

He was really an embryo member of some "hanging committee" in some Academy of Design yet to be, and he liked to cover the carpet with his pictures, and arrange and re-arrange them till they just suited him.

But at other times his mother couldn't bear to have the rooms "all littered up with things," and so Frank had to suppress himself and his pictures, and his out-growings in so many directions that he got tired of it all.

As he grew into young manhood he liked to go to the Soldiers' Home, not far from his own home, and hear about the war for the Union. The old soldiers thought it was fun to teach a lad how to smoke and chew, and he formed the tobacco habit before his parents knew he had any leaning in that direction.

But the old soldiers didn't keep nagging him, and he liked them.

When he got well into his teens he asserted himself more and more, and at last insisted on having his room entirely to himself.

He looked it and would not let one but one of his sisters enter it, in his room he hung his pictures where and as he wanted them. He read lying on his face if he wanted to, with his feet in the air and his hand resting on his hands, and he smoked as he read.

If his mother could only have let him alone a little while, keeping him close to her, and have left him to amuse himself in all harmless and boyish ways, humoring his innocent fancies and indulging his boyish freaks when they possessed him, she might have had an unbounded influence over him. She just nagged it all away, and while he was the apple of her eye and the pride of her life, she made him so uncomfortable that he was happiest when he was inaccessible to her. —Christian Observer.

How She Kept Her Boy.

"Mama, may I make some candy?" said Willie Jones to his mother.

"Yes, my son, if you'll clean everything up nicely afterward, and not make a mess."

So Mrs. Jones measured out a cupful of sugar and a cupful of molasses in the pan in which candy was usually made. Willie had helped her make it a great many times until he knew how it should be done.

"If he spoils it," she said to herself, "a few cents will cover the loss, and he'll enjoy his fun."

So Willie washed his hands, put on an apron, and was merry as could be over his frolic. Later he was permitted to make cake in the same way and on the same conditions. Sometimes he made failures, but they were steps in the upward progress of the soul from ignorance to knowledge.

"You must love noise and boys," said Mr. Jones to his wife one evening when he came home and found three or four boys with Willie at the dining-table, and having rather uproarious fun with the game they were playing.

"I love Willie," replied Mrs. Jones. "He must have playmates, and if his friends come here and play with him as my presence, I know just what company he's in and I don't know when he goes of somewhere else."

"Mama," said Mary, Willie's sister, "do make Willie sit in a chair and read. He is always lying down on the floor and supporting himself on his elbows while he reads."

"It is a good book he's reading, isn't it?" said Mrs. Jones.

"Oh, yes, indeed; it's The Boy Travelers in Japan," replied Mary.

"Well, then, don't disturb him; he's happy and comfortable and well employed. Let him alone."

And so Mrs. Jones kept her boy near her, and made it pleasant for him to be near her. She was polite to him, as polite as if he had been somebody else's son instead of only her own boy. She always said, "Please, Willie," do so and so, when she wanted anything done, and she thanked him for his attentions to her, and made him feel that his obedience and good-will were appreciated, that she loved him and confided in him and trusted him, and was never so happy as when he was with her.

So Willie adored his mother, and confided in her, and kept close to her. He grew up pure and sweet and happy, and polite and intelligent and manly.

We can't keep our children too near our hearts, if our hearts are as they should be, for their welfare and for our happiness. —Christian Observer.

A MOTHER'S ARGUMENT.—"The most-to-be-regretted act of my life," says a lieutenant-commander in the navy, "was a letter which I wrote home to my mother when I was about seventeen years of age. She always addressed her letters to me as 'my dear boy.' I felt at that time I was a man, or very near it, and wrote saying that her constant addressing me as a 'boy' made me feel displeased. I received in reply a letter full of reproaches and tears. Among other things she said: 'You might grow to be as big as Goliath, as strong as Samson, and as wise as Solomon. You might become ruler of a nation, or emperor of many nations, and the world might reverence you and fear you; but to your devoted mother, you would always appear, in memory, in your innocent, unpretentious, unself-connected, unpermeated boyhood. In those days, when I washed and dressed and kissed and worshipped you, you were my idol. Nowadays, you are becoming part of a gross world, by contact with it, and I can not bow down to you and worship you. But if there is manhood and maternal love transmitted to you, you will understand that the highest compliment that mother-love can pay you, is to call you 'my dear boy.'"

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

THE FARMER'S BOY.

BY MARION JULIET MITCHELL.

Bright, hopeful lad, with earnest eyes, And heart that knows as yet no guile, To tilted rank that mowed rise, He was not so happy, then, thy smile. A longing oft may seize thy heart, To go beyond these fertile fields, And take in that great world, a part Where gold a mighty sceptre wields.

In fancy, as through meadows green Thy faithful ploughshare turns the sod, The furrows stretch away I ween, To paths the world's great men have trod.

The jaded horse, unheeded now, Turns his own idling way, As back and forth he beats the plough, Throughout the weary hours of day.

Uprising from the fallow soil, In lovely vision, it would seem, Thyself revolved, and freed from toil, Thou seest in a fairy dream.

The world applauds, men bow the knee, With gold thy well-filled coffers shine, To wisdom's stores thou hast the key, And all the joys of earth are thine.

Ah, happy dream! which naught reveals Of vexing cares or many a wound From Envy's shafts that he feels Whom fortune's hand with honors crowned.

Could this bright dream of bliss remain, Were thy desires fulfilled to-day, Oft thou wouldst long to turn again And through these fragrant meadows stray.

A Perplexed Editor.

The editor is perplexed, and asks the little cousins to help him out of his perplexity. He has been asked a question, and he refers it to the cousins for an answer. Here it is: John bought a pair of shoes for three dollars, and gave the shoemaker a ten-dollar bill in payment. The shoemaker, not having the change, went to a merchant and got it changed, and gave John the shoes and seven dollars. After John had gone, the merchant came and told the shoemaker the ten-dollar bill was counterfeit, and he must take it back and give him a good one, which he did. Now, the question is: How much did the shoemaker lose?

Mr. Editor: Having seen a letter in the young folks' column, of your valuable paper, from Miss Leslie Gule, one of my former schoolmates, and having succeeded in having my former letter printed, I thought I'd "try again." My home is at McNair, Miss.; I am in Vicksburg attending papa's school. I study arithmetic, writing, elocution, bookkeeping and telegraphy, and I am reaching the shorthand and typewriting department. We have two Methodist Churches in Vicksburg, and last Sunday a new Sunday-school was opened. Each of the two churches has Sunday-schools, and the Crawford Street Church has one of the largest and best Sunday-schools in the State. Our ministers are Bros. Lewis and Robertson. I will try to answer Geo. Macbeth's question, "Where was Moses buried?" by repeating a portion of Scripture: "And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Bethpeor, but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day." Would also refer him to a piece of poetry written by W. F. Alexander, entitled, "The Burial of Moses," in which he can find a beautiful and appropriate answer. Before I close I would like to ask the cousins a question: Who first broke all the commandments? Hoping I'll again escape the waste-basket, and wishing the ADVOCATE and its editor assistance, I'll close.

Your little friend, GEO. A. McDONALD, Vicksburg, Miss.

Mr. Editor: I will write and answer Rev. T. C. Wier's question. "S. P. Q. R." means Senatus, Populusque, and Romanus—Senate and people of Rome. I found it in Webster's Dictionary. I will close with best wishes to the dear old ADVOCATE. I remain,

Your friend, MARY McLEAN, Gayden.

In Demand.

One day Tommy had been asked to do several "chores" about the house. He was wanted to bring in wood, hunt eggs, run errands, etc. He grew tired of it at last, and upon some new request he said half impatiently, half jokingly: "Well, I think here's a boy in pretty good demand to-day."

"Good articles are always in demand," replied one who heard him.

"O yes; I s'pose so!" said Tommy, as he marched off to do this favor also, evidently thinking it was a little tiresome. The demand seemed to press a little hard upon the supply.

Yes, Tommy, "good articles are always in demand." This is true the world over. People like to choose the best they can find; not only the best things, but the best men. Good lawyers, good doctors, good teachers, good mechanics, good mechanics, good farmers, good grocers, good preachers, will all find that the great world has plenty for them to do. They are in demand.

But worthless things have poor sale. They may go a-hogging. Men don't want them. The lazy, the dishonest, and the careless are not asked to do much, when better hands may be had. —Western Christian Advocate.

The Longest Day.

It is quite important, when speaking of the longest day in the year, to say what part of the world we are talking about, as will be seen by reading the following list, which tells the length of the longest day in several different places. How unfortunate are the children in Tornes, Finland, where Christmas Day is less than three hours in length.

At Stockholm, Sweden, it is 18½ hours in length.

At Spitzbergen the longest day is 3½ months.

At London, England, and Bremen, Prussia, the longest day has 16½ hours.

At Hamburg in Germany, and Danzig in Prussia, the longest day has 17 hours.

At Wardburg, Norway, the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 22, without interruption.

At St. Petersburg, Russia, and Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day is 19 hours, and the shortest 5 hours.

At Toruén, Finland, June 21 brings a day nearly 22 hours long, and Christmas, one less than 3 hours in length.

At New York the longest day is about 15 hours, and at Montreal, Canada, it is 16½.—The Christian Intelligencer.

The love of God is the love of goodness. The old Saxon word God is identical with good; God the good One—personified Goodness. There is in that derivation not a mere play of words; there is deep truth. None loves God but he who loves good. —F. W. Robertson.

The people are the roots of the State; if the roots are flourishing, the State will endure. —Chinese Maxim.

SCIENTIFIC.

Snake-Myths.

A great deal of nonsense has been published, and a great deal more is believed, about snakes. Some most thrilling stories turn upon a power which serpents are credited with of fascinating their victims. This appears to be a superstition. According to Mr. Vincent Richards, mace, birds, dogs, guinea-pigs, and other small animals, introduced into a rattlesnake's cage, show little fear, even at first, and afterward none whatever. Smaller birds, after fluttering about till they are tired, end by becoming amusingly familiar with the snakes. Mr. Richards put two rats into a cage containing forty cobras. At the outset the rats' appetites were considerably affected, and they were evidently alarmed. In a short time, however, they recovered their spirits, and caused considerable commotion among the cobras by running all over their heads and bodies. The snakes resisted this familiarity by darting at each other and at imaginary foes. The rats lived and paraded in the cage ten or twelve days, when, one after another, they were found dead—"victims, no doubt, of misplaced confidence." It is still a matter of debate whether snakes are proof against their own poison. The remedies advised for snake-bite are of doubtful validity. Because a man recovers after being bitten by a snake, and does with opium, mercury, emmons, or what not, we must not jump to the conclusion that the treatment has effected a cure. A snake may bite without poisoning. Biting, though in appearance simple enough, consists really of a series of complex movements, following rapidly one upon another in ordered sequence, should any of which be inadequately performed, the victim may not be properly poisoned. Ammonia, alcohol, and making the patient move about, are worse than useless; for they increase the activity of the circulation, and thereby promote the absorption of the poison. Even permenation of potash is of no effect unless it is administered within four minutes. Researches into the nature of the poison have shown that it resides in some protoplasm, and that there are three toxic elements—globulin, serum albumen, and acid elements—but where in the quality consists that gives to these substances, usually so harmless, their poisonous power, is as much in the dark as ever. —Popular Science.

Phonograph for Deafness.

At the Southern Homoeopathic Medical College a public demonstration was given of the uses of the phonograph for the cure of deafness, a discovery made by Dr. H. F. Gary, professor in the eye and ear division of the college. Seated at a phonograph, with rubber tubes in their ears, were a number of persons of both sexes.

An exposition of the principles of the treatment was given. It is the message of those parts of the ear which transmit sound into the brain. The phonograph produces this result by giving continuous and successive vibrations at regular intervals. This it does with certain degrees of intensity and frequency according to the exigencies of the case under treatment.

In bad cases a series of intensified shocks, at the rate of one to the second, is produced against the membrane tympanum or drum. In cases of not over five years' standing the vibrations are given with more frequency and less intensity.

The noises or hums so made are given by means of depressions made with a stylus at regular intervals in the wax surface of the phonographic cylinders. Thus they may be varied and they originate in the phonograph itself, and are not introduced from any exterior source.

Every depression causes the little transmitting needle in the instrument to strike the diaphragm connected with the phonograph and to reproduce the same distressing noises which a deaf person continually hears within his brain. The intensity of the noises is regulated by the way that the depressions are made in the cylinder and the frequency by the number of revolutions per minute given the latter. All patients who are under treatment for deafness at the college reported that they are greatly benefited. —New York Herald.

The Seven Wonders of Corea.

Corea, like the world of the ancients, has its "seven wonders." Briefly stated, they are as follows: First, a hot mineral spring near Kin Shantao, the healing properties of which are believed by the people to be miraculous. No matter what disease may afflict the patient, a dip in the water proves efficacious. The second wonder is two springs, situated at a considerable distance from each other; in fact, they have the breadth of the entire peninsula between them. They have two peculiarities: when one is full the other is always empty, and notwithstanding the obvious fact that they are connected by a subterranean passage, one is "litter and the other pure and sweet. The third wonder is a cold water cave—a cavern from which a wintry wind perpetually blows. The force of the wind from the cave is such that a strong man can not stand before it. A forest that can not be eradicated is the fourth wonder. No matter what injury is done to the roots of the trees, which

OBITUARIES.

COTTON.—Entered into life eternal, Feb. 10, 1892, at the residence of her mother, in Poplarville, Miss., Lou Ella, daughter of A. and M. M. Thornhill, and wife of R. F. Cotton, aged twenty-three years and six months.

A lovely and loving woman has been called from a happy home to dwell forever in heaven. To her transition brought the exchange of earth's short-lived pleasures and many disappointments for a home eternal in the "many mansions" of which her Savior said, "I go to prepare a place for you." But her departure has brought heart-rending grief and blighted hopes to those who loved her so tenderly. But little more than a year was she spared to a most devoted husband, and scarcely three months was their little daughter blessed with her mother's love. Though so short, her life as wife and mother was very beautiful, and she appreciated to the utmost her happy surroundings.

In her mother's home she was the pride and joy. Patient and self-denying, the younger members of the family loved her as a second mother, scarcely less dear than their own, while to her mother she was ever a help and comfort.

To us it is strange and incomprehensible that the frost of death should fall on a bloom of such loveliness and promise, when it filled so beautifully the place it occupied. But in infinite wisdom and tender love does our Father deal with his children, and we should bow in perfect submission to his holy will, and say with David, "I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it."

This is the first break in the family circle, as it narrows here, may it widen there; and when the last member of the home on earth is called from hence, may the circle be found complete once more in heaven!

H. D. HOWELL.—GREENING—Died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. V. Dubois, in the town of Mansfield, on Feb. 3, 1892, Mrs. SARAH A. GREENING, aged seventy-five years one month and two days. Sister Greening was born in the State of Georgia in the year 1817—Jan. 1, was married to Maj. John J. Greening, Dec. 3, 1832, and became the mother of fourteen children; six of whom survive her—four daughters and two sons.

Sister Greening joined the church at Pleasant Hill, in 1832, under the pastorate of the Rev. John Piper, and for the last forty years had been a most consistent Christian. The Bible was her daily companion, and it was in the study of its pages that she learned the way of life more perfectly. Each day added grace to grace until, strong in the faith, she was able to bear without murmur or complaint fifteen years of almost continued suffering. When the summons came she was indeed ready; her "lamp was trimmed and burning." The light of truth was in her, and the love of God was in her heart. When asked if all was well with her, the answer came, clear and ringing, "All is well, and I am ready." Thus has passed away the eldest member of the Mansfield Church.

T. K. F.—HAMMONS—Bro. G. W. HAMMONS was born in Union parish, Dec. 2, 1867, and departed this life in Ruston, La., Dec. 20, 1891.

Bro. Wattle, as he was familiarly called, was in the prime of young manhood. With business integrity and Christian character combined, he had the promise of a useful life. He was of a quiet, reserved disposition, and had many warm friends. He joined the Methodist Church in his youth, and while he was not very demonstrative, yet he was a consistent, conscientious Christian. He was a devoted son and affectionate brother, the comfort and support of his parents in their declining days, being their youngest and only unmarried son.

Bro. Wattle had been a resident of Ruston for several years, being the chief clerk in the best houses in the town. Had he lived, doubtless he would have made his mark in the world, being diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.

May the consolation of the gospel of Christ support the bereaved ones in this sad hour of trial, and may they so live as to make one unbroken family around the throne of God!

H. S. COLLIER.—SHEPHERD—Rev. A. C. SHEPHERD was born Oct. 25, 1841, in the State of Georgia. He joined the Methodist Church in the year 1860, in Jackson parish, under the ministry of J. W. Hearn. He was married to Miss M. J. Williams in 1871; was licensed to preach in the year 1883, and died at his home in Bienville parish, La., Nov. 14, 1891.

Thus ended a well-spent life. It has been said that "the only thing that walks back from the tomb with the mourners, and refuses to be buried, is character." So it was in the case of Bro. Shepherd. He was a good preacher and a useful man. He was aware that no life could be well ended that had not been well spent; hence his course in life was such as to win souls for his Master in every day life.

He was loved by all, especially by those of his own immediate congregation, who knew his many Christian graces.

He leaves a devoted wife and four little children to the care of Omnipotence.

He was only sick a short time. He was submissive to the call, and was consoling to his last, and happy in the love of Christ his Savior.

J. J. KELLY.—BLACKWELL—Mrs. MARY BLACKWELL, widow of the late J. G. Blackwell, and daughter of John and Agnes Thornton, was born in Chesterfield district, S. C., May 28, 1820. When but three years of age her parents moved to Little Rock, Ark. Seven years later they emigrated to Smith county, Miss. Sister Blackwell was brought up by Baptist parents, who evidently began their religious instruction early.

In 1837 she married J. G. Blackwell, with whom she lived about fifty-three years. God gave to them eleven children. Seven of these have died, and one, Mr. Joe Blackwell, of Vicksburg, followed one month after the mother's death.

In 1841 she united with the Methodist Church. The preachers who have served the Raleigh circuit know how it delighted her heart to have them at her home and to minister to their comfort. In 1879 the family moved to Forest. Two years ago Bro. Blackwell died. Since that time I have often visited Sister Blackwell, and always found her happy. She never spoke of her troubles (though she passed through some very sore trials), but patiently endured all her afflictions. I cannot but speak of the loving daughter, Miss Lizzie, who watched at the bedside of this aged mother, ministering, as far as possible, every want, until Jan. 12, 1892, when the Master said to his aged saint, "Come up higher."

D. P. HAMMOND, Pastor.—WALDRIP—Sister RACHEL WALDRIP was born in Amite county, Miss., in the year 1816, and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 26, 1892, at the home of her daughter (Sister Peery), in Freestone county, Texas.

In early childhood she gave her heart to God, and thus found peace in believing on Jesus Christ. At the time of her conversion she united with the M. E. Church, South, and in the communion of that church she ended her earthly pilgrimage. Between these dates there is much of unwritten history and years of faithful service for her Master. While she lived she lived to the glory of God, and in her death she triumphed over the last enemy, saying to her physician and friends that she was only waiting in sweet anticipation the will of him who she had so long served. Thus she lived, and in this frame of mind she left this mortal for the immortal.

As her pastor, we lay this tribute to her memory, believing we shall see her again, when all that is now hidden from us of her life of faith will be revealed in the light of a glorious immortality.

A. M. EUBANK.—HERRON—The subject of this notice, Bro. JERRY A. HERRON, was born near Coffeeville, Miss., May 12, 1832, and died in Canton, Miss., Feb. 22, 1892. On Nov. 22, 1859, he was married to Miss Sallie J. Montgomery, of Madison county, Miss. During the pastorate of Rev. W. R. Lewis at this place, in 1880, he connected himself with the Methodist Church. In 1882, when he had not yet reached his majority, he moved to Canton, where he spent an honest, useful and most exemplary life.

A man of business integrity, he held the confidence of all. It was a pleasure to deal with one so honest and honorable in all his dealings. While he was an exceedingly modest and retiring man, he was at the same time very pronounced in his opinions and deplored greatly the dissipation and evils of the day. He leaves a widow and four children to mourn his death and a community that recognize their loss.

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

McLAURIN.—Mrs. MARTHA J. McLAURIN was born Oct. 24, 1840; was married to William Wallace McLauren, Dec. 28, 1857. She was converted in early life and united with the M. E. Church, South, and continued through life faithful to her church vows and to her God. In all the relations of life she tried to do her whole duty. In affliction she was patient and cheerful; in prosperity she was grateful to the Giver of her comforts. She was a friend to the poor, abounding in hospitality, and was never so happy as when helping or ministering to some poor sufferer.

She trained her children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," and lived to see them all following her as she followed Christ, and members of the church that she loved so well. So, after serving her generation according to the will of God, she quietly passed away on Jan. 12, 1892.

H. R. CALDWELL.—A. C. Hammett, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. David's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. David's Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always with success. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

Living is death; dying is life. We are not what we appear to be. On this side of the grave we are exiles; on that, citizens. On this side, orphans; on that, children. On this side, captives; on that, free men. On this side, disgraced; on that, side, discolored and proclaimed as the sons of God.—Becher.

A More Extended Protest.

Recently I sent a protest, written on a postal card, against the unauthorized action of our "senior" Missionary Secretary in calling our congregations and our Sunday-schools to the observance of the so-called Easter. I wish to reiterate and emphasize that protest, notwithstanding there may be some of our preachers, as well as some of our members, who are rhetorically inclined. I am not unmindful of Rom. xiv, 5, 6, but mindful of Gal. iv, 9-11. My reasons for protesting are the following:

1. The name Easter is heathenish. Its use in Acts xii, 4, by the King James' translators, was wholly unwarranted. The Revised Version of 1881 uses the proper word, "Passover." Adam Clarke, in commenting on this verse, says with reference to the King James' translation: "Perhaps there never was a more unhappy, not to say absurd translation, than that in our text. But before I come to explain the word, it is necessary to observe that our term 'Easter' is not exactly the same with the Jewish Passover. This festival is always held on the fourteenth day of the first vernal full moon, but the Easter of the Christians never till the next Sabbath after said full moon; and to avoid all conformity with the Jews in this matter, if the fourteenth day of the first vernal full moon happen on a Sabbath, then the festival of Easter is deferred until the Sabbath following. . . . The term 'Easter,' inserted here by our translators, they borrowed from the ancient Anglo-Saxon service books. . . . The Saxon Easter, Eastre, Eastre, Eastra and Eitron are different modes of spelling the name of the goddess Easter, whose festival was celebrated by our pagan forefathers in the month of April; hence that month in the Saxon calendar is called Easter month. Every view we can take of this subject shows the gross impropriety of retaining a name every way exceptionable, and palpably absurd."

The Church of England just followed the example of her Roman mother, who, in the effort to be "all things to all men," not only adopted the day apart by the heathen Saxon for the worship of their goddess Easter, as Mr. Clarke shows, but, ignoring or not caring to ascertain the date of the birth of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, also seized upon the heathen Saturnalia, with its kindred orgies and debaucheries, and simply changed its names; and now in our day poses in India as the representative of Western Brahminism, having since adopted the Hindu rosary and images from almost every idolatrous nation in the world. The rapid strides the Church of England has been making of late years in the same direction are apparent to anyone who kept up with current history. Many in the Protestant Episcopal Church are not far behind their English brethren; and not a few in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are leaning in the same direction. The season is crowded with circuses, theatres, Germans and progressive euclores, until Mardi Gras caps the climax; then comes the ostentatious visiting of the poor and the doling out of old clothes—with or without the buttons—till Easter turns loose a flood-tide of dissipation again.

I know it is said that it is no use for any one man, or set of men, to try to change these things, and that our young people will be influenced by them, etc., but the same sort of argument is used by the saloon keepers and theatre-goers, et id omne genus; but, nevertheless, the watchmen upon the walls of Zion must deliver their own souls. And it is said that we must make use of Easter to keep our young people away from other folk's foolishness—that is, when you are in Rome, be as the Romans do. I had rather let our young people go than attempt to hold them to our onerous and unwholesome means. We are swiftly multiplying machinery at the expense of spiritual power, and rapidly taking on the form of godliness without the power thereof. May we awake before the Lord departs from us!

My second objection is based on the fact that our "senior" Missionary Secretary acted without warrant from the Board of Missions or General Conference—evidently encouraged by the action of our Woman's Board of Missions last year. No matter who set the example—no matter how many of our people may be methodically disposed and long for "the beautiful liturgy," etc., the act of the Missionary Secretary is to be deplored. As for myself, and as an itinerant preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, I protest against his action and this manifest movement towards ecclesiastical millinery and tomfoolery.

T. L. MELLE.

Work among the Wild Tribes.

MR. EDITOR: I met you at the General Conference, in St. Louis, nearly two years ago. You have been kindly sending the Advocate since. I have thought often that I would write and give you some account of our work here.

Four and a half years ago Bishop Galloway read me out for this work, and for a long while I was alone in this field of wild Indians. We have made some progress. We have now a membership of Indians and Mexican-Indians, of about sixty. We have two churches and two parsonages. One church and parsonage located here at this agency, and one down among the Comanches, twenty miles southeast. We will organize another church soon forty miles southeast, where we hope to build a house in a short while. Rev. J. J. Roland is in the parsonage twenty miles southwest, and is my assistant in this field. We have built and have in successful operation an Indian industrial school of sufficient capacity to accommodate 180 boarding pupils. This school belongs to the Woman's Board, and is proving a very efficient factor in the redemption of these perishing people. There is attached to the school 160 acres of good land granted by the government for farming purposes. This school is well supplied with good and efficient teachers and employees. In addition to the school work, the Woman's Board has two women here on this Indian reservation doing Bible and camp work—Mrs. Avant here, and Miss Brewster down among the Comanches. It takes singular faith and consecration to do this work; but these good women have measured up fully to it.

We have recently held a ten days' meeting, in which much interest was manifested. Sixteen accessions to the church; some interesting experiences. One Indian woman said: "This has been the greatest day I ever saw. The Lord has wonderfully blessed me. I shall never forget this day." It was a gracious time. Bro. Dodge, of Georgia, was with us in the power and demonstration of the Spirit.

Our mission here is rather at a crisis now. All over the reservation Indians are asking that some one come and tell them of this good way. But few of these calls can I answer. My hands are full, and more than full. Oh! how I need help here now! With reinforcements we could sweep this field now. There is a tide in the affairs of missions, as well as of men, which taken at the flood leads on to victory. It is very trying to one's faith and patience to see these opportunities come to view and pass away while we are powerless to avail ourselves of them. It might be of interest to tell your readers something of the life and habits of this singular people; but this I will do in a future article.

I would like to interest your readers in this work. We are bound by every sacred obligation of our holy religion to give these Indians the gospel. We can not go guiltless and fall to do so.

Some Notes and Suggestions Concerning Our Sunday-School Work in the North Mississippi Conference.

We have no more important church interest to maintain and promote just now than the Sunday-schools. Upon its efficiency depends, in large measure, success in every department of church work. The progress of this work within our bounds hitherto has been very gratifying. Invaluable good has been accomplished, and there is evidently growing interest in the cause; but much remains to be done for the complete fulfillment of its mission.

There is plenty of sentiment in favor of this institution, but a large proportion of it needs crystallizing into decisive activity; hence, what is mostly needed with us now is not mere mental assent by individual church members, or formal recognition by the preachers and church meetings, but such consideration, by all who are duty bound, as will stimulate thought and develop action worthy of so great a cause.

Let all concerned bear in mind that "the Sunday-school is legally and officially connected with the machinery of the church, from the individual congregation up to the General Conference," and that "legislative provision is made for its existence and control as an efficient factor in the working agencies of the gospel." Therefore, the responsibility of its maintenance and effectiveness rests, in a measure, upon all the church membership, but particularly on the ministers and official members. It devolves on them, collectively, as follows:

First. In the Church Conference to "inquire if the church can extend its work by establishing additional Sunday-schools."

Second. As a Quarterly Conference, they "shall be a Board of Managers, to supervise and superintend the interests of all the Sunday-schools within its bounds."

Third. As a District Conference, "to inquire particularly as to Sunday-schools and the manner of conducting them."

Fourth. As an Annual Conference, to "carefully inquire into the state and character of the Sunday-school work, and the best means of improving and promoting its interests."

It is made the duty of the presiding elders "to promote, by all proper means, the cause of Sunday-schools in their districts." This they can do by "taking care that every part of the Discipline" pertaining to this work "is enforced," and by holding District Sunday-school Conferences as recommended. It is the duty of preachers in charge "to organize Sunday-schools where ten persons (not children only) can be collected for that purpose; to appoint or nominate superintendents; to be present in all the Sunday-schools in their charge as often as practicable, and to make reports of the same to their Quarterly and Annual Conferences." Let all concerned read carefully Discipline, 1890; paragraphs 67; 72—item 3; 79; 86—item 3; 90, 1—3, 11—4; 112, 120, 132, 235 to 245, inclusive.

Brethren of the ministry and laity in the North Mississippi Conference, let us, each and all, individually and collectively, act our part to make the Sunday-school work a great power in the part of the Lord's vineyard that we are cultivating. Let us begin at once, if not already, and during this year give special attention to this cause in study, prayer and service. Let presiding elders and pastors give it due prominence in the District, Quarterly and Church Conferences, and emphasize and press the matter until we have in our Conference, at least, as many Sunday-schools as churches, and as many enrolled therein as there are church members. Let this be the aim this year, that we may not have to report to our next Conference, as to the last, at least sixty-two churches without a Sunday-school, and 20,000, or more (one-half), of the church members as not at all engaged in this line of their church work.

There are in our connection twenty-four Conferences that report as many, or more, Sunday-schools than churches, and five that report more members of the Sunday-school than church members. These do not include Mission Conferences. Let us labor and pray that our Conference may be added to both honor rolls this year.

Kosciusko, Miss.

Kill the "Leopard" or: A Strong Pull and a Pull All Together.

Macedonian hands are waving to us from the shores of Cuba, Venezuela, Siam and Africa. More formidable than mountain-ranges, rivers or seas, our debt blocks the way to them all. On this debt we are sinking eight or ten thousand dollars in annual interest—a sum sufficient to support a strong mission in Africa, or to place thirteen missionaries in other fields. Some of our noble laymen are having their credit impaired in the commercial world by endorsing our paper in the banks. These brethren could better afford to support a missionary each than have their credit thus discounted. Our secretaries have done splendid work in their laborious travels, and eloquent appeals at the Annual Conferences, thus very much reducing the debt by providing for the special support of many missionaries.

The Annual Conferences have all been held. The secretaries will now have to work on other lines. We, of the pew and pulpit, are too much inclined to lean back in complacent admiration of the zeal and devotion of the secretaries, and let them work out the problem, which they can no more do, without our earnest co-operation, than the children of Israel could make the best bricks without straw. If we can adopt some plan for a "strong pull" and a "pull all together," we can get up some morning and pay this debt off before breakfast. One hundred thousand dollars would be a very small amount for Southern Methodism to raise, if only one man in every hundred of her membership realized that he is not his own, that he has been "bought with a price," even the precious blood of our Savior.

We suggest to our secretaries the following plan: Start a general subscription, payable when the whole debt has been subscribed. Then urge Bishops, Mission Boards, pastors, editors, churches, Epworth Leagues, Sunday-schools and individuals to fall into line and throttle the "leopard" at once. There are earnest business men who will give $1,000 to extinguish the entire debt, who will not give $100 simply to reduce it.

The undersigned is willing to start such a subscription with $1,000, and will receive the names and amounts of all others who wish to subscribe. This is not a case of aim-giving, but a debt we owe to our Christ, to our church and generation. Therefore, it is not a question of mock modesty, but one in which we can provoke others to good works.

Which the Greater Blessing?

From every section of our State come applications to the secretary of Church Extension Board for aid in building. These petitions come regularly; sometimes so many as three a week. As the brethren send these in, I wonder if they remember the Master's words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If so, they are desirous of bringing untold benedictions upon his servants constituting the Board and the contributors thereto. To make it very clear I will say, "It is more blessed" at this time to "collect" than to "apply."

My brethren, let greater zeal characterize your efforts in raising this important collection, and be modest in your requests for assistance. Don't let your church pay $10 and then ask for $500.

We are doing all we can; but, Festina lente, which on interpretation meaneth, "Go slow." Last year our Conference paid 78 per cent. on the assessment, and ten charges made no report for church extension. We can do better than that, and then share the blessings.

Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to express through your columns my appreciation of the late action of the North Mississippi Conference in undertaking the support of our little family during the coming year. Mr. Waters will speak for himself later. It was gratifying also to hear through Dr. Walter Lambuth, in a letter which came by the last mail, that we have a "host of friends" in the dear old North Mississippi Conference. Born and reared in the bounds of that Conference; having claimed many of its number, from year to year, in days gone by, as pastor, presiding elder, friend, it is but natural that my heart should go out in especial interest and affection to the noble band who compose it. You may imagine how my eye glances over the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, when the United States mail comes in, to see if there are any notes or reports from the towns and villages and preachers that I knew and loved in the old days.

Our hearts and hands are full here, even though there is no especial awakening in this part of the field to report. The work advances steadily and slowly. In our Bible classes, Sunday-school classes, women's meetings, visiting, prayer meetings, here and there, day by day, we are trying to do what we can for this people and for Christ.

It was gratifying to hear Bro. Newton, who spent last Sunday in our midst, say that he could note advancement in the work here every time he came. There are many items which might be of interest were there time for particulars, but I must stop for tonight.

Again thanking the kind friends of the North Mississippi Conference, and with best wishes for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, I am,

Yours faithfully,

LULA LIPSCOMB WATERS.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, Aberdeen, Miss., March 25: "Great meeting in progress in our church here. The church is more consecrated than ever in the history of the town. Sinners are convicted and penitents powerfully converted. Bros. Inge, Whitehurst and Saunders will remain with us till the middle of next week, perhaps. Will write you more soon."

Rev. J. S. Oakley, Columbus, Miss., March 24: "Our church in Columbus is in a good condition. We have received seventeen members since Conference. Our protracted meeting will commence on Easter Sunday. (Will Bro. Mellen please pardon the Popish phrase?) The Rev. George S. Inge, a local preacher of this charge, will assist in the meeting. I have been down with the grippe nearly the whole of the year. Am still confined to my room."

Rev. G. Bancroft, Marion, Miss., March 23: "Thankful to-day that the outlook in this charge is promising. Our presiding elder, Rev. T. L. Mellen, held our first Quarterly Conference on the sixteenth instant. Held a class meeting before proceeding to business, which was enjoyable and profitable. He commended us in that the charge was so well represented. Like other places, we are experiencing some financial pressure. Have sent for Conference fund nearly half of amount assessed to this charge. It is a wise provision to pay something right away to our superannuates and widows and orphans of our brethren who have died in the work."

Rev. G. H. Jacobs, Olive Branch charge, North Mississippi Conference, March 21: "This is our second year on this charge. Last year the Lord was gracious to us. A number were added to the church; some family altars were erected. So we began this year in great earnest, and with a deep sense of the importance of the work, and, while we have been hindered in our work by rain, sleet and snow, we are encouraged to believe that we have made some advance. We are hopeful. We need church-houses very much, and we hope to build, at least, one this year. Money has never been so scarce here since the war. We hope, however, for an advance in every respect, and especially in spirituality. I have tried to circulate the Advocate, but, as yet, have failed. Shall continue. May the Lord bless you in your work!"

Rev. R. A. Meek, Carrollton, Miss., March 25: "Our first Quarterly Conference convened on the eleventh instant, and was most satisfactory in every particular. Bro. Thames, our esteemed presiding elder, was on hand promptly, and dispatched the business of the occasion with his customary skill. Bro. Hargrove, of Greenwood, was also present, and delighted us with one of his happy pulpit efforts. Though continued ill-health has greatly hindered me in my work, this charge has made some advancement during the past quarter. We have received three members on profession of faith. Attendance upon prayer meeting and public worship is good. All societies connected with the church are flourishing. Our stewards are now operating the Reynolds' system, and finances are well up. There are no better people than those whom I have the honor to serve."

Rev. T. B. White, Morgan City, La., March 22: "By God's blessings, I have kept up all my appointments; made 150 to 200 pastoral visits, and very many personal appeals, as I pass, to sinners to 'free from the wrath to come.' A number have been received into the church. Our congregations are large, increasing and serious; finances coming up; people hopeful, and we are looking for the baptism of fire. In May (third Sunday) we inaugurated a protracted revival meeting at Patterson under the leadership of Bro. Dodge, and from thence here the fourth Sunday. We hope to rally our forces, storm and route the devil at Patterson, and drive him down the bay, supposing he will make a bold stand and entrench himself at Morgan City; but, by the help of God, we will dislodge him and drive him into the Mexican gulf. Oh, that many may be captured from his army, and enlist under our Captain! Let prayer be made for us."

Rev. Irvin Miller, Walnut Grove circuit, March 19: "I was assigned to this circuit (as supply), Walnut Grove Church being taken off and put with Carthage and Walnut Grove. I am nearly through with my third round. Up to date have not missed a single appointment. Congregations good (when the weather permits); spiritual condition of the work improving; finances very tight; am using my utmost endeavor to raise the widows and orphans and worn-out preachers' collection; great deal of sickness and death; have lost some of our best members by death. La grippe and pneumonia is the prevailing disease. Bro. McDonald, our presiding elder, was with us at our first Quarterly Conference. Our people are delighted with him. He preached one sermon for us; profitable to all who heard it. Attendance of the official members was small, owing to the prevailing sickness; but we had a fine congregation (if it was on Monday)."

Rev. W. T. Currie, Live Oak, La., March 21: "Our first Quarterly Conference for the present year convened at this place on the nineteenth instant. Our worthy presiding elder, P. A. Johnston, was with us. It was the most interesting Conference I ever attended. More interest seemed to be taken by the stewards. The stewards made a liberal assessment for my support this year. Bro. Johnston preached three sermons that will tell for years to come. The Holy Spirit was felt. I had to preach at night on Sunday. It was a task to have to preach after a presiding elder; but the Holy Spirit was with me. We have two Sunday-schools now organized; three more that will soon commence work. I am learning to love my people more and more every day. When I came on the work I found no sash in the windows of the parsonage. I ordered the sash; asked the good people for help; they responded; we now have the sash in. The parsonage is not finished yet; but I expect before next Annual Conference to have it complete. Crops are backward on account of cold weather. Pray for us, that the Lord may still continue his blessing upon us."

Rev. R. B. Downer, Ellisville circuit: "There have been sixteen accessions, one death, two withdrawals and five removals since Conference. Spring collections have not been a success. Conference claimants, on its own merits, 'brought but fifteen instead of thirty-five dollars; but, as Sam Jones has it, I hope to 'get there' by Conference if the Joint Board will be patient. Our Juvenile Missionary Society at Ellisville has adopted Japan for its object of labor. Its members increase monthly. Bro. T. L. Mellen seems to object to 'Easter'; yet Acts xii, 4, mentions the day. Our Sunday-school at Ellisville expects to celebrate the day, and make it a profitable occasion. I have a prayer meeting at all the appointments, and all well attended. Sandersville Church is now out of debt, with new stove, pulpit, platform, chancel rail and communion table. The building will be painted within sixty days. Laurel Church has been celled. While much yet to be done, I am glad to report that we are moving forward. The town of Ellisville will have a $5,000 school-house and graded school by September or October. All of my Sunday-schools worked through the winter months—one without a stove."

Thy ignorance in unrevealed mysteries is the mother of a saving faith, and thy understanding in revealed truths is the mother of a saved knowledge; understand not, therefore, that thou mayest believe, but believe that thou mayest understand. Understanding is the wages of a lively faith, and faith is the reward of a humble ignorance.

THE CHIMES OF ST. BRANDON'S.

BY EDGAR MAYHEW BACON

When sailors, speaking the African strain,
Lie calm in Teneriff's purple shade,
They sometimes hear in the night a strain
Of sweetest music, by far bells made.

From o'er the ocean it comes, so low
And faint and far, where the sea bird's flight,
Or the sailor's lantern faintly glows,
Unchecked, unvarying, from night to night.

Somewhere on the misty line that dies
Within the folds of a starlit cloud—
Perhaps where the land of fable lies—
There stood in the past a city proud.

Its halls were marble, its domes were gold
And wet with the fountain's argent spray
Its pavements reached from the tide that rolled
On the western sea, to the gates of day.

St. Brandon's city was fair and fine;
But 'twas a temple and market wide—
Gave a lurch and sank in the gulfs of brine,
Beneath the thermometer's sunless tide.

The clanging bells in its towers strove
Till chimed were quenched in the rising sea,
And outward rolling surges drove,
Like an exiled spirit, their melody.

O, homeless music of Brandon's chimed,
How long do ye wander, seeking rest,
Entreating men like a poet's rhymes
And going as the wind goes, East and West?

Ye sailors, calmed on the tropic sea,
When waving bells ye faintly hear,
Then pray that your souls may never be Outcast and wandering year by year.

To G. T. V.

DEAR BROTHER: In the ADVOCATE, of March 10, you address an article to me, trying to reconcile geology and the Bible on the subject of the six days of creation by first accepting and then rejecting the six literal days theory.

You say first: "It has always been held by me, as by all people who have received the Scriptures in every age, that in Gen. 1 a day means day—an evening and morning of twenty-four hours; nor will any other view agree with the numerous places in God's Word where the days of creation are absolutely limited to a common literal day."

Well, if your statements were true, then I would not have written, for if you and all that accept the Bible were agreed as to the days of creation, there would have been no necessity for writing at all, for, with a united church, all the combined forces of infidelity could not overturn the Rock of Ages; nor can they, any way. But, if it is admitted by learned divines that the Bible does not mean what it says, when its statements are so plain, then we are at sea without rudder or compass, and the unlearned, and even the learned that have not thoroughly investigated for themselves, may lose faith in the Bible and conclude that it is all covered up in mysteries and hard to be understood; and if it does not mean what it says with regard to the creation, then its plain statements on other subjects may also be untrue or misunderstood. I believe the Bible means just what it says, and that its statements with regard to the creation are so plain that "a wayfaring man need not err." So, my dear brother, I must confess that I was surprised after you stated, as you did, that you, with all that accepted the Scriptures, believed in the six literal days theory; then to ask the question: "But must we fly in the face of demonstrated science, which shows, they say, by incontrovertible proof, that the body of this earth is thousands or millions of years older than the race that inhabits it?" And I want to answer, Yes, yes; a thousand times yes. Fly in the face of science, demonstrated or undemonstrated; the world, the flesh, the devil, or anything else; even fly in the face of our learned divines of modern times, who would change the plain statements of the Bible, just, I suppose, to let demonstrated science be true.

But you say further: "True science, as well as the Bible, both alike come from God, and, when understood, will agree. The trouble has come from making the earth no older than the race; the house no older than the dweller. This the Scripture never asserts, but just the contrary."

Well, I am ready to admit that true science, as well as the Bible, comes from God; but that science which contradicts the plain teaching of God's Word is not true science, and does not come from God. True science will harmonize with the Bible; and now I want to ask, Shall we test the Bible by the science of geology, or the science of geology by the Bible? Who would be willing to weigh the Bible in the balances of the science of geology, or any other science, and, because it does not harmonize, discard it? Surely no one. And yet we find some are doing it; and because it, the Bible, does not agree with the teaching of science, change its meaning and make a day, or an evening and morning, mean a thousand or, possibly, a million years. Why? Because, I suppose, they are afraid to risk their reputation on a disagreement with science, and hence they change the plain statements of God's Word to agree with science.

But you say further, "The trouble has come from making the earth no older than the race," etc.

Well, I do not know of anyone who does not believe that the earth is some older than the race. But how much older is the question at issue—one day, six days, or a thousand or a million years? And I would infer from your statements that you take the position with demonstrated science that the creation of the matter out of which the earth was made was thousands or millions of years before the six days of creation. But we are informed in Gen. 1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." "And the evening and the morning was the first day." Then the heavens and the earth were created the first day of the six, and not simply formed out of pre-existent matter. Why create the matter out of which the world was to be made thousands or millions of years, and let it lie in a chaotic state? Was it because God had not the power, or wisdom, or that he was not ready to complete the work? Surely not, for, doubtless, "he spoke, and it was done;" "he commanded, and it stood fast." No, it is simply a modified form of infidelity. Infidelity, or rather atheism, in its most rigid form would say that the matter out of which the world was made, existed from all eternity, and our modern scientist and some divines, not willing to go to that extent, would say that God created it, but he created it thousands or millions of years before the plain statements in the Bible put it.

Now, my brother, why is it that you stretch the first day of creation back through untold ages of eternity; back, back, back, indefinitely, to what period? I do not know; you do not say or fix any time; only that it was in the beginning and God's first work of creation. Well, my brother, I am left to conjecture as to what you understand the beginning in Gen. 1 to mean. Surely, not the beginning of eternity, for eternity, like God, has no beginning. Nor to the time in eternity when God first exercised his creative power, for surely God, the Eternal Three, would not have remained in solitude for all the untold ages of the past until he was ready to create our little world. Doubtless, there were myriads of angels before our little world had a place among the things of God's creation, and may have been myriads of worlds, so far as we know. Why do you think that our little world was the first of God's creation, or that the matter out of which our world was made was the first matter formed? God has revealed the creation of this world to us in his Word, but nothing of any other. He informs us that our world was created on the first day, and the sun, moon and stars the fourth day, and man the sixth. I wonder if any of them were created at the time stated by the sacred historian, or just made out of pre-existent matter. I wonder if the sun, moon and stars were created, or just made out of matter that had been in existence for ages.

Now, I believe the beginning in Gen. 1 simply refers to the beginning of time, or the first day of creation—that is, the creation of our world, or, in other words, that God, in the beginning of our world, created it, and that it did not come into existence by chance, as some would have you believe; hence the beginning refers to the first literal day of creation—the creation of our world. So, I suppose the heavens and earth are about, or nearly, six days older than the race. And, my brother, you not only contradict yourself and the Bible, but you misrepresent Dr. Clarke. If I understand you, you make him say the "word 'heavens' never in Hebrew refers to the starry heavens, but to our firmament." But Dr. Clarke does say the word "heaven" must, therefore, comprehend the whole solar system.

So, in conclusion, allow me to say, my dear brother, that I believe in six literal days, of twenty-four hours each, the heavens and the earth, and all that in them is, were created; and, furthermore, that no other theory will harmonize with the Bible, and that there is not an argument in the science of geology to prove to the contrary. So may God help us to take his Word as our counselor, and save us all.

Woman's Missionary Meeting, Meridian District.

On the afternoon of Friday, March 11, eight ladies and Rev. A. F. Watkins boarded the train at Meridian, bound for Shubuta, to attend the district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society. En route we were joined by several other delegates and friends, so that when we reached our destination there was quite a party to greet the crowd of ladies and Bro. Drake who had come to welcome us. Other delegates from the southern end of the road were already there, and when the roll was called sixteen societies responded by delegates and several others by written report. Rev. J. V. Penn preached a good sermon on Friday night, and on Saturday two business sessions were held. Miss Sallie Smylie, the efficient district secretary, presided, and the writer was elected secretary.

The reports from the different societies showed them to be in good working order and the monthly meetings generally well attended.

Our hearts were gladdened, almost at the opening of the session, by the following telegram from Mrs. L. H. Wimberly, our Conference president: "My heart is with you (see Phillips, II, 11)," to which the society responded: "Woman's Missionary Society returns greeting (Ephesians 1, 16-18)."

The Committee on Plan of Work introduced one clause into their report which I would like to emphasize: IV. That we insist upon the attendance of delegates at our annual meeting, etc.

Now, I am sure if all the districts in the Conference could have such a delightful meeting as was ours, there would be no trouble in getting delegates to attend either a district or an annual meeting. I fear our trouble in Meridian will be to decide which of the members who have already expressed a desire to go to Vicksburg in June shall represent our society.

At the afternoon session Miss Edwards, of Waynesboro, read a paper on an ably prepared subject, "Do They Understand?" and Mrs. Phillips, of the Baptist Missionary Society in Shubuta, told us of the workings of their societies throughout the State, showing our sisters of that church to be keenly alive to the importance of foreign missions.

On Saturday night the address of welcome was beautifully and impressively given by Mrs. Drake and responded to by the secretary. Then came the president's address—a thoughtful paper, well prepared and calculated to do much good. Miss Gauding, from the E. M. F. College, recited "The Maiden Martyr." Miss Gauding's fame as an elocutionist had preceded her and she won all hearts, the audience each time begging that she be prevailed upon to recite again.

On Sunday morning Bro. Drake, the pastor, preached a sermon full of earnestness, and at three o'clock Rev. A. F. Watkins talked in a style most happy to the children, and Miss Gauding delighted them with one of her inimitable recitations. Sunday night Mr. Watkins delivered a fine address, and Miss Gauding read a splendid paper on the "Scarlet Training-school." Miss Ellie Ormond read a touching poem, "Sister and I," and Miss Minnie Buntyn gave us some startling missionary figures.

Too much praise can not be given Miss Sallie Smylie, our district secretary. For months she has been working up this meeting amid many discouragements, and to her efforts the success and pleasure of the meeting is due.

Waynesboro was selected as the place for holding the district meeting next year.

Now, Mr. Editor, I suppose each delegate would say she was given the best home in Shubuta; but I am sure none could have been quite so delightful as ours with Judge and Mrs. Sioval. We were invited to dinner and to tea and treated so royally we all vote Shubuta a charming place, and have decided that the impression must prevail that "missionary ladies" like chicken and turkey as well as Methodist preachers.

MARY ANDREWS.

In Memoriam.

MRS. MARY G. WYATT.

Mrs. Mary Gentry Wyatt, oldest child of the Rev. J. D. Cameron, D.D., and Mrs. Anna E. Cameron, was born Oct. 11, 1839; was converted and joined the church in 1867; was graduated at Franklin College, Holly Springs, Miss., June, 1877; was married to Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of the North Mississippi Conference, Sept. 22, 1880, and died in Como, Miss., March 5, 1892.

The life thus briefly sketched and the beautiful character which adorned its every period were made possible by the divine blessing on careful Christian culture. The child was converted and professed it when eight years old. Her child-life was beautiful and remarkable for the Christian graces—truthfulness, obedience, obliquity and faith—unknown to those who know not the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. As she grew in years and ripened into womanhood, these graces were strengthened, and others, and yet others, were added until the delighted parents saw the prophecy of the child-life fulfilled in the Christian woman. When she became the wife of a preacher of the gospel of Christ, she brought the culture of the school, the refinement of a Christian home, and the treasure of a divinely cleansed heart, and gave them all to her husband to be used for God's glory and the success of his labors as a minister of the gospel of her Divine Lord. Her husband's work became her work. She had no projects of her own which were to be regarded as independent of her husband's great life-work; but in the home, in the pastorate, in the library, in the choir, everywhere she delighted to augment by prayerful effort the efficiency of his labors. She was a great worker. Her home, dressed by her hands, was a model of neatness and order. Her children were always to be admired, because they bore the marks of tender care. Yet she had time to teach music and study music and instruct the choir, and visit the sick, and help the needy, and receive gladly the friends who came within her open door. It is not strange that such a life should be crowned in death with superhuman brightness. The remembrance of her death and her last utterances will linger in the minds of the good and kind people of Como until they meet her under the tree of life by the river of life in the city of God. I will let one who was present speak of her last hours:

"On Thursday morning before her death she wanted to talk, but her husband, not apprehending any danger, discouraged her. After he left the room, she was seen to be weeping, as also again that afternoon. Calling her mother to her bedside, she said, 'Mama, I have so many things to say, but Mr. Wyatt does not want me to talk.' Upon being told it was for her good, she said, 'God is in this matter, and if he wants me to get well, I will recover; but if he wants me to go, I would go; I am ready for death and rest in Jesus, but I have a little family to arrange for, and so much to say.' All this took place before any fears were manifested by her physician or apprehension by her family for the result. Her physician giving his consent, she began to talk, continuing for about thirty hours. To each member of the family present she talked specially, and as one inspired, giving to each such a talk as was remarkably appropriate. Likewise to friends who called to see her, calling each to her bedside, exacting positive promises from each. Messages were sent to absent members of the family and to her many friends in the different churches served by her devoted husband. To him she said, 'Go on and preach the same sweet gospel,' and sent a like message to her absent father, who was kept back by delayed trains. She called all the members of her own family and those of her father's who were present, and had them kneel at her bed, and, placing her hand on the head of each, offered a most earnest, appropriate prayer. She requested that the family engage in a service of consecration around her dead body, saying, 'I will be with you in spirit.' She gave the minutest direction as to the care and training of her children; she selected yourself to conduct the funeral services, and named the hymns to be sung on that occasion. A few hours before her death she said, 'When I am crossing the last river, and can talk no longer, I will raise my hand.' When she had said many wise things to the family and friends present, and sent many precious messages to the absent ones which can not be written here, she said, 'I have said about all I wish to say,' and, turning to her physician, asked him for a sedative. She was quiet and unconscious up to within a few moments of her death, when, according to promise, she raised her hand and passed away. Through all there was the most perfect composure. To be in her presence while living was delightful; to be with her as she was dying was to be 'privileged' beyond the common lot of men."

May God bless her parents and husband and little ones, for whom she lived and prayed! Her prayers have gone on before and will be kept in everlasting remembrance.

Letter from Franklinton, La.

Thinking a short account of the progress of the little church in this place will prove interesting to the readers of your valuable paper, and to the members of the M. E. Church, South, especially, I feel encouraged to send this letter, hoping you will give it space in your columns. Centenary is a modest, but commodious little church of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. It is prettily located in Franklinton, the county seat of Washington parish, La. Franklinton is a small inland town of about one hundred inhabitants, remote from any railroad, its nearest point to any station being about twenty miles. Here, embosomed in the heart of the piney woods, the little church reposes undisturbed by the noise and turmoil of the outer world—a fitting place to sing our Maker's praise.

The church has a membership of about seventy, and has enjoyed the benefit of very able pastors. The present incumbent is Mr. Sullivan, who arrived here a little over two months ago with his charming wife and interesting little family, and has already proved himself to be the right man in the right place. He is a young man full of energy and love for his profession. He possesses a certain magnetism, which attracts alike both the old and the young. He has awakened a spirit of Christianity among the people out here which is very noticeable, especially among the younger portion. Many who formerly attended church merely as a diversion or break in the monotony of their lives, go there now to bear and to pray. Since his coming he has inaugurated regular Wednesday prayer meetings, which are very well attended, and the interest in which is perceptibly increasing.

Mr. Sullivan is an able preacher, possessing a rich sonorous voice, and is in every way qualified for the profession he has adopted. He has already received several converts into the church. His zeal is contagious, and his indefatigableness promises many an addition to the membership of Centenary Church. We have bi-monthly services—every first Sunday of the month in the morning, and third Sunday in the afternoon. The other Sabbaths Mr. Sullivan devotes to his other appointments in the parish. Our Sunday-school is progressing very well. Service is held here regularly every Sunday morning at nine o'clock, which is ably conducted by our venerable superintendent, Mr. Robert Babington. Although weighed down by the weight of more than three-score years and ten, Mr. Babington has lost none of the zeal in behalf of Christianity which characterized his earlier years. Always deeply interested, and an active worker and liberal contributor to any work pertaining to the upholding of the cause of the Almighty, he has, by persistent efforts and amid discouragements which would have daunted a less resolute spirit, continued the Sunday-school in this town and placed it on its present firm basis. His talks and application of the lessons are very edifying and interesting, which is testified by the undivided attention which he receives from those present. The Bible class enjoys the benefit of a very able teacher—the youngest son of our superintendent, Mr. C. S. E. Babington. Though a very young man, he is fully up to his task and he interprets the lessons in a clear, lucid and entertaining manner. The other classes are doing very nicely, and great interest is shown by the little folks in the work going on. The attendance, on the whole, is very good, almost every child within easy access of the church attending.

The Rev. Mr. Johnston, presiding elder of the Woodville district, last week attended the Quarterly Conference at Mt. Hermon Church, about twelve or fifteen miles from Franklinton, and before taking his departure for his home accompanied Mr. Sullivan here last Wednesday, and gave us a fine and practical sermon, creating a most favorable impression. He left soon after, everyone regretting that his stay was not longer and hoping soon to have the pleasure of again hearing him preach in Franklinton.

The outlook is so very encouraging and promises so much for the future that I feel as if I would like that the world should know something of the good work going on in our midst.

I will close, hoping God will prosper and continue the good that is being done among us.

Report of "The Little Workers" for March.

The society of "Little Workers" was organized Jan. 17, 1892. We have now thirty-nine members. We meet every Sunday evening regularly. The elective officers are president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. We conduct the meetings ourselves, reading the Scriptures, singing and praying. We often have recitations and missionary items by some of the members, and we hope to do a great deal in helping to send a Christ to those who know him not. We are working for Mexico, and want our money used in that needy field. We work for our money and pay a weekly due of five cents. We have on hand $23.75, and feel that while we work for the poor heathen, we are helping ourselves to a purer and better life. We love to work and are happy in the thought of doing something for the poor Mexicans.

JESSIE MCNAIR, Sec.

MR. EDITOR: The above report was read in our last Church Conference, and, thinking it might help the great cause of missions among your readers, I send it to you. Any of these thirty-nine children will pray in their meetings when called on. The effect of their work and lives is distinctly felt in our congregation. Twenty-four accessions to the church to date, and as many more have asked for prayers of the church.

J. W. WEEKS.

Brookhaven, Miss., March 21, 1892.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst says: We can preach about iniquity as it reveals and embodies itself in the poor, little, dirty, greasy, naked darlings in Africa, and nothing said; preach all day and take up a collection at the end and no comment made; taken for granted; those little heathen ebullies must be saved, fitted for heaven; and if they do not promise much for this world, try and secure a better chance for them in the next. But if you deal in the same Frank Saxon way with iniquity as it pervades associate life here on American ground in this city or State or county in this generation, you hazard your reputation as an evangelist, preacher, and render yourself obnoxious to the charge of an attempt upon a slap-trap sensationalism.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—April 3, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LA PRADRE.

Psalms 1, 1-6.

The Way of the Righteous.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful."—Psalms 1, 1.

The weight of authority favors the classification of the one hundred and fifty Psalms as given below.

"Part I. (1-xli) is the composition of David. Part II. (xlii-lxxii) is by David, compiled for the Temple worship by Hezekiah. The last twenty-one of this division are by David. Part III. (lxxiii-lxxxix) was compiled for the same purpose in the time of Josiah. Part IV. (xc-xvi) was compiled during the captivity. Part V. (cvi-cl) is miscellaneous. Of this part, seventeen are by David and one (cx) by Moses."

The Psalm of our lesson appropriately opens the book. The righteous and the wicked—the character, conduct and destiny of both—are set before us—God with the righteous, God against the wicked. The blessedness of the good is seen in his delight and his prosperity. His character is indicated by his associations and by the sources of his pleasure.

Ver. 1. The ungodly furnish the life-plan; the sinner companionship; the scorner the habit of thought, of the wicked. Downward the tendency. From walking to sitting, from ungodliness to seething. First, God left out of life-plan; then the sinner taken into it; then atheism. "O, the blessedness of the man" who starts not in that way! This is a negative description of the good man: "So far, well—but how does he order his life? Wherein is found his joy? The next verse gives answer."

Ver. 2. "In the law of the Lord." Here he finds counsel, instruction, plan of life; here association, for, to the reverent spirit, God is in his law, and holds communion with the devout reader of it. Hereby his "mouth is filled with excellent wisdom, so that he speaketh the things that are good." Wonderful things, that give gladness of heart, he finds therein, and "day and night" he feeds upon his riches. (See Psalm cxix, 14-16.)

Ver. 3. The rainfall of the summer months in Palestine is small, so that the difference between vegetation by the water-courses and on the uplands is more marked than with us. So the figure would be exceedingly expressive to the Jews. Like a "tree planted"—the spot chosen, with reference to its needs; "by the rivers of water" (or canals, if artificial, as the original indicates) where the supply is constant and sufficient; a fruit-bearing tree (see the fruitless tree and its fate, Mark xi, 12-14; 20, 21), regularly fruitful, not occasionally so; comely, too, its leaves green and fresh—a useful, healthy, beautiful tree, fit symbol of a man the springs of whose life are in God. To such a man all things bring good. He prospers always; not apparently so at times, but really so as God sees things. What the world calls prosperity is often a curse—at best it is not permanent if God is left out of the life. The wicked man is like a tree also. (Read about him in Psalm xxxvii, 35, 36.)

Next we have the character, state and end of the wicked.

Ver. 4. "Not so." Not in character, nor in God's favor, nor in final prosperity. Not wise in choice of counsel, nor choice of associates, not habits of thought. Self-sufficient, or full of worldly wisdom; regardless of God's law; finding delight in pleasures; not planted by God, nor led by the constant supply of his grace; not fruit-bearing unto righteousness; foolish, vain, trashy, "chaff," fit for neither food nor seed; fanned away in the winnowing because trashy; his worthlessness determines its destiny. If it had been kept, it would have been worthless still—only chaff after all.

Ver. 5. "Therefore," because he is worthless, he can not stand investigation. "Weighed—found wanting." Ranking high, perhaps, among men, but "chaff" as God sees things. Wanting in qualities that God values, he "shall not stand"—or, "pass," as we express it commonly—"in the judgment." Thrust to one side, he can not take his place with God's elect, in the congregation of the righteous.

Ver. 6. "Knoweth"—approves, as well as understands. Men may have despised or approved; no matter, so God approves. He understands. Their "ways" were "committed unto him" from the first. He directed them; he was consulted all along, and now, at the end of it all, he approves. "Well done, good and faithful servant.... enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "But the way of the ungodly shall perish." Why not? Who is to keep it alive—and what for? Worthless, or worse, why perpetuate it? How can it be perpetuated, when the whole plan was with reference to this world only. Why should God put forth his strength to perpetuate a plan that produces all chaff and no wheat? Verily, "the wages of sin is death." Verily, "he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

TENDER MEMORIES

Of Mary Cameron Wyatt, wife of Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of the North Mississippi Conference.

This dreary Saturday eve
I sit at my bedside, lone and sad;
The very heavens seem to grieve,
To weep at the raindrops fell, for the glad,
The sweet, pure life, so calm, so bright,
That was taken from earth on yesternight.

I think of the husband's loss,
Of the three sweet girls and the baby boy;
How heavy, how crushing seems the cross
Which is called to bear, and the innocent joy
So suddenly swept from sweet child-life
I know not which to mourn most—mother or wife.

Other loved ones I see around
The solemn grave—three sisters, loving and true,
Who, with aching hearts, watch the growing mound
That hides the dear form of their sister from view.

I see the fond father, the heart-broken mother,
Through his form not there, the fond heart of brother.
"Oh! why was she taken from earth?"
I cried, as the aching sympathy grew in my heart.

Alas! so sad does it seem, that from birth
Unto death we, with our best treasures, must part.
The house seems so lonely, the earth full of grief,
I turn to the past with a hope of relief.

Then tender Memory came,
And brought retrospection, her magical brush
Dipped in colors of love. Though she seeks not fame,
With skilled fingers she painted, in sweet, solemn hush:
Retouched with the deftness of genuine art
The pictures that hang in my aching heart.

She paints a bright morn in May:
A sweet-faced girl, with clear, tender eyes;
Shall I call them hazel, or are they grey?
No matter; they seem both merry and wise.
Her sixteen bright years she bears with grace,
And carries the May-time in her face.

Aglow the morning dawns bright,
And the glow of September, so soft and so sweet,
Hallows all things with its glamorous light.
Many flower-laden hands and hurrying feet
Haste to the church in old Holly Springs;
Surely May has returned on September's wings.

I enter the portal wide;
See the stately urn in the altar stand,
Filled with flowers for the fair young bride,
Cooled and placed there by loving hands,
And the light o'er all—what a charm is given!
Being half of earth and half of heaven.

Calm at the altar stands
The man of God, and awaits the pair.
Impressive his words as he joins their hands;
But a tremor comes in his deep voice there,
For he feels the greatest trial of life—
The father is making his child a wife.

The sun rose clear and bright
As the noble groom and the fair young bride
Emerg'd from the doorway into the light
Of that joyous day, and its joy abides
Through half a score of years, each day
Seeming ever morn and ever May.

On a bright December morn,
And the last I can see of that happy life,
She came to my home with her youngest-born
(A fair, sweet babe), still a happy wife,
And I read in the look on her husband's face
His tender pride in her matrimonial grace.

Two dark-browed sorrow comes
And obscures the light by Memory given.
My thoughts will turn to the stricken home,
Though my heart would turn to heaven.
My sister comes in with tearful face
And tells of the triumph of dying grace.

Then Faith takes Memory's place,
And with bright bow of promise, paints fairer scenes.
Which time e'er not dim nor sorrow efface.
To her eye the veil of the flesh intervenes
Between earth and the land of glory and love;
Between earth's darkened homes and the mansions above.

No shadow darkened the way
Through the valley of death as Mary passed over.
The Savior she had trusted in life's young day
Had guided and lighted so many before.
As he lifted the veil, she gave him her hand,
And together they stepped on the eternal strand.

Together they reach the gates,
The gates of pearl that stand open wide,
Where a bright-browed seraph eagerly waits
With a robe and a crown on the inner side.
A snow-white robe, as the sainted wear,
And a glittering crown for her golden hair.

Let Faith paint your skies,
O, sorrowing ones, she is free from care.
Though the light of her earth-life has gone from your eyes,
She, so fitted for heaven, is most at home there.
Her glad life here but foretells the dawn
Of eternal May and eternal morn.

Her loving friend, IRVING V. HOOPER,
Saville, Miss., March 10, 1892.

IN MEMORIAM.

M. J. D.,
My "Bonnie Jean,"
A Faithful Wife and Mother,
Died December 3, 1891.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."
In life's sweet spring, her golden sheen,
I loved and won my "Bonnie Jean."
Nor later, sweeter graced, I ween,
The church nor hall;
I wept and crowned her thus, my queen
Of hearts, o'er all.

'Twas on November's first-born day,
The brightest of the year away,
When "All Saints" for all sinners pray,
"Christ's golden prayer,"
From which I pray some heaven-sent ray
Fell o'er us there.

Believe us, all unknown, untried,
Life's wilderness stretched far and wide;
But hand in hand, and side by side,
We took our way,
My "Bonnie Jean," my star and guide,
And I her stay.

O'er life's fair fields we wandered, long,
Mid fruits and flowers, friends and song,
Till weary grown of life's gay throng
We strayed away,
And rest and quiet sought among
The old and gray.

And closer now unto my side
I drew my weary "Star and Guide,"
But, oh! fell Death claimed her his bride,
His long-sought prey;
And o'er eternity's dark tide Bore her away.

But bright upon her dear, dead face,
His eye hand, with mystic trace,
Lifted her still in life-like grace
The smile she wore
When happy in her pride of place
In days of yore.

And now, heart-stricken, old and gray,
Nor star to guide my weary way;
Across life's wilderness I stray Alone, unseen!
Awaiting God's appointed day,
My "Bonnie Jean."

An International Sunday-School Building at the World's Columbian Exposition.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the International Sunday-School Convention, and also at the Conference of the Sunday-school Workers, held at Chautauque, New York, in August, 1891, it was unanimously decided to request the Sunday-school workers of America to unite in the erection of a model Sunday-school Building upon the "World's Fair Grounds," in connection with the "Columbian Exposition," to be held in the city of Chicago, in the year 1893.

It is proposed as follows:
First. To exhibit a model Sunday-school Building as an illustration of our work and as a specimen that may be copied by others.

Second. In this building by maps, charts, plates, tables, pictures, books, papers, etc., to show the present condition of Sunday-school work in different parts of the world.

Third. To illustrate the growth and progress of Sunday-schools. For example:

The earlier methods of teaching that may be properly grouped with Sunday-school work.

The beginning of modern Sunday-schools in England.

Present methods of Sunday-school work in Great Britain and all the English colonies, and on the Continent of Europe and throughout the world; as conducted by the London Sunday-school Union, the French Sunday-school Union, and other national societies, and by the different denominations.

Pioneer Sunday-school work in America, as conducted by the American Sunday-school Union; as conducted by the different denominations; as promoted by conventions, institutes, etc.

Advanced methods of organized Sunday-school work, as carried forward by the International, State, Provincial and Territorial organizations; and by the different denominations; and by Primary Unions, Union Teachers' meetings, normal classes, and the Loyal Sunday-school Army.

The International Lesson system, as shown by the work of the committee; and by the work of the publishers of Sunday-school papers, magazines, quarterlies, lesson rolls, cards, pictures, books, maps, charts, banners, black-boards, etc.

Practical methods in Sunday-school work.—Teachers' meetings and training classes; normal classes in the Sunday-school; primary classes and Kindergarten methods; libraries, best books and systems; boys' brigades and mission hands; industrial school connected with Sunday-schools; home classes connected with Sunday-schools; systematic house to house visitation, etc.

Fourth. To use the building as a "Sunday-school headquarters and reception room" during the Exposition, and, if possible, to use it as a "headquarters for colporteur work" and "personal Christian work" on the ground.

To arrange for holding special Sunday-school Conferences and talks; addresses by well-known and qualified workers in various departments of Sunday-school work; and to use it for such other purposes as may be determined by the International Executive Committee.

PLANS FOR THE BUILDING.

It is proposed to offer premiums of $500, $250, $150 and $100, respectively, for the four best plans of a building, the awards to be made by a committee appointed by the International Sunday-school Executive Committee; the plans chosen to be the property of the committee, and to be placed on exhibition in the building.

TO PROVIDE THE MEANS.

It is proposed to raise the sum of $25,000 for the building, and an additional sum for expenses, by contributions from Sunday-schools and individuals, the collections to be made as follows:

Each Sunday-school is requested to give an amount equal to not less than ten cents for each officer and teacher, and one cent for each scholar connected with the school. (This is the smallest amount, and schools are requested to give a larger amount, if able to do so.)

Contributions of not less than one dollar, and for as large an amount as possible, to be solicited from individuals.

Engraved certificates, containing a picture of the building, will be sent to each school contributing not less than the amount named above, giving the name and location of the school and the amount given toward the building. And similar certificates, will be sent to all individuals contributing one dollar or more. All contributions will be acknowledged by mail and a record of the names of all schools and individuals, and the amount given by each will be kept in the building during the fair.

THE TIME FOR TAKING COLLECTIONS.

It is suggested that the Sunday-schools in the United States that hold winter sessions take their collections upon April 10, 1892 (Easter Sunday), or as near this date as possible, and the schools that do not hold winter sessions take their collections as near July 4 as possible.

That the Canadian Sunday-schools take their collections upon April 10, 1892 (Easter Sunday), or upon the Sunday nearest the Queen's birthday (May 24), or as near these dates as possible.

As the Building Committee will need all the time they can obtain for the perfection of their plans, etc., prompt action is requested from all contributors.

WHERE TO SEND THE MONEY.

The special committee appointed at Chautauque to take charge of the matter has selected R. W. Hare, a well-known business man of Chicago (also treasurer of the Illinois State Sunday-school Association), to act as treasurer of the building fund. Therefore all contributions to the "World's Fair Sunday-school Building" should be forwarded to R. W. Hare, treasurer, No. 240 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

In sending your contribution give the name of your Sunday-school, the place where it is located, the denomination to which you belong, the total number of officers and teachers, the total number of scholars (all ages) and the amount of your contribution.

When contributions are sent from individuals give the name and address of each person who contributes one dollar or more, and the amount given by each.

CO-OPERATION SOLICITED.

The earnest co-operation of all the officers and members of the Executive Committee of State, provincial, territorial, county or parish, and township organizations, and all pastors, officers and teachers engaged in Sunday-school work, is solicited.

In behalf of the International Sunday-school Executive Committee.

B. F. JACOBS, Chairman.

Good Advice.

In winter more exercise is required for the body than in summer. Wear warm underclothing, material of open texture is preferable.

Avoid catching cold, but should you develop a cough take immediate steps to get rid of it.

The most effective remedy for coughs or colds is Marsden's Pectoral Balm; it is pleasant to take and never fails to cure.

Ask your druggist for it, and don't be persuaded to take any other instead.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. I relieved me of that fat, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass. N. B. Be sure to get only

DON'T DELAY TO

Stop that cough! Else the bronchial tubes will be enlarged and the delicate tissues of the lungs exposed to injury. No other medicine is so speedily operative in throat and lung troubles as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few doses have been known to break up an obstinate and distressing cough. Sufferers from asthma, bronchitis, croup, consumption, sore throat, and whooping cough find a sure relief in the use of this preparation. It soothes the inflamed membrane, promotes expectoration, and does not irritate the system. Don't be without it in the house. Sallie E. Stone, Hurt's store, Va., writes: "I have found, in my family, that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was always a certain cure for colds and coughs."

"Five years ago I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and had been given up by my physicians. I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and was completely cured."—Angus A. Lewis, Ricard, N. Y.

BRIEFS.

Rev. Dr. Teofilo Gay, pastor of the Waldensian Church in Rome, is in the city in the interest of his church, and will address the people in Carondelet Street Church, next Sunday, April 3, at four P. M. We hope Dr. Gay will have a large audience. He is an interesting speaker and commands attention from beginning to close.

Our District Conferences are coming on, and we trust that the presiding elders will so arrange the order of business as to give ample time to consider the advancement of the official paper in each district. There can hardly be anything of more importance. The ADVOCATE helps every other line of church work, and when there is so much opposition every pastor and member should use all the helps possible. By a united effort at all the District Conferences very much can and will be done.

The American Bar Association at its annual meeting, last August,

Resolved, That it is the sense of the association that the government of the United States should provide, at the earliest possible moment, for courts and a system of law in and for the Indian Reservations.

A petition asking Congress for the passage of such a law has been left in our office for signatures, and we will afford anyone the opportunity of signing who may wish to do so. It seems that some such action should be taken for the relief of a people who have been treated as we have treated the Indians.

If you divide eight hundred and fifty dollars among one hundred and seventy preachers, they will have five dollars apiece. If one hundred and seventy preachers owe one man five dollars apiece, that makes eight hundred and fifty dollars. In the first case it don't amount to much. In the second case it amounts to a good deal. For one subscriber to owe the paper two dollars is not much, but when one thousand subscribers owe two dollars apiece, the debt to the publisher is two thousand dollars, and that is very much. Then let each one who owes send the money forward, and there will be great relief.

There is to-day no subject of so much importance to the people of God as the evangelization of the cities. The cities are the great centers of commercial, political and social power, and on these lines the influence is felt in all the land. It is the duty of the church to make them the centers of religious power that will send out influences for good to every nook and corner of the land. The cities evangelized and saved means new impulses to commercial life, a purification of politics, a sanctifying of social relations and the country lifted up into that "righteousness which exalts a nation." And if there is a place on the globe where such work is needed, it is this "ungodly city of New Orleans." What are we doing for it?

New Orleans District Conference.

A PREFATORY WORD.

Next week the New Orleans District Conference will convene in Carondelet Street Church in this city. The Conference will open at ten A. M., Thursday, and will continue through the week. We exhort all delegates to arrange their temporal business so as to allow them to give full time to attendance upon the Conference and its work. We suppose there is not one delegate in the whole district who can not do this. The Conference work should come first during the Conference sessions. By attending conscientiously to this during the time appointed, we will show a proper appreciation of the church and honor Christ who is the Head of the church, and thus honoring him, we may be sure that our temporal affairs will not suffer while we are doing the legitimate work of the church. Besides this, having been "counted worthy" to be put in these places of honor and trust by the authorities of the church, each member of the Conference should count it a high privilege to give a few days of special attention to church affairs.

The Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference purpose to hold the missionary anniversary provided for in the Discipline, and this promises to invest the Conference with a new and special interest. Bro. Frank Parker, the secretary of the Conference Board, has prepared a fine program for the occasion. By invitation of the Board, Dr. W. R. Lambuth, one of our missionary secretaries, will be present, and also Dr. J. M. Weems, former missionary to Mexico. The whole field of missions, foreign and domestic, will be reviewed, and the occasion will be one of great interest.

We hope our people will turn out en masse to the sessions of the Conference. Their presence will not only give tone to the work done, but will give the community an idea of the unity and force of Methodism.

C. W. CARTER, P. E.

A Plea for Cheerful Christianity.

Sam Jones once pertinently remarked that the matter with a great many professing Christians was they had liver complaint instead of religion. Any one who has an intelligent acquaintance with, and an experimental knowledge of religion, is constrained to set the seal of affirmation to the principle involved in this utterance, if not to the phraseology.

The long, solemn face with which some persons go about their business and the downcast eye and funereal countenance with which they attend upon the ordinances of the church have a tendency to create the impression that religion is something simply to be endured, not sought after. It is the greatest disparagement that can be cast upon the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ by his avowed followers. It is as if they were longing for the onions and garlic and flesh-pots of Egypt, having found the manna from heaven unsavory, and the immediate presence of their Lord unacceptable.

The Lord tells us the kingdom of heaven is within us. Paul says the religious experiences God graciously gives us here are but foretastes of the inexpressible in store for us over yonder. This being true, the lives and countenances of some of the Savior's professed followers might indicate that the crystal river, murmuring at the roots of the trees of life in the New Jerusalem, is but an accumulation of the tears gushing from the eyes of the redeemed. Of all the people in the world the Christian should be the happiest, should have the brightest countenance, the cheeriest voice, the most elastic step, the heartiest grasp of the hand. Why? Because once they were strangers and aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. They were wretched, and miserable; poor and blind, and naked. Now they have been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb. They are the children of a King. They are heirs of all things. The Lord has sworn by himself, and will not repent, that he will protect them and supply all their needs. To Israel he said in her representative capacity as well as to her as a nation, "He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of mine eye." And the Apostle Paul seconded the key-note of the Lord's care over his children when he said, "But my God shall supply all your need."

But who is this God? Imagination may take her boldest sweep into that eternity which was, but she can never reach that period when the Christian's God did not exist. She may whirl upon her lofty wing and dart with the velocity of thought for millions upon millions of ages into that eternity which is to come, but she can never reach a period in which God will not exist. The human mind may exercise itself in the contemplation of the divine attributes as revealed to us both in nature and Scripture; but when it has gone to the ultimate limit of human endurance, it falls palsied on but the threshold, murmuring the exclamation of that grand old Arabian chief, "Lo! these are parts of his ways; . . . but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

Christians,

"This awful God is ours;
Our Father and our love."

Why, then, should the children of a King go mourning all their days? The universe of God's hurls back the unanswered question, "Why?"

What the world wants, what the heart cries out for, what humanity must have, is a bright, happy, joyous religion. It has sorrow and sadness enough of its own. We are to "shine as lights in the world," and not cast shadows. Let us, then, as Christians, by our happy lives and beaming countenances, point a sorrowing and suffering world to him who said, "I will give you rest."

Mr. Spurgeon and the American Baptists.

Since the death of the great London preacher, whose broad catholicity and ecclesiastical liberality gave him highest honor among evangelical Christians throughout the world, the Baptists of America are claiming special possession of his name and fame. They boast of his having been a Baptist, and cover themselves with the glory of his great memory. Efforts are made to explain away his doctrinal inharmonies on the communion question, and the assertion is heard that had he come to America he would have been a strict communionist. Some of these explanations are at once ludicrous and at variance with the facts. And, at least, one this writer has heard is a reflection upon his ability as a theologian and his character as a Christian. Mr. Spurgeon, over his own signature, repudiated the theory of strict communion, and throughout his wonderful pastorate at the Tabernacle uniformly invited all Christians present to join his congregation in the sacramental service. And when his health finally failed, he and his church invited Dr. A. T. Pierson, a Presbyterian minister of Philadelphia, to serve as their temporary pastor, performing, it is to be supposed, all the duties of his responsible position. And at last, when the eloquent voice was hushed and the great-hearted pastor fell on sleep, the funeral services in the Tabernacle were conducted, not by a Baptist, but by Dr. Pierson, who paid a noble tribute to the grandest preacher of the evangelical pulpit for a full generation. On one occasion he used these emphatic words: "Do you suppose for a moment that I could sit down to a communion table that separated me from my loving, Christian mother, who taught me the divine truths of God's infinite love and mercy on her bended knee? No, never!"

The Rev. John B. Gould, now a resident of Newton, Mass., and from 1869 to 1879 a resident of England as consul at Birmingham, contributes to the New York Christian Advocate, for March 17, the report of an interview with Mr. Spurgeon on this subject. It is reproduced as follows:

On one occasion it was our privilege to hear this great divine in his own pulpit, the sermon being followed by the sacrament. All Christians present were requested to occupy the body of the house while Mr. Spurgeon and his brother officiated. Fully three thousand remained, and it was one of the most impressive of services. That we might have a perfect view of the scene, with a companion, we passed around into the great gallery behind the pulpit, where we sat alone. When the service was ended the two brothers came up the long aisle of the gallery on their way to the study. We rose and said to Mr. Spurgeon that we represented the American consulate at Birmingham, and were glad to have had the opportunity of being present on that occasion, and had remained to take him by the hand. His first words to us were: "Why did you not come down and commune with us?" Such a question had never greeted us in America. Mr. Spurgeon then said: "Come into my study; I would like to talk with you."

After some pleasant conversation we said: "Why do you not visit America? Your sermons are read extensively there; your people would be delighted; and you would have a royal welcome by all."

He replied: "I shall never go to America."

Being reminded that he frequently visited the south of France for his health, and that a voyage across the ocean would, no doubt, benefit him, he replied: "Do you know that my people over there do not wish me to come? They think I am a devil."

"A devil!" we replied. "What do you mean by that?" He said: "You know that I believe in and advocate open communion, and I have had committees wait upon me and say that if I visited America I would 'scatter fire-brands and death' among them, and while they were glad to call me a Baptist on this side the water they did not wish me to disturb their peace at home. Therefore, I shall never visit America."

He could not preach where he could not commune. And thus we talked long and freely on this and other subjects, and there is no doubt that this was the reason why our people were never favored with the presence of this great-hearted man in American pulpits.

The following extract from a London paper will be read with mournful interest by all who attended the Ecumenical Conference at Washington and those who kept posted with its daily proceedings. It can but be regretted that the fears of Mr. Atkinson's nearest friends at the time were not generally known. If so, the disorder of one or two sessions would not have occurred. Our Primitive Methodist brethren would not have taken offense at the utterances of Mr. Atkinson. We learned from Mr. Arthur and others during the Conference, that when in health he had been a tower of strength in Wesleyan Methodism, and freely gave of his large wealth to the great enterprises of the church.

A Nice telegram, dated Monday night, says Mr. H. J. Farmer-Atkinson, M. P., for Boston, had a painful seizure yesterday in an hotel here. He became suddenly unwell, then ungovernable, raved furiously, and attacked a commissary of police who was sent for. This morning, upon the certificate of a local doctor, he was admitted to an asylum as a furious madman. His relatives have been communicated with.

Mr. H. J. Farmer-Atkinson, it will be remembered, has been very eccentric in manner for some time, and caused considerable sensation recently by his speeches at the great Wesleyan Conference in the United States. Last Summer his conduct in the House of Commons brought about his temporary suspension. In the shipping and also in the Wesleyan world Mr. Atkinson was a great man. He has been mayor of Hull, of which town he is a native, president of any number of shipping associations, and director of several public companies. In appearance he would pass for a replica of John Wesley, and is some sixty-five years of age.

The Late Election.

SOME REFLECTIONS.

The primary election held recently in this State affords occasion for some reflections. Last November primaries were held to select delegates to a convention to nominate candidates for State officers. The lottery was the dividing line in the Democratic party, and the question was, lottery or anti-lottery. Both sides claimed to have won, and the consequence was two tickets were put in the field—a lottery ticket and an anti-lottery ticket—and both sides went to work with earnestness to elect their men. Before the campaign had proceeded far, the United States Supreme Court decided that the Anti-lottery Postal law was constitutional; and thereupon the Lottery Company withdrew from the contest. This left the Democrats with two tickets in the field, and apparently no ground for division. The two factions, after consultation, agreed to leave the selection of a ticket to the white Democratic primaries, the selection to be made between the two tickets already in nomination. It was for the purpose of testing the sentiment of the people on this point that the election was held March 22. The campaign was rigorously prosecuted by both factions and much bitterness was engendered. The election was one of the closest that we have ever known in Louisiana. In this city the ticket selected to run the lottery clause into the State Constitution had a majority of 11,173. When we take into consideration the hordes of people here who live on the crumbs from the lottery table, this majority can be easily accounted for. The wonder is that it was not larger. Now, in the country parishes the very opposite is seen. The ticket put out by the influence of the lottery was repudiated by a very large majority. The parishes voting the lottery ticket had a majority of about 3,500, while the parishes voting the anti-lottery ticket had a majority of about 15,000. This shows that the people of the country are about five to one opposed to men for office who were put in the field in the interest of the Lottery Company, though that company has ostensibly withdrawn. They have spoken in no mistakable terms on the question of whether they favor a gambling clause in the Constitution and whether they will select men for office who do favor that clause. All honor to our countrymen who have spoken so nobly in this matter! We hope they will continue to grow strong enough after while to redeem even the Augean stable of politics that pollutes this city with its foulness.

The Committee of Seven to canvass the returns had not decided which ticket was elected at the time of our going to press.

They that spend their days in faith and prayer shall end their days in peace and comfort.—J. Mason.

NOTES.

An exchange says that though the saloon license fee has been doubled in Philadelphia, there is no diminution of the number of applicants for license. The saloon keeper don't care for high license; he makes the drinker pay it.

We are indebted to Dan Talmage, Sons, New York, for a beautiful little pamphlet on "Rice—The Greatest of Grains." We presume this little book will be appreciated by many Louisianaians who are engaged in rice culture, as it is a brief history of that culture and contains many valuable hints on the subject.

Of important lessons to Christian ministers, Bro. Dubose, of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, says, "this is the sum:"

Let the man of God abjure partisan politics; let him forever speculation in real estate; let him keep out of the courts; let him not be too anxious to know "the dark side" of city life; let him not undertake to regulate municipal governments as a minister; let him stick to plain gospel preaching.

There is one thing which the fathers and mothers in Methodism formerly did which the fathers and mothers in Methodism to day do not do to any great extent. The old-time Methodists read very extensively the biographies of religious men and women, and such reading had a powerful influence on their lives. To-day we do not believe this is done much. "Light literature" is all the fashion now, and its influence is seen also.

A writer in the Free Methodist has this anecdote:

Some little time ago I was in company with a number of ministers when this subject of sermon paternity was on the tapis. One indignant young brother rose to his feet, and cried, with accompanying gesture, "If I were accused of preaching another man's sermon, I would give the lie to the accusation by publishing the sermon." An old veteran in the corner of the room looked slyly up, and dryly exclaimed, "Yes, if it were your own." The young brother had nothing more to say.

The United States Supreme Court has decided another point in the Anti-Lottery Postal law. An advertisement of a lottery was mailed in New York and received in Illinois. The court decided that offenses against the law are triable in the State where the matter was mailed, or in the State where it was received, or anywhere along the road through which the letter passed. The sender was convicted. No wonder John A. is piteously begging for mercy. He and his associates in the most outrageous wickedness of modern times see visions of prison walls in many directions, and not a loop-hole by which to escape. The last steps of justice have been swift as well as tremendous.

The publishers of the Atlantic Monthly—Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston—have specially favored us with the advance copy of an article to appear in the April number of that magazine, by the late Chief Justice of Michigan, Hon. Thos. McIntyre Cooley, on "Federal Taxation of Lotteries." Judge Cooley gives the subject a most fair and thorough discussion, weighs carefully in his judicial mind the arguments for and against federal taxation of lotteries, and reaches the firm conclusion that such taxation is constitutional, and says "the time to tax is now." So let Mr. Little push his bill through Congress, and thus cut off the head of the viper before it strikes another blow.

Amidst those churches which have not paid their pastors, the Mid-Continent quotes from an article published several years ago in a church paper the following:

How the church ought to labor in the revival in common honesty! Let Bro. Stubbs lay aside his prayer about justification—the blessed privilege of worshipping God under our own vine and fig-tree, with none to molest or make us afraid—and pray God to make the church as honest as decent sinners are, and give up donating parties as a vicious satisfaction for honest debts—debts where the equipment has been forgotten. O what a revival that would be, that would begin with the collection-box, and finish up with the pastor's salary! Bro. Stubbs' prayer would have the merit, at least, of being short and uncommunally pointed.

But the feature of the service must be the sermon—not a dry essay, but a discourse surcharged with the plain, simple gospel. It is this that people—wary, tempted, hungry, conscience-smitten—come to church to hear, and are disappointed if they hear anything else. The pulpit has not become a mere item of church furniture, nor the preacher a mere functionary, very respectable, indeed, but powerless as a moral force. People do want to hear preaching, and will rally around the pulpit when it interprets to their minds and hearts the truth of God. The rostrum can never supplant the pulpit, nor the lecture take the place of the sermon; but the preaching which is adapted to the age and demanded by it must set forth the old historic faith in new settings and with a flexibility, simplicity, culture and earnestness which are born of a firm conviction of its truth. There is no place in Methodist pulpits for skepticism. He who doubts the fundamentals of Christianity might as well cry among the tombs as preach to living men.—Zion's Herald.

OBITUARIES.

HANKINS.—Mrs. MARY J. HANKINS was born in Marion county, Ala., Nov. 28, 1827; professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in August, 1842, in which she continued a worthy member until transferred to the church triumphant; was united in marriage to Rev. E. L. Hankins, Oct. 25, 1843. They were blessed with five sons and five daughters, three of whom have crossed the river and are in heaven. The others, with their aged father, are members of the church, and are striving to meet their loved ones in that blest abode.

Sister Hankins died of la grippe, in this city, Jan. 14, last, after a severe illness of only six days. Although suffering intensely, she did not murmur, but endured it with fortitude and Christian resignation. She gave her sorrow-stricken husband, children and friends full assurance that the blessed Christ, in whom she had so long trusted, was with and sustained her to the end. A few hours before she expired her pains all ceased, her countenance brightened and seemed aglow with heavenly light, and, with smiling features, calmly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

Sister Hankins was a plain, candid Christian of the old type; loved and revered the Word of God; made it the basis of her counsel; read it a great deal, and prayed often. If she ever had an enemy, it was not known to the family; but, wherever she has resided, always had a large circle of friends; was domestic in her habits, and kept her house in order, which, for a great many years, was the home of the wayward itinerant preachers, where, at all times, they met a cordial welcome, and made to feel at home.

As a wife, mother and neighbor, she had but few, if any, superiors. In this life she met a great many misfortunes, trials and hardships, but bore them all with extraordinary fortitude and Christian patience.

Her remains were interred in the city (Ross Hill) cemetery, there to rest until the glorious Redeemer, with his holy angels, shall descend to claim the souls of all his saints.

Her grief-burdened husband and children humbly invoke the prayers of the church. C. G. ANDREWS, Meridian, Miss.

MOORE.—Mrs. CHRISTINA A. MOORE (nee Brentnauer), was born March 1, 1846, in the city of New York, and came to Franklin parish, near Winnapa, with her widowed mother in 1855. On April 22, 1869, she was united in marriage with A. D. O. Moore, who still survives her. She joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. J. M. McKee, in 1872, and lived a consistent, exemplary Christian life until the day of her death, Feb. 20, 1892. She resided her whole life in the city of New Orleans, and was a strict observer of the doctrines and rules of the church of her choice, and which she loved so well. Many a weary itinerant preacher has found a home in and shared the generous hospitality of her home.

She was a persistent and earnest worker in the Sabbath-school, ever at her place to respond to her name when called by reciting a verse from the Bible, and to take charge of her class. She was equally punctual in attendance at all the public services at the house of God.

She was confined to her room about one week, and was cognizant of her approaching dissolution. She was rational to the last, and told her aged mother and grief-stricken husband and children that she had no dread of death, and saw her way clearly. Her children are equally divided—three on this and three on the other shore. She also leaves behind a husband and her mother—now in the eighty-third year of her age—and a host of friends, who sincerely mourn their loss. The tearful eyes of the large audience and the floral offerings at the grave told in loud tones the depth of their grief, and the high esteem they entertained for the departed sister and friend, on account of her many noble and praiseworthy virtues. How consoling the thought that there is a place where loved friends will be reunited, never to part again! A. W. MOORE.

TURNER.—JAMES R. TURNER died at the home of his brother in Meridian, Miss., Jan. 20, 1892, aged about twenty-five years. At the age of twenty he was married to Miss Ada White, with whom he lived very happily until his death. He was the noblest and most devoted husband that I ever knew. I loved him because he was so good, and I don't know that he ever lost an opportunity for doing good. I believe he loved flowers and singing better than anyone I ever met. He would often say to me, "Labor would be more pleasant if I could always have flowers and singing around me."

How strange that he went so soon to land where songs never cease and flowers bloom forever! I understand that he died peacefully. I can believe it, because I knew him so well. No one saw the angels or heard the flutter of their snowy wings as they came and gently bore his sweet spirit away to the city of God. He leaves a sweet, loving wife and little daughter, two brothers, two sisters and an aged father. May God's grace sustain you, my dear friends. Live for Christ and gain a home in heaven with Jim. FANNIE BULLOCH.

GLOVER.—Mrs. EMILY V. GLOVER, (nee Moree) was born in New Orleans, May 9, 1834, and died in the same city, Jan. 20, 1892, an acceptable member of the M. E. Church, South, at Rayne Memorial charge. Sister Glover was married to John G. Glover, Esq., 1851. As the fruit of this marriage there are several living children, all of whom with their families (but one of the number being unmarried) are devoted members of the church of their parents. This was a subject of repeated thanksgiving by our dear sister in her last days and recounting the mercies of God to her during her long life, and more especially her protracted widowhood. Her domestic life was truly exemplary, and the affection which existed between herself and her children, particularly that one who had an undivided claim upon her to the close of her life, was a thing to be remarked by even casual acquaintances or strangers. The impression that her Christian character gave was that of solidity and strength (and she owned of sturdy Methodist stock, being a direct descendant of the Vicks and Moree families distinguished in the early history of Mississippi) rather than of fervor, or other minor traits, though in her last days she seemed to occupy a higher atmosphere, and the scenes accompanying her death would quite entitle her to a place in the latter category. Some days before this event (and she was long a patient sufferer) she said to the writer that she had pleaded the Lord to summon before her, as in a vision and in a remarkably vivid manner, all the offenses of her past life with the word "forgiven" written after each of them, and then immediately following a recapitulation of the whole in a sort of summary which was closed with the sentence, "I have forgiven all." When calling to see her but a few hours before the great change, she said impressively: "Tell me if this is death. I never felt my spirits so light, nor myself so strong, and ready to do or suffer the Lord's will." After praying with her, she said, "Repeat for me the last verse of that sweet old hymn, 'How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,'" and had those who were present to sing one or two familiar hymns. As the night waned, for it proved to be the last of her life, she talked to her loved ones about her death, exhorting them to trust in the Lord, and not to be concerned about her, for her Savior was with her and would conduct her to the mansions of light; but she was much interrupted by paroxysms of suffering, and finally, while the attendants were straining their senses to note the last movement of expression or pulse, she passed into what they were persuaded was the sleep of death. Thus she continued for many minutes giving no indications of life, when suddenly she opened her eyes and, extending her hand, said that the Lord had graciously permitted her a little extension of time and strength that she might deliver a Christian farewell suitable to the occasion to her loved ones, which she proceeded to do with muchunction and impressiveness, addressing each of the individuals, and not neglecting to frame loving messages and exhortations to the absent ones. Having concluded, she closed her eyes and passed away as gently and rapidly as the ripple of the surge follows it to seaward. And so her patient and beautiful life had a sublime ending. J. M. BEARD.

TIPTON.—Mrs. MILDRED TIPTON, whose maiden name was Hoffman, was born in Alabama in March, 1829; moved with her parents to Kosciusko, Miss., when quite young, and died near Ethel, Miss., Feb. 26, 1892. She was married to W. W. Tipton, Jan. 27, 1848, and in a short time after connected herself with the M. E. Church, South, and lived a consistent Christian life to the end. Sister Tipton was among the best of women. She was remarkably amiable in her disposition, and this with divine grace made her one of the best of neighbors. She was always in sympathy with the suffering, and nothing was neglected that she could do to minister to their wants. As wife, she was all that wife could be, devoted and faithful. She never suffered herself to become impatient nor speak unkind. As mother, she was among the most affectionate. No sacrifice was too great, if the interests of her children could be served. The writer was her pastor for the past four years and can truly say that he has never known a Christian of a more consistent walk. Most of her children died while quite young, having but two, a son and a daughter, to live to years of maturity. That only son was called away about one year ago; but Sister Tipton was never heard to murmur or complain, but always expressed herself resigned to the will of the Lord.

May God support the surviving husband and only daughter in this sad bereavement! A. W. LANGLEY.

Three Black Crows

There were three crows sat on a tree,
As black as any crows could be.
"Alas!" said one, "would I were white Instead of being black as night."
"Such foolish wishing," said his friends,
"In disappointment often ends."
But now, forsooth, to make you white,
We'll wash you well with some GOLD DUST,
And, when you're white, we fondly trust
That while you wonder at the feat,
Your happiness will be complete."

Behold him now as white as snow!
Wonder of wonders! smite the crow,
"If GOLD DUST POWDER makes black white,
'Twill surely all the world delight;
And mistress, mother, nurse and maid
Will find themselves henceforth well paid
In using this great help for all.
The household's needs—both great and small—
For dishes, kettles, pots and pans,
For paint and floors, and milkmen's cans—
It surely will great comfort bring,
And clean each dirty place or thing;
For what will make a black crow white,
Will make whatever is dingy bright."

The Dram-Shop Bill.

AS PASSED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(Editorial.)

The Dram-Shop bill, which has engaged the attention of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi for so long a time, has at last been passed by both branches of that body. The eyes of the entire State have been turned towards her capital for more than a month, watching with intense interest the legislation on this subject. The whiskey men from every part of the commonwealth have made direct and indirect efforts to prevent the passage of the code chapter on this subject, or to so modify it as to leave the law materially unchanged. The petitions which have been sent to the committee and legislators have been signed "Boards of Trade" and "Business Men." But in almost every instance where an investigation has been entered into, it has been discovered that "Boards of Trade" and "Business Men" should more properly have been "Saloon Keepers" and "Whisky Men." On the contrary, all petitions and memorials urging the passage of the bill have been signed by "The Christian People" of the community, or similar terms. Thus we have had the Christian people of the State, in their efforts to suppress this vice, arrayed directly against the saloon element in their arduous efforts to perpetuate this cancerous blot upon the escutcheon of our commonwealth. But in Mississippi morality has at last triumphed over immorality, virtue over vice, and the good people now see the beginning of the end.

As this is a subject in which the entire State is deeply interested, we give here a synopsis of the bill as finally passed, touching only some of the principal features.

The license for selling liquors shall be six hundred dollars for the country, six hundred for villages, nine hundred for towns, one thousand two hundred for cities. All this license fee shall go into the State treasury, not into the county. Cities and towns, however, may levy an additional tax of not less than twenty-five per centum for municipal purposes.

A petition to sell liquor must be signed by a majority of the qualified voters of the supervisor's district, or of the municipality in which said liquor is to be sold, exclusive of those who may sign a counter-petition. This petition must be published for three weeks in some newspaper in the county. We quote now verbatim from Section 7: "A newspaper publication, in which the names are crowded or proper capitals are dispensed with, or in which anything else is done, or omitted, to prevent, or which prevents, the publication from being easily read, shall be invalid." A name occurring both on the petition and counter-petition shall be counted on the counter-petition, and against the granting of license, nor shall the voter have the right to withdraw from the counter-petition for twelve months. If a majority of the qualified voters of a supervisor's district or municipality petition the proper authorities against the granting of license to retail liquors, such license shall not be granted to any applicant for a period of twelve months within such district or municipality. Any citizen who signed a counter-petition, or made a written objection to the granting of any license, may appeal to the circuit court and have the whole matter reviewed there, provided he gives bond in the sum of two hundred dollars to cover cost of appeal.

Liquor shall not be sold to an Indian, habitual drunkard or minor, nor shall liquors be procured for them, under a penalty of a fine of not less than one hundred dollars. Minors shall not be permitted to come into or remain in a dram-shop. Intoxicating liquors shall not be carried to any place of amusement, or social entertainment, or public gathering of any kind, or be given away there. This does not prevent the dispensation of hospitality at one's own home.

The dram-shop business must be carried on in the front of the building thus occupied, without screen, door, or any device by which persons in the dram-shop may be hidden from public view. Any dram-shop keeper who allows cards, dice, billiards, or any other game of chance on his premises, or in any adjoining apartment subject to his control, shall, on conviction, be subject to a fine of five hundred dollars, and six months imprisonment, or either.

It is made unlawful for anyone to act as agent for, or aid in, sending liquor from a wet county into one which has voted against the sale.

The tax collector and mayor are required to furnish the grand jury a list of licenses the first day of every term of the court; and in case indictments are found against saloon keepers for violating the provisions of this chapter, the district attorney is only required to prove that the law has been violated in the way specified in the indictment, and is not required to specify on which count he will proceed. An indictment can not be quashed for want of form, and it is not necessary to aver the particular kind of liquors sold.

The law concerning local option elections remains practically unchanged, with the exception that one-third the qualified voters are required to call an election, and if the election result in favor of local option, though another be held two years thereafter, and result in favor of the "sale," no license shall be issued for two years from the date of the expiration of the last license in the county. This gives each county two full years under local option.

These, as we understand the bill, are the principal features of it. There are other acts of the Legislature bearing on this same subject, but they come under other heads. What we must do now is to educate public sentiment to that extent that every disregard of these laws will meet with summary punishment. Without a sympathetic public sentiment, the most stringent laws become a nullity.

An Educational Loan Fund Association.

At the session of the North Mississippi Conference, held at Starkville, Miss., Dec. 12-17, 1888, by the recommendation of the Board of Education, a Conference Ministerial Aid Association was organized, the purpose of which was to help in the education of needy, but worthy young men who felt themselves called to the gospel ministry. At the next session, held at Holly Springs, the officers of this association were changed, but no other mention is made of it. No mention is made by the last two Conferences of this organization. What has become of this society? Is it no more? Since the assessment of $1,000 has been voted by the Conference to be raised by the different charges for ministerial education, has this enterprise been abandoned? I hope not. Great good has resulted from like associations in other Conferences in connection with their colleges. The Loan Fund Association of Emory College, in Georgia, keeps from fifteen to twenty young men regularly in college, and the association is yet in its infancy. Other instances might be cited of like success. As the efforts made by the North Mississippi Conference in this direction have so far proved abortive, let me suggest the following by which, or something like it, I think the association can be successfully operated.

1. Let an Educational Loan Fund Association be organized in connection with Millsaps College, to work under a charter granted according to the laws of the State of Mississippi. Let its place of business be centrally located, and its transactions kept by minutes and accounts, like the business of other corporations. This is necessary to ensure business management, and to inspire confidence in those who deal with the association, and that it is not a slipshod affair, and also to impress them that their agreements with the association are legal, and binding on them.

2. Let a Board of Trustees or Directors be appointed who shall elect their own officers; the Board and its officers to be governed by a constitution and by-laws defining and directing the work in detail. The Board to have, at least, one meeting each year, other than those held at the sessions of the Conference, and make public through the Conference organ a statement of its work; transmit its financial exhibit to the president or financial secretary of Millsaps College, and to the Board of Education of the Annual Conference at its ensuing session.

3. The funds of the association would be chiefly derived from subscriptions to the shares of the capital stock—ten dollars each. Each share might carry with it a certain voting value. Any person, or church, or charge, or district could make arrangements to purchase and hold stock in the association, direct its appropriation, or select the beneficiary. Subscriptions might be made payable in one or any number of years. The nine districts in the North Mississippi Conference ought to raise easily $5,000. This amount would be equal to $100,000 of permanent endowment in five per cent. bonds. Five thousand dollars used as a loan fund would give aid sufficient to not less than twenty-five indigent, but worthy, young men, to enable them to take a thorough college course.

4. These funds thus raised to be loaned in small sums to worthy and aspiring young men who are earnestly seeking an education and need help, preference being given to candidates for the gospel ministry. After they shall have left college, or graduated, each borrower would be required to execute his promissory note to be paid, as the money was loaned, in annual installments at a very low rate of interest. The money thus paid back into the association to be loaned over and over again. In the meanwhile the annual subscriptions to the capital stock will continue, till at the close of the present century, eight years from now, the funds of the association of itself will constitute a handsome endowment.

This would greatly aid our new college; but this is not the prime motive. The first heart-beat of this organization should be for the hundreds of lads in our State who would sustain themselves in college if they could. They see the value of the practical learning of our day, and would gladly avail themselves of such an opportunity as the loan association would give.

It is to be supposed that the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College will continue to keep an agent in the field, or have one of its faculty act in the capacity of financial secretary, and who will travel more or less in the interest of its endowment fund and to solicit patronage. It seems to me that he could make the loan fund idea of no mean importance. Contributions might often be secured for a fund, the principal of which is to be used over and over again, where nothing would be given for the regular endowment.

J. W. MALONE.

Chapter Six in the Experience and Observation of a Presiding Elder.

The first round of Quarterly Conferences for the current year 1892 has been completed and every appointment met by the presiding elder except two—Central Church, Meridian, and Leakesville circuit at Adamsville. Bodily affliction prevented my filling the first named appointment and a variety of circumstances hindered my getting to the second, although I made two efforts and traveled 288 miles. The last effort was frustrated by heavy rains and high water.

The preachers are all at their respective posts of duty and are generally very cheerful and hopeful, and all of them faithful. At a few of the Quarterly Conferences there was a scarcity of money—such a scarcity that the presiding elder got nothing, and in one instance had to borrow money to get home on, and at another he got all that there was in sight and the preacher got nothing. But in most instances there was a decided improvement over previous years in the amount of cash reported for the support of the ministry. Only one charge proposed to reduce the preacher's salary, and that was with his consent. Waynesboro and State Line, West End, and East End make very gratifying advances over their assessments for last year, and the others hold their own. There ought to have been an advance made in some other charges, and, no doubt, would have been had not "hard times" come upon some of our people. The Lord prospering them this year, they will do better things than they have promised.

At Waynesboro our good people have contracted for the building of a $2,500 house of worship, at the same time contributing liberally towards the building of a school-house.

At Winchester a contract has been made for the remodeling of the building which has served so long for school and church purposes. When remodeled it will be a church and only a church. The young ideas must learn to shoot elsewhere.

At Buckatanna a new house of worship will soon be erected—not a shanty, nor a shell, but a neat, tasteful building of which our brethren need not be ashamed.

At Pine Bluff work will soon begin on a plain, but substantial church—just the thing for the place.

These will make four new churches in Wayne county; two under the leadership of Bro. Penn and two under the leadership of Bro. Tinnin. As Bro. Chambers has taken the old Oak Grove neighborhood under his pastoral care, we may look for, at least, one new church in Clarke county; and unless Bro. Rayner be very grievously disappointed, there will be two more—one at Good Water and the other at Chapel Hill.

On the Porterville circuit Bro. Abney is moving cautiously; but if he do not build two or three new churches this year, he will be sorely grieved. Bro. Dawson expects new buildings at Linwood and Hopewell. Bro. Breland is planning for the enlargement of the borders of DeKalb circuit and a general advance all along the line. Bro. Bancroft has been busy securing titles to two places of worship on the Marion circuit, and spying out the land with a view to building a new church just beyond the present borders of that old, old circuit. He is hopeful as he always is, and the people are gladly following his leading. Bro. Ware has not yet begun on church-buildings, but has been bending his energies and himself to the completion of an elegant little parsonage at Mathersville. When completed, this parsonage will be a credit to the Clarke circuit and a comfortable home for the itinerant. Bro. L. P. Meador did a nice thing when he induced the Quarterly Conference to sell the old parsonage and provide for the building of the new. Many brethren will call him blessed and be grateful to the good people who are now contributing to build this new preacher's home.

At most of the Quarterly Conferences either delightful love-feasts or very profitable class meetings were held. At Waynesboro there were two accessions by certificate, and one application for membership. At Sochoa one "oh-soe young man" was licensed to preach. At Daleville the time was passed pleasantly, and the outlook under Bro. Witt's discreet and efficient pastorate is bright and hopeful. He has not only found the way to the homes, but also to the hearts of that clever, liberal people. The indications here, as elsewhere in the district, all point to a year of material and spiritual prosperity. God grant us a mighty revival at every point in the Meridian district! "And so much as in me is, I am ready to preach," to exhort and to pray, to accomplish this purpose and win souls to Christ—or just sit by and say, "Amen!"

T. L. MELLER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. C. Harris, Kosuth, Miss., March 30: "Our second quarterly meeting on Kosuth circuit was held last Saturday and Sunday. Besides efficient service in the chair, our presiding elder, Bro. W. S. Lagrone, gave us four splendid sermons, and held a love-feast, which was a means of grace to those present. The reports from the stewards indicated that they had been at work, while the reports on Sunday-schools and on the general state of the church were not discouraging."

Rev. A. D. Miller, Barlow, Miss., March 29: "We are moving on reasonably well on the Bowerton circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference. Our much-esteemed presiding elder, Rev. R. S. Woodward, was with us in our first quarterly meeting for the year last Sunday, and preached a sermon good to the use of edifying. Our circuit made a good showing for first quarter, paying the presiding elder and preacher in charge in full for the quarter. May God bless them all!"

Rev. Ben P. Jacob, Eureka Springs, Miss., April 2: "Panola circuit is moving on well this year. Have had one quarterly meeting, and, although the snow made traveling disagreeable, we had a splendid congregation on Sunday, and an interesting sermon by our efficient and beloved presiding elder. We held two services in our new church at Plegah last Sunday. In the morning preaching by our venerable brother, J. W. Bates; at night preaching and class meeting, conducted by the writer. With thankful hearts to God and the good people of this circuit, the preacher and family are now residing in the newly bought parsonage at Eureka Springs, Miss. Now, Lord, give us a revival. Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. Ira F. Hawkins, Angullia, Miss., March 29: "I send your publisher the names of four new subscribers. You may expect more before long. I, the junior preacher on this charge, find a very pleasant home in the parsonage with my senior collaborer, Bro. Keen, his most estimable wife, and his little Nellie. May God bless them for their kindness to me! The people have given a liberal response to my call for Conference collections. This is a generous people, and I am reasonably assured that all my collections will be in full, and my stewards have not been indifferent to my individual wants. Though my pocket is not full of money, my heart is full of hope—good food for one 'on trial.' May the God who gave this people a rich soil also give them hearts enriched with the blood!"

Rev. M. H. Moore, Columbia circuit, Miss., March 29: "Our third year with this kind people opens encouragingly. The people continue considerate of our welfare. The parsonage had its annual storming on the first of January. We are moving along smoothly and continually upward on Columbia circuit. We have two new churches in progress of erection; will begin another soon. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. A. Ellis, was with us on March 19 and 20. He made a splendid impression on our people. Finances are coming up pretty well, considering the financial pressure of the country. We have organized a class meeting, which has an attendance of thirty-five or forty. We are working, praying for, and expecting glorious revivals. We would rejoice to see the ADVOCATE and a family altar in every home on this work."

Dr. W. T. Kendall, Meridian, Miss., March 29: "I want to congratulate you on the contemplated downfall of the lottery ring, which we think you did a great part in overthrowing. Oh, what a blessing it will be to rid this country of that great curse! Also, we are feeling powerful good over the whiskey or liquor law just passed by our Legislature. We look forward to a rich harvest this year in God's vineyard in our section. Everything is favorable for it. Last Sunday we had one of the best sermons ever preached in our midst, by our presiding elder, Rev. Dr. Mellen. He took his text in Mark x—middle of the thirty-second verse: 'And Jesus went before.' It has never been my good fortune to listen to a more masterly effort. He handled the subject to the satisfaction of the entire congregation. His description of our Savior's ascension was perfectly grand. He touched on the subject of the burial of our dead, and said he did not approve of so much show, pomp and extravagance at the interment of our dead; that he did not care how he was disposed of when the Master called him from his labors here; that the all-seeing eye would watch over what remained of the body, and at the judgment would gather all the particles of dust together, and carry them safely through the ethereal realms of ecstatic joy to his celestial home, where we would meet all of our loved ones who had gone before; that death had no horror for God's people. We are very proud of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and think every Christian family of our denomination should read it. Revival meeting going on at the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, with prospects of doing much good."

Rev. D. F. Gnice, Carlisle, Miss., March 28: "We have had none of those storms of which I read in your valuable paper; but there is a reason for this, and it is this: It has no place to blow to, as we have no parsonage and no house to hire, and for the same reason our heads have escaped the poundings some of the preachers complain of; but this state of affairs will not always exist, as our women are beginning to think, talk and work for a parsonage on the Burton charge, and, with the corps of noble women that we have here, we expect great things in the near future. May the Lord aid and bless them in this work! I have been feeling around on the line of collection, and a more liberal people I have never worked among in all of my ministry. We passed a resolution in the last Conference to collect and pay quarterly the Conference fund, and, when asked for one quarter, they have given half. I have sent to the treasurer of the Board of Finance my first quarter's payment, and have the next in hand, and will send in a few days. I have begun in the beginning to accomplish good for the cause of the Master. I have been looking up the scattered sheep, and on one of my tours I found and baptized six children in one house. Some one mentioned his presiding elder, Mr. Editor, fortunately for me, I have the same presiding elder, and I want to say that he is not only proficient, efficient and sufficient, but covers all the ground in church work, and we are looking anxiously for his next visit. I expect to read on the floor of the next Conference everything paid in full. If you pass this way, give us a call, and we will show you our cozy church at Carlisle, and enjoy one of your stirring sermons."

Rev. J. L. Gibson, Lake Arthur, La.: "The first quarterly meeting for this work was held March 19 and 20. The presiding elder, Rev. John A. Miller, was on hand in good time. He did us good service. The love-feast on Sabbath night was interesting and profitable. During the quarter we lost one member by death; had eleven accessions, and baptized four infants. The collections ordered by the Conference are all subscribed, and more than half paid in. The church services are attended by a serious and attentive people. Our congregations are large, and our prayer meetings are occasions of profit. The Ladies' Aid Society gave notice that they would bring their supper with them, and spend an evening at the parsonage. Early in the afternoon of the day appointed—March 10—came buggies and wagons loaded with people and baskets and boxes of the best eatables the land could furnish, until it seemed that an extensive plot had been made to take the place by storm. The first table, with twelve seats, was served about sunset, and for about three hours the feasting continued, with brief intervals for rearranging the tables, until eighty-two persons, old and young, had done their best to consume the almost unlimited supplies that were set before them. It was like trying to exhaust Joseph's corn-crits in Egypt. They failed, and several fine cakes and other good things fell to the lot of the mistress of the manse. The enjoyments of the evening were greatly improved by some excellent vocal and instrumental music; but the best of the wine was at the last of the feast. Soon after supper was ended the writer and his good wife were invited to the parlor, from which they had recently been allured, and, to their astonishment, were confronted by a number of articles of beautiful new furniture, consisting of two elegant rocking-chairs, a fine center-table, a beautiful rattan lounge, and some sixty pieces of superior ornamental tableware, and other things—all intended to assist furnish the pastor's new house. These handsome gifts were formally presented to the almost bewildered couple of the parsonage in a very neat and expressive address by the editor of the Herald, which was responded to by the writer, as best he could, from an overflowing heart. Then came the doxology, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,' followed by, 'Blest be the tie that binds,' then some prayers, sweet and precious, closing with the singing of that beautiful hymn, 'God be with you till we meet again.' Thus ended one of the happiest evenings in the checkered life of the aged couple of the parsonage. The cash value of the present and the supper could not fall much below the sum of $60; but no amount of money can express the measure of good-will and esteem expressed by the meeting of that evening."

ONLY A SEASIDE PEBBLE.

BY WILLIAM L. HARRIS.

Only a seaside pebble
Dusty and dull and gray,
Washed by a summer shower
On a beautiful summer day
And the dark and stormy beauty shone
For returning sunbeams to gaze upon.

Only a seaside pebble
Dusty and dull and gray,
In the scorching heat of the noontide
That came like a pebble lay
For the dust returned, and the pebble burned
With a fevered heat that for new showers yearned.

Then the far-off ocean beckoned,
And whispered, "Come unto me,
But how could that lifeless pebble
Go to the friendly sea?"

It was true, that the pebble on one stormy day
Had moistened the stone where in death it lay.

One tempest, that poor old pebble
Was caught by a mighty wave,
That came like an inundation,
And carried it to its grave.

'Twas lost to the world, and seemed rudely Hurled

Where the drowning waters around it curled.

Only a seaside pebble!
At rest in a river rock,
Far down 'neath the crystal wavelets,
Where drought would no longer mock.

And it seemed so fair, as it nestled there,
Where the seaweeds would with tender care.

I am that hidden pebble,
Buried, and out of sight,
But beautiful in the waters
Of eternal love and might.

Lord, let me abide in thy river side,
Lost to the world in thy love's deepest tide.

Memoir of Rev. E. R. Strickland.

BY REV. H. J. HARRIS.

Because of the long and intimate acquaintance, the early ministerial association of Bro. Strickland and myself, the duty has been assigned me to write a memoir of my deceased friend and brother. Conscious of my inability to do the subject justice, I address myself to the task, trusting to the divine guidance, and hoping that the record we give concerning the life and labors of this wonderful man may be the means of doing good.

HIS NATIVITY.

Erasmus R. Strickland, son of Joseph S. and Anna Strickland, was born in Meredith Square, Delaware county, N. Y., April 6, 1807, and died in sweet peace at his home, near Summit, Pike county, Miss., Feb. 24, 1892. His parents and all of his near relatives were Baptists. There were but few Methodists in that part of the country as young Strickland grew up; but he chanced to attend a Methodist camp meeting in company with some other wild companions, where a dart from the quiver of the Almighty pierced his soul; conviction seized him, resulting in his conversion when about eighteen years of age, and he joined the M. E. Church.

HIS EARLY CHRISTIAN LIFE

was marked with earnestness and zeal rarely seen in the life and character of many of riper years. On his return home from the camp meeting, with his heart all aglow with holy fire, he instituted family prayers in his father's house. Soon he became the recognized leader in all the social religious exercises of the community in which he lived, and instrumental in a wonderful revolution in religious sentiment to the place of his nativity. The entire Strickland family became Methodists, beside many others. So great was the change God wrought through him that he could say "there were but few Baptists," or any other than Methodists, in the community where he lived.

HIS EARLY LITERARY ADVANTAGES

were limited, but, by assiduity, he acquired, at least, a quantum of elementary education for the practical purposes of life, and, by utilizing the knowledge he had obtained, he sought to increase his store. His only opportunity to acquire an education was to attend what was called the "Winter schools" of that period in New York, which he did at intervals, aggregating altogether fourteen months. As few boys will do nowadays, he studied at night, after the labors of the day in the farm were over.

When about sixteen years old, young Strickland became an enthusiast on the subject of fruit culture; but, not having sufficient means to embark in this business extensively, he conceived another enterprise that would enable him to raise money to establish an apple orchard. He went "a-fishing." With hook and line, or by some other piscatory art, he succeeded in catching and selling fish until he realized $160, which he invested in apple trees, and planted an orchard which is said to be flourishing to this day in Delaware county, N. Y.

HIS MECHANICAL GENIUS developed quite early in life. He mastered the trade of a mill-wright, and had quite a taste for handling machinery. When he first came South—stopping in the State of Georgia, as he told this writer—he came as a mechanic, and piled his calling for some time as such. He came to Georgia in 1829, when about twenty-two years of age. Success attended him in all of his undertakings, so far as material prosperity was concerned, but at the expense of his spiritual interest, and caused him to backslide from that degree of consecration that marked his early religious life; though, fortunately for him, restraining grace was vouchsafed, and he did not fall utterly from his steadfastness.

LIKE JONAH, THE SON OF AMITTAI, Bro. Strickland was fleeing from the Lord—rather, fighting against his convictions of duty—when he came South. He felt called of God to preach the gospel; but, dreading the responsibility, he sought to rid himself of his conviction of duty by a change of associations and relaxation from the active duties of religion, as he had been wont to practice them in the earlier stages of his experience. For a time he succeeded in stifling his convictions, and, yielding to a common weakness, he learned to love "this present world." He entered largely into speculations of various kinds. Among other investments, in company with some others constituting a syndicate, he held a large interest in lands in Neshoba and Winston counties, in Mississippi, purchased of the general government soon after the emigration of the Choctaw Indians westward.

THE TIDE OF WORLDLY PROSPERITY TURNED.

Reverse of fortune came, and with it remorse for broken vows and failure to perform his duty. Bro. Strickland renewed his covenant with God, and determined, with the help of grace, to do his duty. He was licensed as an exhorter in the year 1834, and obtained license to preach as a local preacher in 1835, and the same year moved with his family to Neshoba county, Miss. He had married during his sojourn in Georgia, and secured the companionship of a noble woman—a "helpmeet," indeed—for him during the most perilous season of his earthly career. She was a woman of more than ordinary accomplishments—a moral heroine. Although reared in effluence, she urged her husband, as this writer knows, to give up all for God, and submit to all the privation and toil of itinerant preacher life, at a period that tried men's souls, and of which Methodist preachers of this generation have no conception.

ITINERANT LIFE.

After serving the church as a local preacher for nearly three years, Bro. Strickland was admitted on trial as a traveling preacher in the Mississippi Conference at the session held in Grenada, Miss., in the winter of 1835, and was appointed to the Louisville circuit, embracing, at that time, the counties of Winston, Oktibbeha, and about one-half of Choctaw. He traveled this circuit one year, and at the Conference held in Natchez, December, 1835, he was appointed to Paulding circuit, with this scribe as junior preacher. Here began our personal acquaintance. In 1840. We had never met before. He was one year my senior as a traveling preacher. Neither of us were able to attend the session of Conference at Natchez. There were no telegraph or railroad lines in those days, and mail facilities were limited and unreliable. We were both residing at the time in East Mississippi; but, owing to the uncertainty of communication, it was about two or three weeks after the adjournment of Conference before I chanced to hear of my appointment, and if memory serves me rightly, it was more than one month before Bro. Strickland knew where he was assigned. He gave all diligence, however, and arrived with his wife and children soon as possible, and entered vigorously upon his work. There was no parsonage on the circuit, and the preacher's family had to be quartered upon others as they could find room. Fortunately for both of us, however, we each had a place of retreat. While his family could spend much of their time at their home in Neshoba county, my father-in-law resided in the bounds of the circuit, and my wife could find a home with her parents.

Of this year's work and its glorious results—for which mainly the credit is due, under God, to the zeal and self-sacrifice of E. R. Strickland—I must ask for more space than can be ordinarily allowed in any one issue of the ADVOCATE.

Italy as a Mission Field.

The Apostle Paul entered a most needy field when he arrived at Rome; and his preaching was just what such a needy region required. The world has long since justified the motive and been enjoying the fruits of his voyage to the Imperial City. But in the strange cycles that history is ever making, it has come about that of all sections of the world this Bible land, this home of the apostle and pourer of the first martyr's blood, stands in need of the pure gospel. To say that Italy enjoys the blessings of religion one must seek a definition of the term hitherto unheard of. A millenium and a half of popery has left its impress; and what a prodigious force it has been! Pressing down with all its weight of traditionalism, mummery and idolatry, it has succeeded in crushing out all true religious instincts from the great mass of its communicants; has made personal responsibility almost a nullity, and stands like a great black pall between the individual soul and its God. Such a picture does priest-ridden Italy present to-day. It is hard to determine which is the worse—no gospel or an impure gospel. No unprejudiced mind with the New Testament open before it can doubt for a moment that the teachings of the Romish Church are directly antagonistic to the growth of personal piety and the development of soul-life in the atmosphere of God's presence.

Italy, therefore, has a claim upon the Christian world in that she is crying aloud for the gospel in its purity. Moreover, a victory of Bible Christianity in Italy means a victory for the world. Rome is the throne of that vast ecclesiastical domination which has for centuries been dwarfing the minds and enslaving the souls of men. Great as was her Gerihaldi, Italy has honors a thousandfold greater for the son that shall deliver her from the tyranny of the Papal See. Caesar's dream has well nigh been fulfilled, though not, perhaps, in the way he looked for. Rome's influence, through that of the church she represents, is well nigh world-wide. Even in our own land the elections in our large cities are determined, for the most part, by the Catholic vote. Unless checked in some manner, it will not be many decades before the gift of the President's chair will be the mark of the Pope's approval. America is interested in the growth of Protestantism in Italy!

One peculiarity of Italy as a field for missionary operations is that the instruments for its evangelization are within her very borders. Of no other country can this be said; but it is true in this instance. Through all the years of religious darkness that have enshrouded Italy, there has glimmered a small but pure ray of gospel light. This light has not been hid; it has grown slowly, but steadily. The faint streaks have become more and more numerous, gathering brightness all the while, until now they augur the rise of the Sun of Righteousness upon the land. The instrument most available for preaching the gospel at Rome is the Church of the Waldenses. One or two reasons may be assigned for this statement.

These people have a most remarkable history. They are the representatives of the only pre-Reformation Protestantism that has survived to our times.

The Bible has ever been the inspiration of Protestantism. No man can read it and not protest against the gross perversions of Romanism. It was the Bible that opened Luther's eyes. So it was before his time the source of light to Peter Waldo, the founder of the Waldensians. Being a wealthy man, and not satisfied with the growth of his spiritual nature on the diet supplied by the priests, he hired men to read and translate the Scripture for him. Here was zeal for the Word of the Lord! Perhaps that shown by Josiah, Judah's last reformer, is the only parallel history of reform.

Anything built upon the Word of God as its foundation is sure to stand. "The Word of the Lord endureth forever." Waldo's successors have preserved his spirit. Through centuries of the most bloody persecution this noble band of God's true servants has kept itself true to the Bible. They have written their history in the blood of their martyrs. The curriculum of their theological schools comprises such courses as prepare the candidates for mission work and martyrdom.

Another fact that singles this people out as the most efficient instrument for the end to be attained is that they are Italian, and are recognized and honored as such by all their countrymen. The finger of scorn or contempt has never been pointed at them. From their midst have come the most illustrious champions of Italy's freedom. Their brethren recognize this, and hence can be influenced by this sect as by no other. The Waldensians have not been slow to take advantage of this great opportunity. Since the proclamation of religious freedom, twenty-two years ago, they have been assiduously pushing forward the work. Now they have outbursts in all the principal cities which for size and architectural beauty vie with those of Rome. To these the common people are continually flocking in greater numbers. As in the days of Jesus, so now this great body recognize and are attracted to the truth.

The membership of the church proper at this time is about thirty-five thousand. Their theology is taken direct from the Bible. They reject all the sacraments of the Romish Church, except baptism and the eucharist. All historians regard their doctrine as among the purest representations of apostolic teaching. Having the apostles' doctrine in its purity, they are moreover characterized by somewhat of its enthusiasm.

Such is the heaven of gospel truth that God has implanted in the great mass of Roman error and superstition. This is the remnant that he has left. The Waldenses have a great responsibility. They are the called of God for this work. The response that they are giving is noble; but, being few in numbers, they need the prayers, sympathy and substantial assistance of all Christians the world over. To American Protestants this appeal should come with double force. A victory over Catholicism in Italy means a crippling of that vast power in our own land which is so detrimental to the growth of free institutions. Every hamlet school will feel a thrill of delight at the prospect of continued life and usefulness, while every Christian heart will be glad that the shackles have fallen off a nation's spirit.

To call forth our interest and co-operation the Waldensian Church has recently sent one of its number—the pastor of their congregation in Rome—to make a tour of our Southland. He has been heard by the writer with profit and delight. This is written in the hope that all to whom he may come will receive him as a brother worker in the great vineyard of our common Master. Italy has indirectly bequeathed to us much of the Bible. Can not we unite to give to her the religion of the Bible? TEXTURE.

"To Jordan," "In Jordan," "round about Jordan," and "from Jordan."

There are few persons who would stop to inquire what the above phrases mean from the fact that the word is so generally taken to refer to the river, and so the word "Jordan" in the minds of some Bible readers is so taken, or they make it mean nothing. To say the least of it, it displays a want of thought, if not of shameful ignorance.

By reading the book of Joshua, it will be seen that the whole country or valley east of the river is called Jordan, but more especially that territory that was given to the children of Reuben. In chapter xiii, 15-23, Moses, under the direction of God, makes the survey (which must for all time to come constitute the field notes) of all this territory, and sets apart to Reuben a certain portion therein described, and then says: "And the border (territory) of the children of Reuben was Jordan and the border thereof," meaning the territory mentioned and its boundaries. Here God directs Moses to call this territory or state or country (as St. Luke calls it—iii, 3) Jordan, just as Mississippi is called. Get a map of Palestine, and then turn to Joshua xv, 6, and see how the east and north boundaries of Judah are described as extending to the end of Jordan or uppermost part of the state. From these two instances it is unquestionably clear that this territory in question was called Jordan. This is solid.

It is within this state or territory the place called Bethabara is situated "where John at first baptized," the other place being Aenon. Hence, the very natural expression which follows: "And he came into all the country about Jordan." "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan."—And were baptized of him "in Jordan." "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John." Mark has it: "And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan."

St. John (i, 28; x, 39, 40; iii, 26), clearly states that John went beyond Jordan (river) to Bethabara. So then the above expressions can not mean the river, and can only be applied to the state, just as we would if we were relating matters that occurred in Mississippi. Sam Jones came from Georgia "to Mississippi," and preached "in Mississippi," and many of his converts were baptized "in Mississippi," and so Sam Jones went "from Mississippi" just as "Jesus, being full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan," the state to which he went to be baptized of John. From these facts it is clear that Jordan means the state or country, and if we read intelligently we must so understand it. Matthew and Mark relate substantially the same thing: "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan . . . and were baptized of him in Jordan" (iii, 5, 6). "John did baptize in the wilderness . . . And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan" (i, 4, 5).

"River of Jordan." From the Bible use of this phrase, this is right. We never say the river of Mississippi or of Alabama, if we mean the main channel, but if we should speak of the valley, we would say valley of Mississippi. By reading Joshua xii, 2; xiii, 16 and 9, it will be seen that the valley of Jordan is called river, and so in II. Samuel xxiv, 5, the same expression occurs, and in the margin there the translators have put "or valley" in some Bibles; in some, "valley lands," and in others, "newly inhabited land." But it all refers to that portion of the valley of Jordan lying within the outer banks of Jordan. (See Joshua iii, 15; iv, 18; I. Chronicles xii, 15.)

So that "river of Jordan" does not mean the main channel, but the valley. Thon Mark and John make no discord in their accounts. As Bethabara is in Jordan (state), and in the valley of Jordan that which is meant by river, and as that country was a heathen land, and being newly inhabited by a people having the light of heaven, and later on to be thoroughly Christianized, so it was the reel wilderness from which we draw the idea of the moral wilderness to which John went. So then "river of Jordan" means simply the valley in the wilderness.

"Out of the water," makes no difficulty in the mind of those who can examine the Greek. Matthew and Mark both use apo, which means simply "from." Up from the water is very natural. The Greek means to arise up. As he bowed down to confess the sin of the world, as other priests bowed down to confess their sin; so arise up from the water is quite natural.

So it was in Bethabara, which was in "the river (valley) of Jordan" which ran through Jordan, hence was "in Jordan." Let Bible students read up. Read Joshua thoroughly, especially Joshua iii, 8-17; iv, v; xii, 4-6; xiii, 15-24-27; xv, 5; xii, 11; St. Luke iv, 1; iii, 3; II. Chronicles iv, 17.

So Jordan does not always mean the river. J. W. ELLISON.

GENESIS OF LIFE AND THOUGHT. By Thos. H. Musick. 404 pages, small price type, 12mo, cloth. Price, $1.

What the author has attempted to do is to show that, whether the doctrine of evolution be true or false, science has not yet propounded any theory which accounts for it; and more than this, that no sufficient theory can be propounded so long as the attempt is made to exclude intelligent purposiveness from organic nature. Whether the world of life be an evolution or not, it is, at least, in one way or the other, an intelligent purposive creation; that God creates and governs, whether wholly or partially by evolutionary processes, or wholly by other methods.

Some authors accept the general doctrine of evolution, and endeavor, if not to accommodate the philosophy of the Christian religion to it, at least to show that there is no incompatibility. To show that such a conclusion is erroneous, such a concession dangerous, is one of the aims constantly in mind throughout this book.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—April 10, 1892.

By Rev. W. H. LA PRADÉ.

Psalms li, 1-12.

The King in Zion.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." (Verse 1.)

By reference to Acts iv, 25-27, it will be seen that the apostles regarded this Psalm as having been written by David, and as having reference to Jesus. David, no doubt, saw in the fruitless alliances of the tribes of the heathen of his day, notably of the Ammonites and the Syrians, types of the unholy combination of rulers against the Christ when "both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles the people of Israel were gathered together."

St. Paul also quotes from this Psalm, applying to Jesus the seventh verse, and claiming that in him God had fulfilled the promise to raise unto Israel a Saviour of the seed of David. (See Acts xiii, 23, 33, and Heb. i, 5, and v, 5.)

Ver. 1. Not simply the fact of the raging of the heathen and the vain imaginings of the people, but the stupendous folly of it is here suggested. Furious at God's claim of sovereignty, and determined to resist it, they strike David with wonder and with indignation.

Comparing the fifth with the twenty-seventh verse of Acts iv, we find that the apostles evidently understood the word "heathen" to refer primarily to the Gentiles, particularly the Romans, while by "people," literally people, they understood Israel as represented by their "rulers and elders and scribes." The wider application is to the spirit of anti-Christ wherever found.

Vers. 2, 3. These in high places who refuse to recognize the supreme authority of God and of his Christ; all organized forces of evil; any combinations for financial, or social, or political ends that are antagonistic to the law of God and the spirit of the gospel. From Nimrod down, by way of Pharaoh, and Belshazzar, and Nero; by way of Philip II. of Spain, and Catherine de Medici, and Louis XIV.; by way of money kings, and whisky kings, and lottery kings, and "society" queens—all the way down rulers, throned and unthroned, have endeavored to "break (God's) bonds and cast away (his) cords" from them. The issue is ruin.

Vers. 4, 5, 6. Figurative language, but full of vigor. It is Omnipotence smiling at the fuming impudence of self-important weeklings. But sin is back of it all, and God's wrath is always moved against sin; so he pours out upon them his just displeasure. History is full of instances. His own "plans remain unchanged. His purpose is fixed. His King, his Anointed One, is "set upon Zion," established in righteousness, secure in his dominion.

Ver. 7, 8, 9. Here the King—God's Anointed One—is represented as speaking, making known the ground of his claims and the extent of them. Jehovah has said unto him, "Thou art my Son." The divine Son is the eternal and universal ruler, the executor of the Father's will. The Father recognizes, declares the relation already existing. So, afterwards, he declares it to Peter, for, said Jesus, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

The universal kingdom of Christ be himself taught us to pray for. Jesus shall reign everywhere in power and in righteousness. The rebellions he will destroy, breaking them "as a potter's vessel"—into ruin beyond remedy. "All power is given unto" him.

Vers. 10, 11, 12. Here the Psalmist speaks again in his own person, calling upon his fellow-rulers to make peace with God and to render him the service due. "Kiss the Son"—an expression used to indicate obedience and loyalty of heart. Penitence will bring pardon; persistent rebellion will bring destruction. He is patient, long-suffering, full of mercy; but "his wrath will be kindled in a little while." His wrath is not the anger of impotence, or of tyranny, but the righteous indignation of the King against the willfully disobedient. It smites only when mercy has offered conditions of peace and has been rejected. It is the "wrath of the Lamb," the final protest of the Savior against sin.

LESSON-POINTS.

1. God is supreme, and demands that his supremacy be recognized.
2. No syndicate that ignores God will be finally successful—whether of men or of nations.
3. God's purpose to rule the world through Christ stands. It is not changed by opposition.
4. Jesus Christ is the "Only Begotten Son of God."
5. Jesus has "all power, in heaven and in earth." This is our guarantee of success in all our foreign mission work. His kingdom shall come.
6. It is wisdom to make peace with God on his terms while we can. He is ready, loving, waiting.

Life of Women on Farms.

AS IT IS AND AS IT SHOULD BE.

[We think all who read this paper, which was read before the Horticultural Society in one of the Western States, will appreciate more fully the arduous work of farmers' wives.]

As it is, it is a little discouraging to look at it; it is small wonder that farmers' wives feel just a little as if theirs is the hardest lot in the world.

Many farmers feel that they have a hard time, too; sons are repelled from the farm because the work seems so hard, so unremitting. Yet these same sons, after they have tried the worse treadmill of the store, either as employer or employee, or have tried the various kinds of mechanical labor in which their hands learn some particular cunning in labor, or have tried the professions, worse treadmill still; these same sons, who may have made more than their fathers' sons get no time to read, after a few years of unprofitable reading of the mind-enervating daily paper of the city, would gladly return to the farm if they had one to return to. But a woman once released from her treadmill on the farm, seldom desires to return to it. Why is this? Not because the woman works so much harder than the man, I claim:

I acknowledge, of course, that a woman who bears many children, especially if there be a debt on the farm, has greater burdens than her husband, but with average families and average financial success the husband and wife work equally hard upon the farm, and in return what do they receive? They ought to receive, true, some comfort, independence of thought and life, time to read and think, fine physical health, a home in old age and ability to enjoy it. Just here is where the should-be of a woman's life on the farm comes in.

Her life is a treadmill generally because she misses nearly all that makes life endurable to her husband. He is out of doors nearly all the day, drawing in great draughts of life, health and strength with his unremitting toil; he goes to mill and to market, to postoffice and to elections; he has errands to his neighbors, and in each place, from each one he meets, he draws strong reinvigoration for his work. His neighbor tells him that our President has vetoed or signed some bill and tells him of the reasons for his veto or signature, perchance, and together they discuss the reasons; at mill and at market he meets other neighbors who discuss with him questions of finance, tariff and foreign affairs, as they understand them; at the postoffice he finds his political weekly paper, possibly the papers of each political faith; he finds his agricultural paper full to reflection of good things, and he possibly reads these to himself at home.

At town meetings and elections he meets all neighbors and they get outside of the narrow routine of home life into the broader home life of the whole community, of the State, of the nation, of the world. He ought to be broad and strong in his physical and mental life. It would be a shame if he were not.

On the other hand, his wife seldom gets out of doors long enough to do her any good; she doesn't realize that the winds of fresh air she gets are not enough to help her to endure the stifling heat of her kitchen stove. She wants to do all the canning and pickling, the debt, and so she struggles on without help in the kitchen, and generally with several little children about her. They are about all the company she has. All she needs, you say? Nay, not so. I yield to no one in love for childhood's ways and thoughts, but I want some ways and thoughts beside theirs to devote me to my best. When I taught little children, I sought more advanced reading, sought lectures, sought the company of people who never thought of the school-room, that I might not "fall into ruts," that I might not become so habituated to childish ways and thoughts that I should be unable to think mature thoughts.

This average mother seldom goes among her neighbors; company is a great event to be prepared for with so much labor as to make it a dread. When she goes to the neighboring village she hurries through her purchases and is so worried over them that she scarcely sees the entrance of the woman who might give her a thought to refresh her. She may go to church, but she must take all her children, and it is no small job to dress them for church, even if she dresses them fairly and she is not too tired to appreciate the thought the sermon contained for her.

She reads little, she sees little of life, she loses hope, faith, courage; she often tells young girls that if they know when they get the wool off, they will marry; tells older, unmarried girls that they have shown good sense; she gets year by year to care more for the money that all this hard work brings, and she forgets that life was not given simply to bear children and save money.

Have I made too dark a picture? I know there are some bright exceptions, but those belong largely to the second part of my subject—life of women on farms, as it should be—and I turn with pleasure to it, for I feel sure that it is coming. Here the mother not only brings children into the world, but rears them intelligently; not only helps to save money, but helps to spend it, to make life better worth the living; if she is unable to work a girl to help her about work, she takes turns with the husband in doing about among the people; he stays at home with the babies some weeks and she goes with neighbors, and both are better citizens, better parents, her enlarged thought, the cheerfulness given to her by contact with people outside of home.

But this is not all I want her life to be when it is as it should be. Perhaps some of my dreams of her life as it should be are Utopian. I can tell you better whether they are or not ten years from now; for the present I want the woman on the farm to go walking more and have company more; want her to set her neighbor a good example in the method of entertaining. I want her to set a simple table, one which will not so completely use up all the energies that she can not enjoy her company. I want her to spend less time in trying to keep pace with the habits of dress of the mother in the village who has more time to spend on such things. I want her to dress herself and her children so comfortably, so healthfully, so plainly that she need not be continually worrying over her sewing and ironing. I want her to be emancipated from bed quilts and rag-carpet, body, mind and soul-destroying appliances that they are. I want her to accompany her children to early hours for bed, and then I want her and her husband to read together books which will broaden the minds of both. I want her to teach her children the good old adage, "Children should be seen, and not heard," when the father reads aloud to her in the few spare moments he may have in the house. I want children and mother to profit by the outlook that the father enjoys.

I want her to give the older children care of the younger ones, so that in a very few years she may have help from them, if she takes them away from home, or can leave them at home without fear while she goes among her neighbors for a little brightness. I want her to get out doors, to feel such an interest in every part of the farm that she will take a walk to some part of it almost every day, or do some daily work in the garden. A carelessly kept flower garden is not out doors' exercise enough. If it be well kept, it may be enough, but the woman who emancipates herself from senseless demands of dress and food may do more than keep a flower garden; she may make herself an adept in the care of small quantities of small fruits or in the growth of celery, of cabbage, of radishes, or she may undertake to study the habits of our fast disappearing wild flowers, and have a little bed of ferns and orchids, of delicate hepaticas and graceful dicentra, and with every breadth of fresh air she will draw in fresh strength for the indoor life, and perchance will strengthen the young life so dependent upon hers.

I have been wondering if she might not do some missionary work, save some soul from death in the meantime. Perhaps I am proposing too much, but so many times when I taught in a large city and saw wretched homes and wretched lives—saw the forgotten, the unloved, the uncared-for children of humanity—I have longed for country homes for them, and I have wondered if such homes might not save them from the certain sin and sorrow of the future. I have wondered if a true home and love and trust for these walls of humanity might not save their bodies, minds and souls from destruction, and if the farmer's wife might not train up a loving, helpful, adopted daughter. —Farmers' Review.

Sunday Rest.

A RIGHT GUARANTEED BY THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

BY G. W. SAMSON, D. D.

At the annual meeting of the Evangelical Alliance held at the American Bible Rooms, New York, January, 1892, the president of the Alliance, Wm. E. Dodge, expressed warm appreciation of the following statement, whose facts have always ruled American statesmen and jurists:

The Constitution expressly provides that the President shall be allowed "ten days, Sunday excepted," for the examination of bills requiring his signature. This express provision as to the highest officer of the Federal Union implies, and has always and in every state of the Union, justified the universal precedent for the adjournment of legislature and courts and the closing of all executive offices. If then all superior officers of the Federal and State government take as an inalienable right Sunday exemption from public service for which they are paid by the people, these three principles may be taken as ruling: First, the American people, whatever a few interested objectors, chiefly foreigners, may urge, have ordained the right of Sunday rest for all public officers. Second, to directly legislate to take away from any subordinate employees of the government is direct violation of a provision of the Constitution. Third, to appropriate money by direct legislation for a service in which none but men who have no religious scruple participate is to discriminate against conscientious Christians.

Again, the "common law" of the mother country, Great Britain, is recognized as ruling except so far as legislated by express State or Federal legislation. Hence all American courts, as Kent exhaustively cites, have recognized that "Christianity in its precepts as distinct from its doctrine," is part of the common law. Thus monogamy, not polygamy, is recognized in laws protecting wives and children and controlling inheritance; and the highest courts have recently decided that polygamy, though allowed in Hebrew and Mohammedan legislation, is a violation of American institutions. The same principle, as Kent shows, has defeated every effort to lead American courts to set aside the common law statute prohibiting opponent profanity and especially blasphemy against the Christian names of Deity. Yet more, there is no State or city whereby express laws against the sale of intoxicants, opening of public places of amusement "on Sunday," are not restricted as they are not on other days of the week.

Yet again, nothing but the position that some expressions of the Constitution are insincere or meaningless can ever satisfy the American people that nothing is intended by setting aside of the simple form "A. D." in the date of the United States Constitution and of all public documents signed by officers of the Federal and State authority, and the full writing out "in the year of our Lord." No advocate of any other system of religion than the Christian, while free to exercise his own freedom as an individual, can claim when he seeks a residence in the American Union that his public right is invaded when in the union of States the people only claim that their religious day shall not be so used as to invade their domestic, social and religious rights. Finally, and fourth, in the principles that must rule American legislators in provisions that discriminate against conscientious Christians, especially emphasizing the first amendment of the Constitution. The Constitution was elaborated by the wisdom of men like the three, chosen eleven years before to draft the Declaration of Independence: Adams, stern in Puritan convictions; Franklin, matured as a Liberator in the city of Philadelphia; and Jefferson, who leaned to French skepticism. Between the years of its elaboration in 1787 and its full operation in 1790, the meeting of the French Convention in the summer of 1789 had so verified Burke's prediction in the British Parliament that its spirit "would leave to religion not even toleration and to virtue less than a name," that his elaborate treatise was given to the English-reading public and was especially studied by Americans, as aided by Burke's speeches of March, 1774, and April, 1775, which had maintained their right of revolution under the British Constitution. The provision declaring "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," had a meaning fully explained by centuries of experience in every country of Europe, whose reasons have become more apparent now that their justice is recognized more and more the world over; and as to which American legislators have not thought of unfathfulfulness to their oath of office.

The second provision, only appreciated by a few far-seeing men, "or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," is that which in the granting of charters which indirectly deny Sabbath rest to men most needing it has certainly been overlooked. There is not a thoughtful American statesman or citizen who must not upon consideration recognize that a direct statute giving the public to an association, who it is known beforehand will virtually forbid Sunday sanctity and rest, is direct legislation against the free exercise of religion by discriminating against conscientious Christians who seek employ under an Act of Congress. —Standard.

Baldness is generally accepted as one of the natural accompaniments of old age. Still how many aged people there are with a profusion of hair, in some cases preserving its natural color up to the latest period. It is a well-known fact that the hair often grows freely after death, the reason being that it then receives the nourishment denied it during life.

Sometimes baldness occurs in the early stages of life. It is then unnatural and assumes the form of disease. It discloses itself sometimes by a general falling off of the hair, while at others the decay is partial and confined to round or irregular patches.

In any such case a certain remedy is provided in the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which at once arrests decay, gives the scalp the necessary moisture and stimulus, and gives the required tone to the roots of the hair that awakens a renewal of growth. Hundreds of ladies who have lost their hair through disease testify to the efficiency of this unparalleled preparation. Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

If you wish success in life make perseverance your wise counselor, caution your elder brother, and hope your guardian genius. —Addison.

Neglect of the hair often destroys its vitality and natural hue, and causes it to fall out. Before it is too late apply Hall's Hair Renewer, a sure remedy.

He that trusteth in a large circulation shall be wealthy, but he that believeth in cheap rates shall be busted. —London Fame.

The World's Fair.

The South may claim, without prejudice, to have more than its share of the world's fair. The acknowledged beauty of the ladies of the South is due in a great degree to the use of Creole Female Tonic, the ladies' friend and favorite, and sure cure for all female ailments. —It cures prolapsus uteri and all organic diseases.

Without the newspaper great advertisers can not exist. Without the advertiser, great and small (but mainly the small advertiser), the newspaper of to-day would be impossible. —James H. Beals, Jr.

What Is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces slightly lumps or swellings, which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or foot; which develops ulcers in the eye, ear, nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of phlegms, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

The Election.

After a week's session the Committee of Seven, appointed to canvass the returns of the primary election of March 22, concluded its work last Monday evening. The committee found fraud on both sides, and a majority voted to eliminate from the count several precincts in this city. According to this elimination the vote stands: In the country 35,339 votes for Foster and 25,920 for McEnery. In this city 17,133 for McEnery, and 8,263 for Foster. In the whole State the committee gives Foster 43,602 and McEnery 43,053, thus giving Foster a majority of 549 votes.

When the majority of the committee concluded to eliminate from the count the contested precincts in the city the McEnery members filed a protest and withdrew from the committee. We presume this is only what the other side would have done had the decision been the reverse. So, after all the worry and passion, we are just about where we began.

The Fire.

Last Sunday two most destructive fires occurred in this city. One was in the cotton presses near the head of Terpsichore street, by which about 45,000 bales of cotton were destroyed. The other was in a thickly populated residence portion of the Fourth District, by which nearly a hundred homes have been laid in ashes.

The loss entailed by these fires is very great, but the loss of the homes of so many of our people who are not able to bear such loss is especially burdensome. Many had no insurance, and but few were fully insured, and on this account there will be great distress and suffering. Here is an opportunity for the Christian people of the land to show the helpfulness of their religion, and we trust they will not be slow to manifest it in a practical manner.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: "A friend to the cause of Christ" writes from Mississippi:

Please use inclosed $25 to help educate some young man for the ministry.

I scarcely need say that we are grateful for this timely gift, and pray God's blessings upon the unknown giver. The money shall be used as requested.

Now, let all who are in arrears pay as promptly as possible the interest on their endowment notes, and Centenary will close another scholastic year prosperously.

Mr. Rockefeller recently gave another million to endow a college—thank-offering because God had raised him up from sickness. Why should not others whom God has blessed with means give largely because God has kept them from being sick?

Senator Stanford's gift of millions for a university in California was occasioned by the death of his only son, Leland. Why should not other fathers give liberally because their sons have not died, and as a prayer that they may live long and well?

Post-mortem giving is seldom best. Thank God the world is learning that, and large gifts from living men are becoming more and more common. Centenary's time for a more liberal endowment is, we hope, not far distant.

W. L. O. HUMPHREY.

Editorial Correspondence.

The third Sunday in March was spent with Bro. R. G. Porter in Pickens, Miss. When we reached this beautiful little town, snow and sleet from the recent cold wave was still on the ground. Sunday, however, dawned fair and pleasant, and though there was much sickness in the community we had large and attentive congregations both morning and night. Monday was spent in renewing acquaintances formed a few weeks ago, and in converse with some of our childhood friends.

The church-building in Pickens is a neat structure, tastefully finished on the interior, with a seating capacity of about two hundred. The official Board is composed of practical business men, who take an interest in seeing that the Lord's work does not go without attention. The parsonage has been renovated, and, on the whole, the outlook is very gratifying.

In rambling over the town and vicinity we were conducted by—across the bridge over Big Black river; thence northward for a distance of about fifty yards through the woods along a well-beaten path to a plat of ground about six feet square, utterly devoid of grass. Scattered here and there were remnants of paper bags, tin cans, sardine boxes, etc. As we viewed what might have been the scene of a recent picnic, our guide remarked: "This is the crap-ground! The devil loves a corner lot. This is Attala county. There is Holmes, yonder is Yazoo, and just across here is Madison." Here we were, for the first time to our knowledge, where the devil held high carnival. The characteristics of the evil one were plainly manifested in the time and place for "crap-shooting."

"Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." Remnants of fire-brands were scattered about. The general surroundings reminded us of a circumstance said to have taken place a few weeks ago in some of our Eastern States. On the side of a mountain was a point where three States cornered. At this spot a saloon keeper, in order to avoid paying a license, built a three-cornered saloon, with this point in the middle of the building, and opened up business. The authorities heard of it and went to arrest him. But when the authorities of one State came he stepped across the line into another. When those of that State came he went into the third. When all three came at once he stepped upon the stone marking the three corners, and the question arose, Who has the right to arrest him?

From Pickens we went to Kosciusko, the seat of Attala county. It was a murky, disagreeable day, and we were unable to do much more than view the surroundings and make a few acquaintances. We spent a few hours very pleasantly, however, with Bro. J. F. Evans at the parsonage.

At three p. m. we took the local freight train and went to the little village of Sallis, and spent twenty-four hours very pleasantly and profitably with the pastor, Bro. R. M. Evans, and Bro. J. R. Roberson, of Newport circuit. Though it rained all Thursday morning, rendering it practically impossible for one to be out, it cleared up about noon and we were enabled to make several collections and increase our subscription list. Had the weather favored the carrying out of Bro. Evans' plan, we could have done much more; but we feel sure we left the work in safe hands.

Thursday evening and night was spent in Durant. Among others whom we had the pleasure of meeting was the family of Bro. R. A. Burroughs, the presiding elder of the Kosciusko district. In order to have Bro. Burroughs and family among them, the good people of Durant rented and furnished a house for them. We feel sure the community will be more than repaid in having their presiding elder among them.

Durant is growing rapidly. We saw many new residences, and everything has the appearance of activity and growth. This little city is the junction of the Aberdeen and Tchula branches of the Illinois Central railroad with the main line. There is also a barrel factory and a wagon factory. We have already found several enterprises of this kind in our State, and we are glad to see them. The South has as great, if not greater, facilities for meeting every demand of the market than any other section of our country. Her resources are inexhaustible. When the farmer learns to live at home, and not in the pocket of the merchant, and when our own fair Southland awakes to her capabilities and ceases to lean on the weaker arm of another, prosperity will be her diadem, and independence her throne. B. F. L.

The Immorality of Public Men.

The faithful preaching of the gospel and the earnest work of the churches are doing a valuable and patriotic service in politics, though not immediately interfering with politics as such. The pulpit and Christian newspaper and Christian lecture platform and private Christian conversation are all engaged in educating the masses of the people, and especially the young, that healthy politics, politics beneficial to the State, must be founded in the moral law, and that the lives of public men must show, at least, an outward respect for the requirements of that law. From these sources the people are learning that the only basis of a safe prosperity for the State and the profoundest of all political philosophy is in the fact that "righteousness exalteth a nation." The old ideas that for so long a time ruled in politics are giving way under the pressure brought to bear upon the public mind. It used to be that so long as a public man performed the duties of his office, no inquiry was made into the practices of his private life. We are glad to note that a marked change is gradually being made at this point. The people are beginning to study more than ever the public welfare in its sources and in its demands upon the public servants. They are learning that the welfare of the State originates exactly where the welfare of the individual originates, and that is in righteousness. The political commonwealth is incarnated in the officers of the commonwealth, and hence the welfare of the State demands men in office who will not stop up the sources of that welfare by unrighteous deeds. The people are fast coming to the sound conclusion that the welfare of the State demands men in office who will square their own lives, private and public, by the requirements of the Ten Commandments. We are glad to know that this sentiment is becoming more widespread every day and growing in such power and intensity as to make itself felt in very many places. The people are really waking up to the fact taught in the Word of God, that "when the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked bear rule, the people mourn." So from all parts of our great country, and in tones of unmistakable earnestness, there is a demand for a better class of men for public office. The demand is, not only for men who will faithfully perform the duties of the office, but for men who will at the same time honor and magnify the office by private and public exhibitions in every-day life of honest and honorable manhood. The people want men in office, no matter of what lineage they may be, of whom nobody will be ashamed. They are getting heartily tired of and thoroughly disgusted with having to be forever apologizing for and condoning the gambling and drinking habits and the immoral associations of their public officers. The people are saying, and they mean what they say, "These things must end."

There is another thing the people are getting tired of. They are getting tired of having to defend the fraudulent trickery by which men are lifted into office. They know that such practices in a business enterprise would hurl men down under the universal condemnation of the business world, and they are asking in great seriousness, "Why should such things go unrebuked in matters which pertain so vitally to the whole people?" They are not only asking this question, but in many places they are saying with tremendous meaning, "These lying practices must cease, and methods must be used by which capable and God-fearing men, lovers of truth and haters of unjust gain, may be chosen for official stations."

The partisan politician looks upon this sentiment with disdain, and pooh-poohs it as a mere spasm of Pharisaism; but never was a greater mistake made. This sentiment is not a passing whim which will soon subside; it is the growth of years and getting stronger every day. We see its growing strength in the fact that one by one the political tricksters and managers of fraudulent political practices are coming to grief. The standard of public life and service is being elevated. Such growth never turns back upon itself. It reaches out continually and in many directions, and wields a power that can not long be successfully resisted.

The Preparation of Sermons.

In the March number of The Review of Reviews there is an interesting sketch of the late Mr. Spurgeon. In this sketch is the following extract on "How He Prepared His Sermons": "Whenever any text struck him in the course of his reading or meditations, he wrote it down in a manuscript book which lay upon his desk. When the time came to make a sermon he took up the manuscript book containing the texts and turned over page after page until he came to a verse which disclosed its meaning to him in a sudden flash of intuition. The illustration he used was that of a stone-breaker who sometimes happens to strike a stone so happily that it breaks up at once, and he sees the whole heart of it. In the same way, when the text suddenly broke up before his mind, so that he saw instantly the right train of thought, he accepted it. . . . As soon as the text was fixed he took a half-sheet of ordinary writing-paper and rapidly wrote the heads and the outline of his discourse. He wrote a very neat, small hand, so that he could get a good deal on the two sides of the half-sheet. . . . He left many of his illustrations and the verbiage with which he used to clothe his thoughts to the spur of the moment and to the inspiration of the vast crowd which faced him. . . . I believe it was his regular custom to prepare both of his sermons for the great audiences of the Tabernacle after seven o'clock on Saturday night."

There is a wise suggestion here as to the method of selecting a text and of writing the heads and outline of a discourse; but the ordinary preacher can not always risk the spur of the moment and the inspiration of his congregation for his illustrations and for the verbiage with which to clothe his thoughts. Sometimes the moment has no spur and the congregation no inspiration, and the preacher will be safer and have a better conscience if he goes into the sanctuary with beaten oil. On no occasion, except from dire necessity, will he feel justified in leaving the preparation of his sermons for Sunday to Saturday night after seven o'clock. One would have to see Mr. Spurgeon's library and see him in it, and to know something of his habits of study and something of his wonderful genius to appreciate the lateness of his final preparation for the pulpit. "He once said to his students that it would be very dangerous for them to imitate his method of preparation."

In the March number of The Homiletic Review there is a good article from the pen of Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., on "The Secrets of the Effective Treatment of Themes," in which some valuable suggestions are made. He says: "A sermon is plainly a product, not of the mind of man only, but of the mind of man in contact with the Spirit of God and the truth of God."

Again: "The most spiritual preachers and the most effective have observed seven great secrets of effectiveness: 1. Simplicity of treatment. 2. Close adherence to the text. 3. The full presentation of the truth. 4. The enforcement of spiritual truth by the analogies of natural law. 5. The use of illustrations, apt and telling. 6. The constant progress toward a climax. 7. The tone of deep spirituality."

Again: "All true insight into the Book hangs on the unveiling of the eyes to behold wondrous things in the Word. . . . It follows that the greatest help in the preparation of sermons is a prayerful, humble, devout meditation on the Holy Scriptures, by which the spiritual eye shall be unveiled and enabled to behold the wondrous things. . . . The most effective preachers may be challenged, therefore, to say whether they have not found that immersion in the Scriptures, with dependence upon the Spirit alike for instruction and unction, has been the secret of their highest pulpit power."

Again: "The highest kind of homiletic analysis is not an invention, but a discovery; not the product of ingenuity, but the result of illumination. It would be well, therefore, if preachers would covet earnestly the best gifts."

Again: "Personal attainments in holiness and in sympathy with God will have much to do with the clearness of apprehension as well as the effective presentation of spiritual truth. A man who lingers in the atmosphere of the closet, and obtains there his insight into the Scriptures, will carry the atmosphere of the closet with him into the pulpit—a tone of personal sympathy with God."

These extracts are full of wise suggestions, and, perhaps, nothing more than suggestions are needed here. A method that would suit one man would not suit another. Any system that destroys individuality is essentially bad. Even inspiration did not supplant the individuality of the writers of the Bible. But the suggestions of the foregoing questions indicate where our strength lies, and we can not refrain from joining the writer in "the greatest solicitude for a revival of this kind of preaching in the modern pulpit."

Thankfulness is the tune of angels.—Spencer.

NOTES.

The Non-Such Professor says: "He is not a covetous man who lays up something providentially, but he is a covetous man who gives out nothing willingly." Hence that Scripture: "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

Zion's Herald says: The New York Tribune observes, with a good deal of truth, that "in the opinion of many people, to preach the gospel simply means to talk about the sins of the Jews who lived two or three thousand years ago."

This is a good way to make people go to sleep in their own sins, but it will not answer the imperative demands of this present time.

Speaking of the recent election in this State, the Times-Democrat had this sentence:

The only objection the Fosterites have raised is that McEnery's majority is not as large as his supporters expected; but considering the manner in which the election was held, and the safeguards thrown around it, it was small, and relatively larger than the majority usually received.

If it hadn't been for "the safeguards thrown around it!" Ah, yes!

One of our laymen says that he knows a preacher who has quit preaching sermons. He now "delivers discourses." We do not recollect to have seen it in the New Testament that Christ called men to "deliver discourses." But we have the idea that he specifically called them to "preach the gospel." Preachers should not try to convert themselves into discourses. Let them be "preachers." Discourses, indeed!

This may fit some readers:

A good old Scotch woman had a serious quarrel with her minister—a Scotch quarrel about church matters—but to the surprise of the pastor he continued his regular attendance at worship. He expressed his gratification as well as surprise at her conduct, upon which she replied, "Oh, sir, my quarrel was with you, and not with the Lord!" A sensible rejoinder, and I wish that all easily-offended, fault-finding, minister-biting, peace-disturbing church members would not include the Lord in their quarrels with their pastor.

Dr. W. T. Bolling, in the Southern, gives a bit of his experience which may benefit some other itinerant. Listen!

I find that after twenty-three years of itinerant life the best thing a man can do is to try and do his work well, and when he goes to Conference let the Bishop alone. He knows you and will do what in Christian judgment he thinks best. "Water seeks its level," and though sometimes a man may get a Bishop to pump him up some, he will run down hill again, and get sour at everybody and everything because he is not appreciated, he thinks.

The Christian at Work says: "We believe every minister of a church having a membership of 250 could easily find employment for a young assistant, while the benefit of the experience to a young man before taking charge of a parish would be very great." The assistant preacher was very common in the days of early Methodism and contributed largely to our early success. And we share the opinion expressed by the Christian at Work, and hope to see the day when every large station and circuit will have an assistant preacher.

The Florida Christian Advocate puts some pertinent questions to the politicians which a great many people would like to hear answered. It says:

We read and we hear of what Hill is for, and what Cleveland is for, and what Harrison is for, and what Blaine is for; but amid the tangles raised by Democratic and Republican statesmen and Christians, who do not read Hill's position on the saloon and the lottery and the gambling questions, or Cleveland's or Harrison's. Now just here we want light. The tariff question and the silver question and the farmer's rights are matters of importance beside the course of race and gambling, the greatest cause of moral and social and economic ruin to the world, the worst blight upon the civilization of our times. Stop whiskey and gambling, and the country can easily stand a Democratic or a Republican tariff, and the farmers will get their rights and the negro problem will sink almost out of sight.

Why is it, then, that we hear nothing about how the candidates stand on these tremendous issues? Give us light!

This note is for a preacher's wife. The preacher need not read it. The writer in one of our exchanges gives as his experience in "running down" a preacher, and rather suddenly warning to others in trying to "trap" mediocre men who preach very poor sermons!

Once was wont to hear a man preach whose matter was mightier than his self, and I determined to run him down. I first of all got a peep into his library, where, to my astonishment, could not find a single volume of sermons, and very few books of any worth. His library was like himself—commonplace. Then I took his papers down, and went to periodicals, to see if he gleaned there. I looked into the Christian Age and the Christian Pulpit, and one or two other papers, and one of them I found a sermon too much for me. At last, one very unexpected day, when leaving my office, after a really splendid sermon from this now departed divine, I marked to his daughter what a sermon we had had, when the brother of seven-and-ninety years old, said, "Yes, ma always writes sermons."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Some of our correspondents are getting into deep water. Near the shore is safer.

S. J. Johnson, near Ellenville, shipped the past year 45,268 gallons of turpentine.

Alexandria, La., is talking largely of having a cotton factory of 5,000 spindles.

The National Prohibition Convention will meet at Cincinnati, instead of St. Louis, June 29, 30.

"Christian Willinghood" is a new phrase to us. We found it in a British exchange. How does it strike you?

Our country exchanges report that the late freeze did not injure the gardens and orchards as much as was feared.

Lord Tennyson has had $1,000 a year pension from the British government for forty years, and has devoted it all to the relief of authors in distress.

The Non-Such Professor says: "God communicates the good things of life to men, not that they should lay them up for their own vanity; but that they should lay them out for his glory."

Rev. W. Weakley, pastor of the North High Street M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., who is visiting the South in pursuit of health, made us a pleasant call on Monday.

The corner-stone of our new church in New Iberia was laid last Wednesday, March 30. Addresses were made by Judge A. C. Allen, of St. Mary, and Rev. W. H. LaPrade, of this city.

It is said that Dr. A. T. Pierson, who has been in Mr. Spurgeon's pulpit since the pastor was first taken sick, will be invited to remain as permanent pastor or, at least, for the term of five years.

Mississippi now says papers containing lottery advertisements shall not be sold within her borders. We hope the officers will execute this law better than they do the one against the sale of lottery tickets.

And now the publisher has added to the adornments of our office a splendid picture of Bishop Parker. It is one of the best likenesses we have ever seen. When we get one of Bishop McTear's portrait gallery of the former editors of this paper will be complete.

We judge from our exchanges of the M. E. Church that the presiding eldership will come up in the General Conference next May. One Conference, at least, has sent a memorial in favor of the Annual Conferences electing the presiding elders on the nomination by the Bishop.

The Central Methodist has entered its 36th year. The first number for its new year is a capital one, being enriched by communications from Bishops, editors, secretaries and educators. We congratulate Bro. Meek on his splendid paper, and trust that he will soon obtain the 10,000 subscribers he calls for.

We are very much delighted at the words of encouragement which come to us from some part of our work every week. We really believe the ADVOCATE is still growing in favor with preachers and people. We are working, not to please outside folks, but to please and help Missisippians and Louisianians.

Dr. Anderson, of the Florida Advocate, says the right thing in the right way when he says:

Our religion is a poor thing if it is not stronger than our party ties; and he is not Christ's freeman who is led by party fealty to vote against his religious principles and his prayers. Loyalty to party is a vastly lower principle than loyalty to Christ. Not expediency, but right, is the supreme thing; and right is the true expediency.

Rev. John A. Ellis, Hattiesburg, Miss., March 31: "Almost everywhere in the Seashore district our work is prosperous and promising. No longer should this be classed a second or third-rate district. It has the people, as to number and capability, and the versatility of resources to put itself abreast with the leading districts of the Mississippi Conference. Development—that is the need; and in this there has been fine progress for a number of years past."

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption. When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimentally made a preparation of Dr. H. IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY. Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

It is said that out of 600 prisoners in the State Prison at Auburn, N. Y., confined there for committing crimes while under the influence of drink, some 500 testified that they were led into intemperance by using tobacco.

We had the pleasure of visiting Forest, Morton and Brandon last week. We found Bro. McDonald and family comfortably domiciled in the district parsonage at Forest, cheerful and hopeful. Bro. McDonald looks as if the presiding eldership agreed with him. Bro. Bradford and Humby are moving along very nicely with their work.

"Years ago I came across this sentence in an old book: 'Never indulge, at the close of an action, in any self-reflective acts of any kind, whether of self-congratulation or of self-despair. Forget the things that are behind the moment they are past, leaving them with God.' ... 'What is needed for happy and effectual service is simply to put your work into the Lord's hands and leave it there.'"

(Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.) In conversation with a young minister some time ago he remarked that he did not know of a single soul converted under his ministry in full three years. While it is generally conceded that the Lord intends some to be sowers and others reapers in his vineyard, an experience of this kind points to something radically wrong somewhere. In the chapter of our Discipline on "The Trial of Those Who Think They are Moved by the Holy Ghost to Preach," this question is asked, "Have they gifts (as well as grace) for the work?" Our Lord said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Four of our exchanges lie on our desk, three of them of same date, representing four distinct sections of our country, and three of the Christian organizations. With one voice they cry, "In no uncertain language against 'Church Festivals.'" This is not the first time this state of affairs has fallen under our observation. We have never seen a religious periodical favoring them. Now, one of two things must of necessity be true. Either the religious press of our country is all wrong on this subject or church entertainments are inconsistent with the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Which horn will you take, brother? If there is a doubt in your mind, why not lean to the safe side and oppose them?

From the Missionary Reporter, for April, we glean the following facts from a carefully prepared article. The Board of Missions have spent on our several missionary fields since their organization the following amounts:

China, from 1848 to 1891.....$65,540
Central Mexico, from 1872 to 1891.....611,501
Mexican Border, from 1875 to 1891.....379,497
Brazil, from 1875 to 1891.....265,931
Japan, from 1886 to 1891.....138,630
Total for foreign missions.....$1,955,102

What has been accomplished with this money? We began with nothing. In 1870, twenty-two years ago, we had 1 foreign mission; now we have 4, and in three of them 5 Annual Conferences. In 1890, 2 missionaries; now 51 male missionaries, 43 wives of missionaries, 5 single lady missionaries; total, 99. Our two student helpers have increased to 110 native preachers, and our 56 native members to 5,945. And we are just getting started.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference.

Please don't let any other duty—even to widows and orphans—prevent you from carrying out the resolution of our Conference, viz: To use all diligence to secure the full assessments for missions (domestic and foreign) during first quarter. We greatly need all the cash we can get on both funds early as practicable. Through the treasurers and presiding elders it can be disbursed faster than collected.

Your brother,
J. P. DRAKE, Sec'y, etc.

Grenada District Conference.

The District Conference for Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, will begin its session at Charleston on Thursday morning, May 12, at nine o'clock, and close with the service Sunday night following. Brethren, let us come promptly, and in the spirit of the Master, to make this a gracious and profitable season. Will the preachers please see that Quarterly Conference Records are brought for review?

You will find in paragraph 72, pages 55 and 56 of the Discipline, the subjects which it is the duty of the Conference to consider. Let me urge the preachers in charge to bring written reports on each subject separately. This will greatly help the secretary and will facilitate the business. Thursday, the twelfth, will be devoted to the interests of Sunday-school. I suggest that each member study the subjects designated in the Discipline, and bring his mind well furnished on such points as he may deem of interest to present, and then speak his mind when the matter comes up in the course of business. Those members who go by rail will be conveyed from Oakland to Charleston, according to promised arrangement; but it will be better for all who can, to go by their own conveyances. Preachers in charge will please bring the Bishops' fund and the education fund.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN, P. E.

State Sunday-School Convention.

Railway arrangements have been made whereby the double journey may be made for one and one-third fare, by strict compliance with the following conditions:
(a.) The Texas and Pacific railroad have agreed to round-trip tickets to all delegates, on May 2 and 3, good to return until May 7, at (4) four cents per mile.
(b.) All the other railroads require that delegates shall purchase full-fare tickets to New Orleans, asking agents at time of purchase for certificates on blank, which certificates shall be countersigned by the secretary of the convention, and then presented to the railroad ticket agent, who will allow the rebate.

A Beautiful Monument.

There has been recently sent to Weston, Miss., a work of art from Kershaw's Marble Works, in this city, where it was designed and executed. We refer to the handsome monument erected to the memory of the late William Oliver, who for many years occupied high position as a Christian gentleman in Weston. The base, die, plinth, cap and urn of this monument are of Italian marble, while the shaft is polished red granite. The entire structure stands twelve feet high, and is very massive and imposing.

District Conference.

The New Orleans District Conference will convene in Carondelet Street Church, April 7, at 10 A. M. The recording stewards will please bring up their Quarterly Conference Records for official examination.

The Annual Conference Board of Missions has arranged to hold an anniversary meeting during the session of the District Conference. A program is being prepared, and several eminent speakers will appear on the platform. Let all the preachers and delegates so arrange their temporal affairs that they may give all the time set for the Conference to earnest deliberation upon the affairs of the church in the district.

MY FIRST CIRCUIT.

At Conference, when the preacher's name was announced and his field of labor stated, he received what was called the "plan." This was a schedule of where he was to preach, and when; the number of members; the names of the leaders, stewards and local preachers; the places of the Sunday-schools and their officers, with any other information the retiring preacher might think necessary for his successor.

"MY FIRST CIRCUIT."

Then were the words of Junior—"not loud, but deep"—as he received his first appointment as "an itinerant preacher."

There was poetry in the name then, as pronounced with the buoyant tone of young devotion and ambition, as the untrodden future lay all before him; and there is poetry in the name yet, as memory sweeps over more than forty years, and causes to live again in the soul the trials and triumphs, the fears and hopes, the failures and successes of itinerant life, and lights up each valley and hill-top, each forest and river with the manifested goodness and mercy of our Father in heaven.

As Junior approached the country town which gave name to the circuit, of which he was assistant preacher, sent on to take "the first round" and to announce the appointments for his senior, he studied his plan to recall the name of the steward at whose house he was to stop. With anxious heart he saw the modest spires rise before him, and invoked the divine blessing on himself and his labors. As he entered the town, some gentleman whom he met pointed out to him Bro. Mc—'s house. When he entered the premises, carrying his saddle-bags as artistically as he could, a small servant met him with: "Is you the new preacher? Mistress says come into her room." He followed the African maid to the house, entered a neat, plainly furnished room, and saw a venerable lady, evidently an invalid, lying on a lounge. She rose with a pleasant smile, extended her kind hand, and welcomed most earnestly and cordially the new preacher. She said: "Mr. Mc— is out in town. This is your home while on our circuit. The girl will show you to your room. When you have washed and rested, come back to this room. I am an invalid. Let me be a mother to you."

Language like this was most blessed to the heart of the preacher. He went to his room, found every comfort, and when not out preaching, this was a home, indeed, for the rest of the year. Bro. Mc— soon came in, gave a warm Irish, as well as Methodist welcome, and was a noble and true friend to the preacher and to the church. The young preacher felt deeply the responsibility of his position. The character of the church and of himself rested upon his fidelity, industry and well-directed zeal.

What a Sunday when he preached to the people his trial sermon! Many were the conflicts in its preparation; more during its delivery. How precious in the class meeting, which then invariably followed the sermon, except on sacramental occasions, to hear the brethren and sisters tell how they prayed for the preacher, and believed God would give souls for his hire!

At night the house was full, and, with the timidity partly worn off, the preacher felt more at home, and was grateful for some warm Amens during his sermons. What a field of duty was his! A great part of three counties, and twenty-three regular appointments during each four weeks. The circuit was large, the rides long and rough, preaching mainly in private or school-houses, and the whole salary one hundred dollars—if he could get it. He had to study, as best he could, by detached periods—on horseback, in hours snatched from sleep, out in the orchard or grove, or by the side of mountain or stream. He had to preach and lead class, peddle books and introduce new hallel tunes, get subscribers for the Advocate, and listen to long tales of hunter and border life, read aloud from the Advocate, and play schoolmaster to the children, admire the wonderful compositions called "quills," and bring some choice garden seed for the old folks; admire the pigs, tobacco or wheat of mine host—the leader or steward—or praise his fat steers, plump hogs, or fine horses. He must visit from house to house, whether sermon or "course of study" was attended to or not.

How closely did Junior prayerfully investigate his "call to preach," and how tremblingly did he await "the seals" that God gave of his ministry! How earnestly did he strive to study the mental and spiritual wants of his charge, and the Word of God as the great educator in "faith and practice!" He tried to form and carry out good resolutions as to habits and deportment; to be a man of study and of thought, and yet be eminently devoted to his one work—that of "calling sinners to repentance" and of "feeding the flock." He endeavored to form correct religious opinions as the basis of correct religious character, and to impress them on his people. He found the young people his true friends. A little attention won their love and opened their hearts to the truth. Soon he began to receive those unmistakable signs of favor—sweats of which he got enough to put on several pairs a day, and still have a surplus.

What a study of character and of religion did each appointment present! With what different phases of life did he come in contact! Holy heads, middle age and youth all united to love and respect their preacher. How many little acts of generous kindness indexed their affection! He had often to pay heavy toll for his pleasure. Sometimes either the grey-bearded sire or matron, and sometimes both, smoked; and, with the endurance of a Catholic or Hindoo devotee, Junior had to do penance in the tobacco smoke. It was more than a counterpoise to snow-white biscuits, flaky honey, broiled chicken, or juicy ham and good coffee.

The circuit was so arranged that the junior met the senior every two weeks, to enjoy his society, receive his advice, and consult him with regard to the work. My first colleague was, as I have styled him elsewhere, "a weeping prophet." He was one of the best of men that ever lived. With but little culture in letters or scholarly development, his heart was the home of every virtue. He had "a single eye," and Junior loved him as if he had been his own brother in the flesh. How shrewd his kind suggestions! How perfect his appreciation of ways and means! How simple and sublime his trust in God, in answers to prayer and in a preached gospel!

THE FIRST QUARTERLY MEETING.

This was a season of special interest. The presiding elder, the sacrament, the love-feast, the Quarterly Conference. With what dignity and grace did the elder preside! How firm, and yet how gentle! With what care did he attend to all the departments of official duty! How tenderly and faithfully he directed the attention of the stewards and leaders to the support and comfort of their preachers, and the necessity of personal and family religion!

In due time the season of revivals came; the spiritual Nile rose and dispensed its blessings. Conversion of souls was the oasis in the otherwise desert of the monotony and labor of circuit life. Now was enjoyed, in its richness, the gush of the overhanging palms. Now the preacher felt his commission endorsed in the Spirit's handwriting, "Labor was rest, and pain was sweet." The court-house, the cabin, the school-house were God's consecrated temples, and souls were there "horn of the Spirit."

When the Spring put on her beautiful dress and breathed her fragrance on the air, woods meetings were pleasant and gracious scenes. Then came the camp meetings, with their agreeable excitement, their mighty sermons, hymns and prayers, and grand outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in the upbuilding of the church and the conversion of sinners.

Junior became confirmed in the conviction that God had called him to preach; learned some new valuable lessons in human nature, and, with a heart dedicated to God and the lifelong work of the ministry, finished his first year as an "itinerant preacher," and went to Conference.

Now, reader, do you feel curious to know what was the preacher's pay, after riding on horseback three thousand miles, preaching hundreds of sermons, leading class almost daily, visiting the sick and burying the dead—in a word, attending to the duties of a traveling preacher? We will tell you. First, socks of different colors and shapes; second, a Conference suit of genuine broadcloth, made by a shouting Methodist tailor, of a fashion peculiarly his own; third, a brand-new bat of orthodox color and breadth of brim, by an equally orthodox brother, as was the tailor; fourth, we had a strong, sturdy pair of boots, the present of a faithful leader, and all our legal monetary allowance—one hundred dollars. Best of all, whose value no gold can represent and no arithmetic estimate, we had the largest pay in the warm love and faithful counsels and prayers of God's legitimate children. We enjoyed the same precious gospel whose honeycomb we broke and fed to the lips of others. God's presence, sweet and glorious, was in our heart and in our efforts to preach Jesus.

Scores and hundreds were powerfully converted to God by his Holy Spirit. It was a year hallowed by the blessing of God's new-born children, and those whom he called home to glory. We would not exchange its memories for diamonds, nor its hopes of richer reward in heaven for the wealth of a Vanderbilt.

W. H. ANDERSON.

Carlisle, Ky.

A Silver Pitcher.

Several years ago I had occasion to visit on church business an old and prosperous town not five hundred miles from the Advocate office. Among the people of the town, I knew personally only the Methodist pastor. Depositing my baggage at a hotel, therefore, I went to seek him, and to secure his introduction to certain influential citizens whom I hoped to interest in the business I had in charge.

From directions received, I had a general idea of the location of the parsonage, and it occurred to me, as I went along, to test the correctness of a rule I once heard—that to find where the preacher lives in any town, you have only to look for the dingiest and most dilapidated house in the neighborhood.

On the way I passed block after block of neat residences set in the shade of old oaks and elms, with here and there a closely shaven lawn and ornamental shrubbery and gay beds of flowers—all very refreshing to the view of a tired and dusty traveler. "Surely," thought I, "here, at least, Methodism can not afford to look doubtful." At last I reached a point nearly out of town, where I learned, upon inquiry, that the parsonage was "just around the corner." And there it was, not bright with paint, nor beautiful with surrounding grass and flowers, but true to a type which, I trust, will not long survive among us. A dingy old house, enclosed by a fence whose subtleties of patch-work were perishing monuments to the ingenuity of a long succession of needy pastors and negligent stewards. The yard was cheerless; the few trees stood near the division fence with a sneaking look of trying to steal into the neighbor's premises for better company, while, for entrance, there was a wretched old gate which, by reason of its having once been whitewashed, had put on a shabby-genteel air of trying to swing both ways at once on a single rusty hinge.

The kindly pastor saw me coming, and before I had time to make further observations, came out to meet me. Taking hold of the creaking gate, he gave it a shake and a back-banded lift and a complicated twist, all in one, and thus made way for me to enter.

In the house things were in keeping with the fence and gate. The room we entered was the parlor or sitting-room. The floor and walls were bare, but clean, showing, by the latter condition, that the mistress of the house made the best of her unsightly surroundings. For furniture there were four straight chairs of strictly different patterns; a rocking-chair armless on one side, and with a broken rocker on the other (as I should have discovered to my cost, had not my watchful host warned me against sitting down in it); a wash-stand, and on it—a silver pitcher.

After a pleasant interview I was about to take my leave, declining with diffidence a pressing invitation to dinner, when my host insisted that I should go with him to see his new church, which stood not far off. As we examined it within and without, he told me something of his pastoral work. There had recently been a revival in the charge. I remembered reading some account of it in the Advocate—a very modest account, of what I found to be an unusual work of grace. Spiritually, it had been a hard place, and, in spite of his modesty, it was evident that the pastor had done faithful, and even heroic, service before there appeared any signs of promise. "Until last year," he said, "our church-building was a very inferior one. On windy days we hardly dared to worship in it. But the brethren went to work, and you see the result. And they didn't forget the preacher," he added, as we re-entered the parsonage; "after our meeting a number of our Methodist brethren, with the help of friendly outsiders, clubbed together and made me a present of this"—pointing to the silver pitcher, which meantime had been filled with ice water. Then he poured out a glass for me, drank freely himself, and, holding up the pitcher, enlarged upon the beauty of its workmanship and its excellence as a refrigerator; remarking, among other things, how valuable it would be as an ornament to the parsonage. I listened in vain for some tone of irony, some recognition of the sickening contrast between the single vessel of silver and the desolation around it. The good man had hidden himself if he had any, and, while not lacking either in sense or sensibility, was blind to all but the bright and kindly side of his work and his surroundings.

In the afternoon we visited quite a number of homes in the town, mostly those of his own charge, from the appearance of which I judged that a goodly proportion of the membership were among the well-to-do. Among others we called at the house of one of the stewards, who lived a short distance from town. It was a magnificent estate, its fertile field extending for miles around the house, which was in the best style of the old plantation residence. Only the ladies were at home, but they received us cordially, and entertained us in a way which indicated that their wealth was more than a generation old. There were instruments of music that were not merely ornamental, rare books and old, and every evidence of culture by education and inheritance. I learned afterwards that the father had inherited large means, and had been brought up a Methodist, and had lived from childhood at or in the neighborhood of this place. Near by was the home of another steward, known far and wide as a prosperous man of business, who also had spent a good part of a long life at the same place.

It was evident from the manner in which he was everywhere received that the preacher had the love of his people and the respect and confidence of the public. There were frequent references to the new church, some mention of the revival, and an occasional allusion to the silver pitcher, but not one word at any place concerning the condition of the parsonage, or a purpose to furnish or repair it, either then or at a future time.

As I rode off at the close of the day, the contrasts I had noticed gave rise to the following reflections, which are commended to whom they may concern:

1. For nearly forty years two wealthy Methodist stewards had lived almost in sight of that parsonage, which was an eye-sore to the neighborhood, and that church which, for fully half that time, was safe only for small congregations on a quiet day.

2. There was a certain rich man who, according to Scripture, fared sumptuously every day for awhile, and then—he didn't.

3. The revival that ends with building a comfortable house for the people to worship in one day in seven, and leaves the preacher in discomfort seven days in the week and fifty-two weeks in the year, is not a good kind of a revival.

4. When a church, under these circumstances, waxes warm in love for its pastor, and must make him a present, and that present a silver ice pitcher, it might be prudent to observe two precautions:

First. Do not.

Second. Don't.

The best capital a young man can start with is education plus character, or rather character plus education. The young men who keep clear of the "quills" and aloof to the savings-bank are the young men who win.—Interior.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, Terry, Miss., April 6: "The predicted storm of April 2 reached the parsonage late in the evening, in the form of a pounding, the good people of Terry and vicinity sending in such things as only a preacher knows how to appreciate. We are grateful for such endowments."

Rev. J. White Davis, Black River circuit, March 31: "We are still trusting in the Lord to save sinners, though no conversions yet. Two accessions by letter and one infant baptized. The times, financially, are exceedingly hard. These people show their appreciation of the occupants of the parsonage in many substantial ways. Good congregations for this country. We need a sweeping revival and are praying for it."

Rev. M. L. White, Mt. Carmel, Miss., March 31: "First Quarterly Conference held; presiding elder was with us; stewards made good reports; circuit is still improving; have made out plans and set time for protracted meeting; brethren are looking forward for grand results. God is with us now, blessing our efforts. Surely Bro. Young is a visiting pastor everywhere on this circuit. He has been to every house. New yard and garden at parsonage. Fifty dollars' worth of furniture in house."

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, Crystal Springs, Miss., April 6: "Just closed a good revival service of eight days in my charge. Rev. L. S. Jones, of Capital Street, Jackson, Miss., did the preaching. He did fine preaching, and endeared himself to us all; and our verdict is: that his church have secured a prize in getting him as their pastor. The church is much revived. Our meeting lasted only eight days. Bro. Jones was called home to his sick family. Much and lasting good has been done."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, April 4: "Three of our members buried in one week's time. Bro. Martin Anding was buried on March 25; Miss Adams, one of our best young women, was buried at Bethel, March 27; Bro. Ellis Gaskins, one of our best young men, was buried on the first day of April. Many homes are being made sad by the ruthless hand of death. Bro. Gaskins' death was very sudden. The other two lingered a few days. All three of them were ready to go. Bro. James M. Weems, of Brookhaven, was with us at Bethel the fourth Sunday in March, and delivered a good talk on Mexico. His talk was listened to with intense interest by a large congregation. We are having a good deal of rain. Farmers somewhat backward with their work. We are working and praying for a great awakening. We ask the Advocate and all its readers to join us in this work and prayer."

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, Belen, Greenville district, March 30: "This is my first year in the army. We reached our post as soon as possible after receiving our orders. I rode my horse through from Columbus, Miss.; found my people waiting and watching for the new preacher. We have the largest work in the Conference—to be done—an entire county to ourselves (Quitman), with four appointments. A large per cent of our membership seems to have slide-tracked and lost fire. We are endeavoring, by the grace of God, to rekindle the flames, get back on the main line, and run on to the city of Christian Obedience. We have a Sunday-school at each appointment, which is at work. We have canvassed the charge with song and prayer; have taken five new subscribers for the dear old Advocate (New Orleans). Our beloved presiding elder was with us March 12 and 13, and gave us a feast of good things. Pray for Belen and her preacher."

Rev. B. W. Lewis, Lebanon circuit, April 4: "I am thankful and feel very much encouraged to see the interest manifested in this charge is so much better than it was when I came. We have two Sunday-schools. They are getting along extremely well. A very serious accident happened on yesterday. As some of our people were returning home from Lebanon Sunday-school, Sister John Butler was thrown from a buggy and had her ankle broken. Sister Butler is the life of the Sunday-school. Pray for her recovery, that she may soon be able to meet her class and help carry on the good work of the Sunday-school. I have good news for those who feel an interest in the good people of Mizpah Church. Last April the church was blown from its pillars, and there was no effort made to replace it until just a few weeks ago. I went down in that neighborhood, and went to work to have the church railed and pillars put under it. God was with me, and, of course, there was no fail. The church is now up and prospering. Thank God for good workers in the church! Pray for me and my work."

Rev. J. N. Ware, Matberville, Miss., April 1: "A few lines from this part of the country would not be amiss. We are moving along slowly, but trust successfully. Our Quarterly Conference was held at the time appointed. Bro. Mellen was on hand, and preached us two stirring sermons, which, I hope, will prove a blessing to those who heard them, as well as the places where we broke bread. The charge was financially better this quarter than it was last year at the first quarter. The spiritual interest is far below their duty. We are moving along slowly with the new parsonage. My patience has been tried on this line. We have worked along with our own hands and money until we have spent almost all we have of the latter. Wife and I have about $60 of our money and time in it. I have built the crib, stalls, garden, and bored a well with my own hands with a little hired help. Some of our people have done very well in helping, while others have done nothing. We hope to be able to move next week. When this home is finished, Clark charge will have the best parsonage they ever had."

Rev. I. T. Reames, Rayville circuit, Louisiana Conference, April 7: "I reached my circuit in time to fill my appointment on the second Sunday in January; but, owing to very unpleasant weather, was the only person at church. Since that date, though I have said nothing through the Advocate, I have been constantly engaged in preaching, visiting and attending to the several duties of a pastorate. The people among whom I have been sent to labor are as kind as any I have yet served. We have been made to feel welcome in several ways. Notwithstanding the 'hard times,' they have ministered to us in 'carnal things,' so that we have not lacked the necessities of life. May I, as pastor, be diligent in breaking unto them 'the Bread of Life!' The attendance on public worship is generally good and improving. The attention given to the preaching is also good. I think the general state of the church is on the advance. We are making strong efforts to build a church at Girard. Have raised in cash and reliable subscription $232.50, and about $150 more is promised. 'Pray for us,' that our labors may be crowned with success this year."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. J. S. Oakley is in ill-health. Bro. Treadwell and family are occupying the new parsonage in Sturges. Bro. Dollar and family are living in their own purchased home in Malheur.

Bros. Augustus, Randolph and Lester are ahead in Epworth League work. Who will be the next?

Decisive steps have been taken to build a Methodist Church in Empora. A lot and seven hundred dollars have been secured for the purpose. On with the work, brethren.

The Columbus District "Ministers' Institute" was a decided success. It was an enjoyable and profitable occasion. It would be well to hold one in each presiding elder's district, at least, once a year.

The recent meeting in Aberdeen resulted in much good. Bro. Bowen is busy preserving the fruits and gathering up the fragments. It is more important to follow up a victory than to gain one; to gather the harvest than to cut it down and leave it exposed to the weather and birds and beasts of prey.

Colportage and Sunday-school work progressing. G. W. BACHMAN.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE JUST.

BY REV. W. H. ANDERSON.

God made of man a temple grand
Of clay, by his omnific hand.
A statue science eyes can trace,
Endowed with all artistic grace.
Well fitted—a harmonious whole,
The honored home of an immortal soul.
Sin has this temple work of earthward,
The seeds of death has world-wide sown,
Yet man redeemed, from scattered dust Looks for "the resurrection of the just."

Our Jesus, in his earthly stay,
Was Godhead veiled in human clay.
Midst manger-cradle, miracles and cross,
These nature, blended without human dross,
Were worn by Jesus Christ divine,
That through them love of God might shine.
This dual nature suffered, triumphed, rose
From the grave—the last of foes.
To call on holiest love and trust,
God promised "resurrection of the just."

Through centuries of years and tears
Time may write his history in human tears.
Empires may rise, heroes and nations fall,
Whose names in vain tries memory to recall.
Names long forgot midst mortal strife
Shall live forever in "the book of life."
A cup of water to disciple given
Finds sure angelic record in Christ's heaven.
The hand that gave it soon returned to dust;
Reward obtain in "resurrection of the just."

In darkest hours, when sorrow rolls
Its saddest tide o'er buried and smitten souls,
When dearest hopes all new-made graves,
From deep despair this promise saves.
No tear for Christ—however small—
No trustful prayer at mercy-seat,
No thought at the Savior's feet,
Shall, though we wait again to dust,
Unhindered be at "resurrection of the just."

Easter.

BY MRS. L. CHARY SADLER.

"Rise, heart, thy Lord is risen,
Sing his praise without delays,
Who takes thee by the hand that thou likewise
With him mayest rise."
—Easter, by George Herbert.

"Easter is derived from a Saxon word, the name given to the festival which commemorates the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."
—Kibbe's Christian Year.

It is always held on the Sunday after the full moon which immediately succeeds the twenty-first of March, the vernal equinox. It can not be earlier than the twenty-second of March, or later than the twenty-fifth of April.

Though I was a born Methodist, from my earliest recollection the word "Easter" has been as familiar to me as Christmas; but it was only connected in my youthful mind with the observance of having a large supply of highly colored eggs to play with and to eat; and then the finding of the rainbow-tinted eggs in a nest on the beautiful Sunday morning in Spring, stowed away under some bush in the garden or back yard, and never once to get to it in time to see the rabbits that laid them, was a thing to be remembered. And about this fancy, there is nothing any more objectionable than there is about the Santa Claus idea and other customs connected with our Christmas observances. Take Santa Claus out of that, and there would be a mental slaughter of the infant world of the present day. Talk about innovations, Mr. Editor; if the Christian observance of Easter is an innovation for Methodists, then we might as well lop off the observance of Christmas also. Right here I will say that in this very lopping off from the mother church of so many beautiful and instructive observances of days has been one cause of losing to the church so many of the young people, after they begin to see and think for themselves. They find "metal more attractive" in other churches; and though they have been "trained up in the way they should go," they go some other way, and the straight-laced, from the Bishops down to the near-sighted parents and guardians, with whispers deep, wonder why so many of our youth leave the church in which they were reared and go to others, or plunge into the giddy world's vortex. So let us rise in our wisdom and second Bro. "Gilderoy's" motion for the widest, broadest, and greatest possible observance of Easter, beautiful Easter.

There have been many explanations of how and why the custom of having eggs colored, and of exchanging or playing with them, came about; but that is a harmless myth, and does not matter. The children and young folks will get their eyes opened as to this part of it, as I did, and then they will read, as they run, the deep spiritual meaning of the word "Easter"—to rise. Oh, the blessed greeting that first fell on the ears of those few waiting, trembling, spice-bearing women that came early to the sepulchre, from those "two men who stood by them in shining garments." "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen." That was the first beautiful Easter morn that gladdened this sin-cursed earth. Two angels and three or four women proclaimed to a lost world the glorious news that "Christ the Lord is risen to-day;" and though their words seemed but "idle tales" to those who listened, the Christian world has ever since that eventful morn been singing in rapturous tones,
"Vain the stone, the watch, the seal—Christ hath burst the gates of hell."

And this was on the first day of the week, our Sunday, which, from those days, has been hallowed as commemorative of the resurrection, and so is a weekly Easter.

"Can there be any day but this,
Though many suns to shine endeavor?
We count three hundred, but we miss;
There is but one, and that one, ever."

Countless blossoms and buds burst forth that, but a few days ago, were dead, or laden with sleet and snow. The butterfly bursts its grave-clothes and is gone upwards; all nature breathes anew and breaks forth in songs of gladness, as if proclaiming the realities of the Christian dispensation. And why may not Methodists observe and teach their children all of these things? It will surely edify and make a lasting impression upon their youthful minds. Decorating our churches, celebrating the day with speeches, dialogues, songs and thank-offerings for missions, or any other church purpose, will educate them spiritually and financially. I hope every Sunday-school in this nation will celebrate the coming "feast of feasts," as Easter was anciently called. But be sure and celebrate Easter Sunday—not "the Sunday following Easter Day," as Bro. "Gilderoy" has it. Oh, the blessedness of this comforting knowledge that enables the Christian to sing:

"Made like him, like him we rise—Ours the cross, the grave, the skies."

Sunday the True Sabbath.

As some tender consciences have been perplexed respecting the change of the Jewish Sabbath to our Sunday, or "first day of the week," a few plain thoughts on this subject may not be amiss.

1. The term "Sabbath" is a Hebrew word meaning "rest," and was first instituted by the Almighty at the finishing of his works. (Gen. ii, 2.)

2. We hear no more of the Sabbath till the time of the Exodus of the Israelites, when it was renewed by Moses as a "remembrance of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage." (Deut. v, 15.)

3. The Christian Sunday was not to honor our Sol, or orb of day, but as a fit symbol of Christ, "The Sun of Righteousness." (Mal. iv, 2.)

4. The gist or substance of the Sabbath is in keeping one-seventh of our time; hence no starting-point was given, but simply, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work and rest the seventh." We also keep the seventh, counting from Sunday as the Jews do from Saturday.

5. This also shows the divine source of the law, for no one on earth then knew that an absolutely synchronous Sabbath was an impossibility.

6. Its remarkable that all the Decalogue, or Ten Commandments, were re-enacted in the New Testament but the Sabbath; yet the Sabbath was not annulled, but left free to admit of its divine change.

7. So we find that after the resurrection of Christ no more mention is made of the Christians meeting to worship on the Jewish Sabbath, but on "the first day of the week" (as we see in Acts xx, 7; I Cor. xvi, 2), thus transferring Christian worship to our Sunday, which could not have been thus changed under the very eyes of the apostles without divine authority.

8. Hence we find in Jer. xxxi, 31, "I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and Judah;" and Hosea ii, 11, says, "The Jewish new moons and Sabbaths shall cease;" and St. Paul declares in Heb. vii, 12, "That where the priesthood is changed there is also a change of the law." So there is every reason to believe both from apostolic example as well as we shall show, from patristic testimony that this law of the Sabbath was changed by Jesus Christ.

9. Some are afraid of tradition, but on what do they take the Jewish Sabbath but tradition; and we have better grounds for our Lord's day.

10. We admit that the keeping of a Jewish Sabbath was proper till a better was inaugurated; but St. Paul's meeting the Jews upon their Sabbath was only to introduce the gospel.

11. That some of the Jewish Christians still kept Saturday and attended temple worship to bury the synagogue with honor.

12. The Jewish or Mosala Sabbath was evidently instituted for the Jews alone, and was not suited to a universal gospel, as it declared: "No fire should be kindled on that day in any of their dwellings," nor should "a burden be borne on any of their streets." (See Num. xv, 32; Jer. xvii, 17, 21.)

13. The roundness of the earth makes it an impossibility to keep a synchronous or uniform Sabbath outside of Palestine; even in America there is a difference of a fourth of a day, and at our antipodes a whole one.

14. There can be no doubt that St. John was at worship when he says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day" (Rev. i, 10), thus giving it the same divine appellation which David, in Psalm cxviii, 24, calls the Sabbath.

15. As the first Sabbath was instituted to commemorate the great work of creation, so the first day of the week was instituted to commemorate the greater work of redemption, which was completed on that day by the resurrection of Christ, who was raised for our justification. (Rom. iv, 25.)

16. The fact of Christ's resurrection on this day, the inauguration of the Christian dispensation at Pentecost, and the giving of the Holy Ghost all being on the Lord's day or our Sunday, very properly led the apostles and early Christians to observe it as their Sabbath.

17. In accordance with this we find the testimony of all the Christian fathers. St. Ignatius, A. D. 107, contemporary with the apostles, saying: "Those who have come to the possession of a new hope, no longer observe the (old) Sabbath, but live in the observance of the Lord's day." Justin Martyr, A. D. 110: "On the day called Sunday is an assembly of all who live either in cities or in the country, and the memoirs of the apostles and the writings of the prophets are read because it is the first day on which God dispelled the darkness and the original state of things, and Jesus our Savior rose from the dead." Irenaeus, A. D. 117, and Clement of Alexandria, A. D. 192, bear the same witness. Tertullian, A. D. 200: "On the Lord's day Christians in honor of Christ's resurrection avoid all anxiety and worldly business." Athanasius, A. D. 296, says: "The Lord transferred the sacred observance of the Sabbath to the Lord's day." As also Eusebius, the first church historian. St. Augustine, A. D. 380, says: "The apostles transferred the observance of the Sabbath to the Lord's day, and on this day men should abstain from work and attend divine services."

18. So we see an unbroken chain of testimony from the apostles down to the fourth century, in which Constantine did not appoint our Sunday, as some falsely assert; but as in his reign all the apostolic inspired writers were declared canonical, so also he simply confirmed our Sunday as having been universally observed as the Christian Sabbath.

19. We challenge any man to show where any apostle of our Lord ever engrafted circumcision or a Jewish Sabbath on a Gentile church, and this fact alone would justify us in keeping our Sabbath. No Gentile church on earth, so far as we have read, ever knew any other till in recent times.

20. When Jewish Christians contended with the Colossians against their eating swine, and keeping the first day of the week, the apostle rebuked them sharply, and charged the Colossians, saying: "Let no man judge you in meat or drink or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moons or of the Sabbath days." (Col. ii, 16.)

Now, if this be not authority enough for our Sunday-Sabbath, we know not what is. Here the Judaizing Christians, like those of circumcision to the Galatians, desired to bring the Colossians to observe their meats and Sabbaths, forbidding them to touch a swine or keep the Lord's day; but the apostle sternly rebuked them. Upon this text alone we could confidently rest our cause for our Sunday. But when we see all the early Christians keeping our Sunday, and the testimony of the holy fathers declaring it was commanded by the Lord through the apostles; when we see the absolute impossibility of our keeping a Mosala Sabbath, and the appearance of our blessed Lord coming so often to meet us on this day; seeing on this day he finished his great work of redemption and appointed it a rest of worship for his people; inaugurated his church and bestowed the Holy Ghost, all on this appointed day; and that from the holy apostles, the early Christians, and all God's people of every age and name, Catholic, Protestant and Greek, have kept this day for over 1800 years, and, though differing in many things, are all agreed in this, and the holy apostle commending those who objected to Gentile Christians eating swine and keeping the first day of the week, we hold it next to heresy to change our day or keep a Jewish Sabbath, but boldly stand on God's word for our Sunday, and know that it is very foolish at this late date for men to insist on our keeping a Jewish Sabbath or to abstain from eating Gentile meat.

G. T. V.

Geology and the Bible.

MR. EDITOR: I see in the ADVOCATE, of March 24, an article from "M. A. R.," in reply to "G. T. V.," on the subject of the six days of creation; and I must confess my surprise at his admissions and conclusions.

He first admits that: "It must be conceded the revelation which God has given us in his written Word is clearer and fuller, and, in consequence, much more likely to be rightly interpreted than that which he has given us in the volume of nature; and when points in conflict are presented which can not be brought into accord by careful investigation, it is undoubtedly the duty of the Christian to stand bravely by the Scriptures, however plausible the contrary theory may appear."

And, secondly, he says: "Natural historians have gone to cliffs and caves and bogs and mines and other excavations, and interrogated the various strata of the soil and the relics of extinct life as to the age of the earth, and confidently assert that tens and not improbably, hundreds of thousands of years have elapsed since its formation began." On the other hand, biblical students have opened the Book of Genesis, and equally as emphatically affirm that it teaches that our planet, and all things found upon it, were created in six brief days, each of twenty-four hours' duration, and that the world even now is less than six thousand years old. "These two views are widely different, plainly antagonistic, and both can not be true." "They can not be reconciled."

Thirdly, he says: "If these two views respecting the days of creation can not be harmonized—and that this is impossible is evident to everyone who will carefully note the radical points of difference between them—one of two things must be true: either the solenistic have misinterpreted nature, or some of us have misinterpreted the Bible."

And he says, fourthly: "Whether the creative days which transpired after the formation of the sun were of the same duration as those which preceded its formation, is a question upon which the Bible sheds no light. Geology, though it has no means of ascertaining the exact length of these successive periods, earnestly contends and adduces strong evidence to prove that all of them—both those which preceded and those which followed the creation of the sun—were vast eras of immense duration. This view I accept, since it commends itself to my reason, and the sacred oracle is silent."

Now, I trust that I have brought out his admissions in the three first paragraphs:

1. That God's revelation is plainer and fuller in his written Word than it is in the volume of nature.

2. That natural historians have gone and searched from nature's volume for evidence with regard to the six days of creation, and make a day represent a long period of time, probably a thousand years or more. And on the other hand, that biblical students have opened the Book of Genesis, and shown as emphatically that all things were created in six literal days of twenty-four hours each.

And (3) that these two theories can not be harmonized; that geologists have misinterpreted the science of nature, or biblical students have misunderstood the Bible. And yet the Bible is plainer than the volume of nature.

But (4) to my surprise, after having stated that the two could not be harmonized, and that the Bible is the plainer theory, and biblical students had decided that the six days of creation were literal days of twenty-four hours each, he ("M. A. R.") takes the theory of geology as against the Bible, that the days were long or indefinite periods, probably a thousand years or more; and also after having stated that we could not overthrow the theory of geology on the subject by sneers or laughter, but ought to study the subject carefully, and that the Bible is silent, and geology definite or plain, he closed without giving us the first proof of it—geology correctness.

Now, I want to ask why he does not give us some of the plain and convincing statements or arguments of geology that so thoroughly convinced him, or why he does not explain away the plain statements as recorded in the Book of Genesis. He ought to explain up, or, as he said, he ought to stand bravely by the Bible.

Now, I believe that the Bible is as definite as it well can be. It could not be much plainer without just stating that the days were just twenty-four hours long; or the day twelve hours and the night twelve hours, for it says: "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.... And God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night: and the evening and the morning were the first day."

Now, I want to ask, Could it be made any plainer? Moses was not speaking of a figurative day as Abraham's day or Moses' day, but was speaking of a literal day, or the day as distinguished from night: He (God) called the light day, as separated from the darkness, which he called night; and I believe, and it is evidently made as plain as it can be, that Moses intended by the term "day," as used here, to distinguish the light from the darkness, or the twelve hours as designated by the term "light." What is meant by the term "light" here? Let God answer. "Light." He called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night." He does not mean a long period of thousands of years of days and nights, but simply the evening and morning, or light as separated from darkness. And I believe, as the same terms are used through the entire account, the evening and morning, and light, that the days were about the same length, or nearly so as they are now, both before the sun was created and after. But Bro. "M. A. R." advances the idea that the days before the creation of the sun were not the same length as those after, and gives, as a reason, that they were not produced from the same cause, for he seems to think that the sun and the revolutions of the earth on its axis is the cause of day now, but was not then. Well, I must confess that that is a new idea to me, that the sun is the cause of day. I thought that God was the author and cause of all light, and that the sun and the earth were only agents to do his will. Light was the same, I suppose, before the sun was created as since; and the sun, in obedience to the laws of nature's God, only receives and emits the light from its author, and has nothing to do with the length of a day, only as he obeys nature's God.

I also believe God created the earth as it is now, and that it revolved upon its axis as fast before the creation of the sun as since; that it began its revolutions as soon as it was thrown out into immensity. If it turns on its axis now, why not then?

But, in conclusion, if the accepted theory of Bro. "M. A. R." and "G. T. V." is true, then the world was thousands of years old when the sun was created; and, again, if Adam was created early in the morning of the sixth day, and soon transgressed the law and was driven out of the Garden of Eden to till the soil, and to get his bread by the sweat of his brow, poor fellow! he never lived to see a Sabbath day to rest and refresh himself, and only one or two nights, possibly, to rest his weary body.

But I will now close for this time, hoping "M. A. R.," "G. T. V.," or some other advocate of the long-period theory, will rise up and explain. Brethren, please tell us why you think either one or all the days were longer than twelve or twenty-four hours. Give us the plain statements in science that convinced you; and, brethren, please sign your proper name. Don't be ashamed of your theory: I suppose you are doing very well, considering your side of the case; and now I wish to sign myself an earnest seeker after truth.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—April 17, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LAPELLE.

Psalms xix, 1-14.

God's Works and Word.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." (Verse 7.)

This Psalm is one of the most beautiful, and at the same time one of the profoundest of all David's productions. The transition of thought from the natural to the moral attributes of God, and thence to his own limitations and needs, concluding in earnest petition, is as remarkable for its naturalness as for its strict conformity to the laws of religious investigation and spiritual craving. The insufficiency of the material universe to wholly reveal God is apparent even while the Psalmist is gazing, rapt, at the heavens; the excellency of his moral nature, expressed in his Word, reveals by contrast the defects of the singer's own character, and suggests other fruits as yet unseen by his mind.

Ver. 1. "Glory...handiwork." The perfection of his natural powers, and the products of them. Paul refers to this natural glory as the "eternal power and Godhead." The thought is not simply that God made them, but that a glorious God only could have made so glorious things.

Vers. 2, 3. Cumulative testimony. It is the same idea expressed by the phrase "the voices of the centuries." Voiceless, yet eloquent, all nature gives silent testimony to the glory of God as seen in his handiwork. The listening soul hears "sermons from trees and stones." Coleridge has the same thought in his celebrated epistrophe to Mont Blanc,

"Earth, with her thousand voices, praises God."

Vers. 4, 5, 6. St. Paul, quoting (verse 4) in Romans x, 18, says "sound," instead of "line." This determines the meaning to be not measuring line, nor boundary line, but rather a sounding, music-making string, as of a harp. All nature tremulous with praise; vocal also, words and music, sounding everywhere.

The sun, light-giving, heat-giving, vigorous, full of joy, shedding cheer all around, the crowning, most glorious object in nature, complete the description of the works of God, and is the fittest symbol of his glory.

Ver. 7. The soul without God's law would turn here and there, seeking guidance and rule of action; it would ever go astray. God's law, his revealed will, "converts" the soul, turns the soul with itself, furnishes guide and rule of action. Convert does not mean regenerate. The word relates to moral conduct, not to spiritual life.

"Testimony," declaration of facts, especially concerning the nature of God, and of man, and their proper relation to each other; revealing him, as the "Armament" did "His handiwork." A sure source of instruction.

Ver. 8. By "statutes" we are to understand special precepts; special applications of the general principles of his law; special requirements and prohibitions. These are "right"—just, wise, adapted to our needs, expressive of his own righteousness. And they are not grievous. On the contrary, they "rejoice the heart," because it is safe to obey them, and because in their careful adaptation to our circumstances they indicate God's care for us.

"Commandment"—not so much God's commandment to us is here meant; rather his commandment for us, concerning us. His general arrangements, his special provision. These bring light to the eyes, gladness, hope. His commandment is "pure"—no admixture of anything that is not helpful. Like the "milk of the Word," it is sincere, strained honey. "All things work," by his commandment, "for good," brightening the eyes. "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart."

Ver. 9. A regard for God, full of reverence, and of humility, and of obedience. "Clean," not groveling nor full of duplicity, nor slavish; not leading to fondness of any sort; not defiling. Permanent in its effect, tending to bring the soul into direct forms of righteousness.

"Judgments"—decisions. Not simply the final one, but all God's decisions concerning those who "commit their way unto him." His choices are wise. He knows best. His conclusions are in accord with facts; they are righteous.

Ver. 10. "They"—all these expressions of God's moral nature; all these indications of his will. They are worth more than wealth, for they bring peace and happiness; they are "sweeter than honey," for they delight the soul; they give fitness to the spirit.

Ver. 11. Of themselves excellent, but bringing reward only to those who keep them. So Jesus says concerning his wonderful sermon on the Mount. So St. James says. (See James i, 21-26.)

Vers. 12, 13, 14. The Psalmist, after beholding the glory of God in nature, and his righteousness and goodness in his revealed Word, turns his eye inward. Full of defects known to himself, he fears many more. "Who can understand?" He longs to be like his Maker. He ardently desires that he, in his place and according to the scope of his powers, shall be perfect. He wishes God's eye to be satisfied—the eye that "is too pure that it should regard iniquity." So he prays, "Cleanse thou me from secret (hidden from himself) faults." All conscious violations of God's law are "sumptuous;" they are defiant. If a man sin not knowingly, and is cleansed from error—from faults that haunt the soul, even if they are not sinful in the strictest sense—then will he be "right" as well as "innocent" from transgression. What David desired was that God should see nothing wrong in him; that in thought as well as in speech he should be "acceptable in his sight." But this could only be as God was his "strength and redeemer."

1. Nature shows us much of God, but not all.
2. God's Word shows us more, and the way to all.
3. Sinlessness of heart and clean living grace, and his sustaining power is the condition of complete knowledge of God.

Help Needed.

MR. EDITOR: I have an important case to present to the church through out the land. It will appeal to every generous Christian heart. My deceased, Rev. John R. Sharpe, fell his post of duty in this city, where he was a member of the church, and the cause of Christ and the honor of Methodism was at stake. He died of yellow fever during the awful epidemic of 1888. He left a widow and two children without any of the world's goods except a small home at St. Marks, Fla. On this property there is a debt of one thousand dollars.

Mrs. Sharpe can not pay this debt. It must be paid or she will lose the property which would throw her and her children out of a home. Will the church and all who are friends of the widow and orphan help me save this property for a woman who, with her husband, stood to the post of duty in the darkest hour of our ever fallen upon our Methodism in this city?

All those who will help, send contributions to me. I beg the presence to mention this matter to the respective congregations.

Fraternally,

J. B. ANDERSON.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER.

High License Suits the Liquor Traffic.

HERE IS WHAT THEY SAY:

The Wine and Spirit Gazette:

The solution of this political problem is to be found in local option; to allow the people to settle the excessive question in a way that best suits their peculiar habits and customs. It is the plan proposed by the Republicans in their last State platform, which has been advocated by this journal for years as the only feasible and practical solution of the liquor issue.

Mr. J. M. Atherton, president of the National Protective Association, the leading organization in this country of distillers and wholesale liquor dealers:

The true policy for the trade to pursue is to advocate high license until prohibition is destroyed or its political efforts broken. I repeat that our best weapons to fight it with are high license and local option by townships.

Mr. Peter E. Her, a big Nebraska distiller:

High license acts as a bar against prohibition. It also gives the business more of a tone and legal standing. In all my experience of ten years in Ohio before the temperance movement twenty years here previous to high license and shoe, I believe that high license is one of the greatest laws for the liquor traffic and for men interested, as well as people at large, there is.

Metz & Bros., the leading brewers of Nebraska:

High license has been of no injury to our business. In our State we think it bars out prohibition. We are positively certain that had it not been for our present high license law, Nebraska to-day would have prohibition.

Messrs. H. H. Shufelt & Co., Chicago distillers:

We believe that high license is the only remedy for prohibition. We think the trade in any State should favor high license and just restrictions. That is the only solvent of the question.

We find the following in the Nashville Issue:

Drink and a Spring Hal.

"It makes the heart sick to think of the misery and degradation to which the demon drink subjects those who have given themselves up to him. The Philadelphia Methodist vouchers for the truth of this incident:

"Papa, can you please give me fifty cents for my Spring hat? Most all the academy girls have them."

"No, May, I can't spare the money." The request above was persuasively made by a sixteen-year-old maiden, as she was preparing for school one fine Spring morning. The refusal came from the parent in a curt, indifferent tone. The disappointed girl went to school. The father started for his place of business. On his way thither he met a friend, and, being half-fellow-well-met, invited him into a saloon for a drink. As usual, there were others there, and the man that could not spare his daughter fifty cents for a hat tipped the crowd. When about to leave he laid half a dollar on the counter, which just paid for the drinks. Just then the saloon keeper's daughter entered, and on going behind the bar said:

"Papa, I want fifty cents for my Spring hat."

"All right," says the dealer, and, taking up the half-dollar from the counter, handed it over to the girl, who departed smiling.

May's father seemed dazed, walked out alone, and said to himself: "I had to bring my fifty cents here for the rum seller's daughter to buy a hat with, after refusing it to my own daughter. I'll never drink another drop." And he kept his pledge.

And this from the same live temperance paper:

When everything else I have said and done is forgotten, I want the words I have spoken for prohibition in Atlanta to be remembered. I am prouder of my share in the campaign that has ended in victory. I espoused its cause deliberately, and I have worked for its success night and day to the very best of my ability; my only regret was that my ability was not greater. (The late H. W. Grady, of Atlanta, Ga., 1887.)

COFFEE WAGONS.

Last month we urged upon our W. O. T. U. the propriety of taking up the Chicago method of sending around coffee wagons. We clip from the St. Louis Christian Advocate the following upon this important subject:

The Rev. G. K. Flack, of Chicago, has started what he calls a gospel wagon, with a cabinet organ in one end and a coffee-tank in the other. The wagon makes the rounds of the lumber yards at noon. When the men start out for beer the music on the organ begins, and a placard is hung over the coffee-tank, "Coffee is better than beer, and you can get it for nothing." The men are taking kindly to the coffee and the gospel songs. The Rev. Mr. Flack says he has seen men throw away the beer in their pails to have them filled with the coffee. If the movement proves a success, other wagons will circulate in the labor districts.

Col. McCloughry, chief of police in Chicago, says: "The biggest burden society bears to-day is crime," and adds, "that with every twenty-five percent increase of American population there is forty per cent increase in crime, that is, of crime as catalogued in the number of convicts for jails and penitentiaries." And the saloon system that manufactures the bulk of this crime is backed by 4,000,000 church

Our good brother, Mr. J. W. Bodley, of Staunton, Va., closes a letter to the Anti-Liquor, a Virginia temperance paper, in the following emphatic language:

We might as well try to regulate a cancer as to hope to successfully regulate the drink cure.

The right thing for Christian men to do is to ask the blessing of God upon the policy of their respective parties as touching the liquor question, and if they can not do so without choking, then they ought to get into a party where politics and religion are not inconsistent one with the other, for in voting for license parties and license candidates, they are verifying the Scripture, which says: "He that bludgeoned him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

Let us draw a line. Ascertain upon which side of the line God is. Get on God's side and then go into the fight, hammer and tongs, and if you do not win you will have the satisfaction of knowing that the scolding tears of no drunkard's child will ever blister your soul in hades for any act of yours.

It is exactly right that the Christian citizen should take his religion into his politics, not only in the matter of the Louisiana State Lottery, but also in the matter of the iniquitous liquor traffic.

As the saying goes, ministers and laymen should "vote as they pray." We never hear in any pulpit a prayer in favor of "the saloon," for the praying is all the other way. The lady in their prayer meetings always pray against evil, and frequently by name against "the saloon." There is only one way for all such to avoid the charge of hypocrisy, and that is to vote with all other consistent Christians against saloons whenever the question is up.

The following is found in the Washington, D. C., correspondence of the Nashville Issue:

Boys who make a practice of visiting pool-rooms were given a terrible warning here last week, in the murder of one boy, seventeen years old, by another eighteen. They had spent Monday (Washington's birthday) together, and were both under the influence of liquor when the tragedy occurred. Think of that, ye friends of the dram-shop! Notwithstanding the law against the sale of liquor to minors, these boys purchased it. They had a quarrel while playing a game of pool, and one of them crushed the skull of the other with a billiard cue, and he died from the effects of the blow the next morning. Think of this! Two more broken-hearted mothers; two more broken-hearted fathers! One promising boy cut off suddenly from a life of usefulness, and the other on his way to the gallows for murder! And, mind you, this is not a heathen community, but the capital city of the most powerful Christian nation on the globe, a nation which claims to lead the vanguard of civilization, and yet the infernal traffic which is responsible for this murder and a countless number of others, is legal.

This from the same paper is quite true:

The Christian Church has no foe so powerful as the liquor traffic. No monopoly has such political power. The monster holds in its grasp 28 States; the eight are in the balance. All the church and young people's societies can do fails to reach the masses, and many that are apparently saved go back to their cups. For every dollar spent for church purposes in this country, $30 are spent in the liquor business.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, of St. Mark's Presbyterian Church, in New York City, has a refreshing way of stating things plainly. Here is what he says:

The demand that is heeded is the demand of the political forces upon which the officials rely for support. Political parties in New York and all over the land are to-day so constituted that the votes of decent citizens neutralize each other and the rum vote holds the balance of power. What decent citizens must do is to quit "decent manding" from handicapped, helpless Republican and Democratic standpoint, and unite in a new party to possess the government in the interest of the public welfare, and then themselves, through chosen representatives, whom they know to be true, and who are elected directly by and dependent directly upon the votes of such political union of our best citizenship, proceed to enact and execute those measures required by the public welfare.

This proposition is so true and simple that a child can see it, and it holds without itself the conditions of speedy and practical success; yet rum and monopoly rule our cities, because the larger share of decent citizens suffer themselves to be kept divided by old party prejudices.

We take the following from that wide-awake paper, the Weekly Progress, of Shreveport, La., edited by our friend and brother, Cal. D. Hicks:

The recent strong and great uprising of the people against the lottery in Louisiana, the liquor dealers' bill in Albany, and the race-track gambling bill at Trenton should give us heart and hope to all who are engaged in warfare against evil in any form. The day is far distant, we believe, when we shall see an uprising greater than any one of these against the whole liquor traffic. Heaven haste the day!

We add our Amen to the prayer for a speedy coming of that day.

In 1727, in the House of Lords, Lord Chesterfield said: "Vice, my lords, is not to be licensed, but to be overcome and suppressed; and instead of encouraging the sale of these liquors we ought to burst the vials that contain them." He denominated those who were engaged in the liquor traffic as "artists in human slaughter."

The following is from The Issue:

High license increases the power of the liquor monopoly. It makes the business safe and permanent, in that it introduces it behind the cupidity of the taxpayers. Capitalists feel safe to invest therein—not only liquor lands, but real estate places. Brewers and distillers combine their forces, forming huge trusts which control the business, and landlords double and quadruple their rents for the liquor palaces erected by the liquor magnates. All of us are acquainted with the mammoth liquor trusts that have sprung up in this country within the last few years, notwithstanding the Sherman Anti-Trust law. And as to the condition of our cities, we find in Chicago, for instance, that 10 per cent. of the saloons are owned by the brewers.

And the Catholic Review (September 20, 1891), in an article on "The Beer Barons," stated that they "to the number of 18 or 20, hold no less than 4,710 chattel mortgages on saloon fixtures. They are almost as powerful making candidates for State and municipal office as the saloon and the dives are in making subjects for the penitentiary and the State prison. High license, therefore, has powerfully assisted the liquor business to become dominant in politics."

These figures are from the Wine and Spirit Gazette, a liquor organ:

Grain and other materials used in the production of distilled spirits during the fiscal year footed up 20,347,641 bushels. The total product of fire-water from grain was 114,178,077 gallons, an increase of more than 6,000,000 gallons over 1890. The quantity of liquor used exceeded by over 1,000,000 bushels the amount used in 1890. It was over 5,000,000 bushels more than the average for the last ten years. It may interest some to know that the yield of spirits from each bushel of grain last year was 4.32 gallons. Enough liquor was produced from grain alone to give each inhabitant of the nation nearly two gallons. Not quite 2,000,000 gallons of rum were also made in this country. The total product of fruit brandy was 1,804,712 gallons.

This from the Nashville Christian Advocate is encouraging news from abroad:

The cause of prohibition is making great headway in Sweden. Already many parishes or communities enjoy absolute prohibition. Total abstinence societies are numerous and strong. Clergymen take an active interest in the work. Altogether the outlook for prohibition is encouraging. A candid parliamentary election six weeks ago. The cause of temperance has long received official recognition and support. Last year twenty-five thousand crowns were appropriated toward this cause. Of this appropriation a certain sum is set apart as prizes for the best essays on the best method of dealing with the traffic.

Shakespeare says in the Comedy of Errors that many a man has more hair than wit, but that a man has not much wit to lose his hair.

The same criticism might apply to women, yet how many women are who neglect to give the attention they should to this chief adornment, and often while yet in the prime of life are annoyed by its absence.

Fortunately they are not left without a remedy, for what is lost may be regained by the use of the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, a preparation which in hundreds of cases has soiled like a charm in giving a luxuriant growth and fine natural color where all the evidences of premature decay had been manifested. A single trial usually shows its efficacy, and it at once exerts a stimulating, refreshing and cleansing influence on the scalp. It can be absolutely depended upon to overcome baldness and restore the hair to its normal color. The Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

BRIEFS.

Two of the best things that a people can have are sobriety and purity. These are the best defenses for the individual, the family and the State. But when the law itself breaks down these defenses by a licensing system which pours out a flood of drunkenness and impurity over all the land, it is time for the Christian conscience to be aroused and the Christian vote to be cast for men who will exert themselves honestly and earnestly to undo the mighty mischief which past legislation has put upon us. There is no earthly power equal to a ballot that is backed by an aroused conscience.

Is there a thoughtful man or woman among our constituency who does not see that the time has come for every Christian to take more interest in the politics of the land? Does not the welfare of the State depend upon its prevailing politics? Is there any welfare to a State where iniquitous practices prevail in politics? Is not the Christian seeking the highest good of the State as well as the highest good of himself? Does Jesus Christ take no interest in politics? Is not His saying, "He that is not with me is against me," as true in politics as anywhere else? Christian voter, had you not better ponder these questions?

The Christian is said, in the Word, to be a soldier. A soldier's business is to fight. Jesus Christ said that when he said, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword." The Christian's business is to fight evil of every kind. He can make no distinction. There is one class of evils that many Christian soldiers seem to think they have no commission to fight, and that class is political evils. Some people are so afraid of "going into politics" that they have practically deserted the colors of their Lord. On all sides the corruptions of politics are calling upon Christian soldiers to arouse themselves. The saloons and gambling dens, and other evils that shall be named here, can only be overthrown by the united efforts of the Christian soldiers of this land! Reader, are you one? Then show it.

"He that is not with me is against me," said Jesus Christ. There are times in the history of Statehood when these words will apply with far-reaching significance. Moral questions are coming to the front everywhere, and the Christian can not ignore such questions without breaking faith with his Lord. Christ is on the side of righteousness everywhere. The Christian man who tries to shelter his want of loyalty to Christ under the plea of choosing "the least of two evils" is against Christ, for Christ was never found in that position, and never did he place such an alternative before any man! The Christian is not to choose "between" evils, but he is to oppose them all with all his might. When he does this he is "with Christ," whether it be a matter of individual, family, social or political life.

The New Orleans District Conference.

This body of ministers and laymen convened in Carondelet Street Church, in this city, April 7. Bishop J. C. Keener opened the Conference by reading part of Luke iv, singing Hymn 220, and prayer. Dr. J. M. Beard was chosen secretary. The hours for meeting and adjournment were fixed by vote, the Committee on Quarterly Conference Records was appointed by nomination of the presiding elder, after which the Bishop called the charges and the pastors reported the various interests of the church.

In the main, the reports showed the church in a healthy, spiritual condition.

While the attendance upon the services is not as good as is desirable, there is little cause for discouragement. The mission work in the district has been enlarged beyond that of last year and much fruit is expected in the future. The Sunday-school work is progressing somewhat, and the interest in the Epworth League branch of the service is awakening and the promise is fair for large results. Family worship is held regularly in many households, and the number of "families that call upon the name of the Lord" has increased over that of the past. The prayer meetings are well attended, and class meetings are regularly held in many of the charges. The finances showed the strain of the hard times that are in operation everywhere; but none of the preachers have suffered much thus far. Our people generally over the district are in peace and harmony, and the indications all point to a year of successful work in gathering a harvest of souls for the Master.

Among the visitors to our Conference was Rev. George Needham, of the Denver Conference. Being called out by Bishop Keener, he gave a most interesting account of the growth of our church in that region. Notwithstanding obstacles and positive opposition from other churches, we have gone along and worked and suffered and grew until we now present a gratifying appearance. The Conference was well entertained by Bro. Needham's talk, and at its close Bro. Cassidy, of the Louisiana Conference, said that the first preacher that ever preached in Denver was a Southern Methodist, and he heard his first sermon. This was before the war.

Rev. Robt. Harry, agent for Centenary College, gave the Conference a strong talk on the subject of his work, and left it impressed favorably with the prospects of future success. Surely the Methodists of Louisiana—men and women—will do what is in their power to aid the college to attain a still higher position in the great and all-important work of Christian education for the future citizens of this commonwealth!

One excellent feature of the Conference was the Missionary Anniversary held on Friday evening. This was admirably arranged by Bro. Frank Parker, the secretary of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions. He was wise in his selection of speakers for the occasion, having secured the attendance of Dr. Lambuth, our missionary secretary, and Dr. Weems, former missionary to Mexico. The meeting was held in Carondelet Church, and a good audience was in attendance. Rev. Robert Randle, president of the Conference Board, acted as chairman of the meeting. The Scripture lesson, hymn and prayer all combined to put the audience in frame for the reception of two as good missionary speeches as it has ever been our good fortune to hear. Dr. Lambuth has the rare faculty of walking right into the hearts of his hearers and capturing them at once, and then they see with his eyes and hear with his ears and their hearts throb responsive to his heart. The hearers were soon in Japan and China, and the speaker guided them at his pleasure and taught them more of those far-away lands in one brief hour than they could have learned in many hours by reading. A large map aided the speaker in impressing upon the mind the chief points of interest in those great eastern empires.

Dr. Weems followed in a thoughtful and well-digested speech. He gave our people some very fine points for meditation, which will be sure to result in good hereafter. Mexico is still upon his heart, and he put it again upon the hearts of his hearers in a way that will bring forth blessed fruit.

We are confident that the result of this missionary meeting will be the quickening of the pulses of our people all over the district. In this matter our Conference Board has inaugurated a revival on the mission line, and we trust to see the same sort of meeting held in every district in the Conference. The Board has the thanks of the presiding elder and preachers and all the members of the district for the rare treat which it afforded them by this anniversary meeting.

Dr. Hunnicutt, president of Centenary College, made one of his strong speeches on Christian education, much to the edification and delight of the Conference. He got $100 on the endowment fund. By a rising count it was found out that nearly everybody in the Conference had already subscribed to that endowment. The college is on a good foundation, with large and sufficient buildings and good faculty and about $70,000 endowment fund and the prospects good for the future.

The affairs of the Seashore Camp Ground Association were carefully looked into. The report to the Conference of its finances and other matters revealed a healthy condition. Improvements are being made continually, and the promise is for a good meeting in July.

The delegates to the Annual Conference are these brethren: T. J. Reames, W. B. Thomson, W. W. Carre and E. P. Mackie. The alternates are: R. S. Rickey and N. B. Sligh.

The next session will be held in Rayne Memorial Church. The closing half-hour was occupied by speeches from Dr. Lambuth and Bro. R. Randle, in which they gave some valuable hints and suggestions in regard to the domestic mission work. The 232nd hymn was sung with spirit, and the Conference adjourned with the benediction by the presiding elder.

The United Confederate Veterans' Reunion.

The annual reunion of the old soldiers of the Southern Confederacy was held in our city during the past week. From all parts of the South they came by thousands and received a welcome such as New Orleans only can give. Major-generals, lieutenant-generals, brigadier-generals, colonels, majors, captains and privates took possession of the town and held it firmly for nearly a week. Public places and private homes were thrown open for their reception and entertainment. With these war-worn and scarred veterans came many of the fair women of our Southland and gave the additional charm of beauty and loveliness to grace the occasion. Addresses of welcome were made by Mayor Shakspeare and Gov. Nicholls. The address of the reunion was made by the silver-tongued orator of Virginia, Hon. J. W. Daniel, and was a masterly speech and applauded to the echo.

One of the prominent features of the reunion was the great parade Saturday afternoon, when thousands of the old soldiers of the "lost cause," to the inspiring strains of martial music, marched four abreast along our principal streets. We do not know how many were in the parade, but it was forty-five minutes passing our office.

What a time it was for the old soldiers! How the tragic scenes of the past were revived! How the thrilling incidents of the years of war trooped through the memory! What a pleasure to recount the deeds of valor enacted on "fame's eternal camping ground!" How the heart beat quick and the tear trickled o'er the cheek as reminiscences of the fearful struggle were recalled. Alas! the roll is growing smaller, and one by one the old veterans are passing over the river.

The Search for Happiness.

BY REV. J. B. WALKER, D. D.

This is the widest and most universal of all the searching under the sun. Little children, maidens and old men are all searching for happiness. The humbly and the nobly born, the renowned and the obscure, the man of "one" talent, and the man of "five," the cultivated son of civilization and the unlettered barbarian, men of all the continents, and all the zones, and of all the nationalities.

Many and various have been the speculations as to the nature of happiness. Among the ancients more than three hundred opinions were given as to what constituted the "chief good." Some said health, some said wealth; some, success; some, knowledge; some, power; some, marriage; others, celibacy; some, friendship; some, the love of your children; others, the kind appreciation of men. And so the tastes and educations of men led them to consider this, that, or the other, as the "one thing needful," and first and supremely to be sought.

The grand and general mistake has been to seek blessedness by improving our circumstances rather than improving ourselves; forgetting the great truth that it is not what we have, but what we are, that makes us blest. So men have been saying, "More wealth, more honors, more power, more pleasures." These are all possessions outside of ourselves, possessions that may not improve or exalt our characters. Our needing, longing natures with all those things may be famishing with soul-hunger. These material and external possessions do not constitute the food of the soul; it must be fed on other and better food. Men have countless times thought that they had found the tree that bore the fruit of true happiness; but, alas! when they have tasted and tested they have found the fruit green and sour. It was not what they had hoped and anticipated. After all their toils and hopes they have said in the bitterness of their disappointment, "Behold, it is Leah;" not at all what they had sought and hoped. We are spirits dwelling for the present in material bodies. These bodies are ever wasting and must be continually sustained and renewed with appropriate material supplies, but these material supplies do not meet our mental and spiritual wants.

Our intellectual and moral nature may be starving in the midst of mere material abundance. There are some of these seekers after happiness who rise a step above and a step beyond these mere materialists, who revel in sensualities and vainly seek to fill an empty mind, and hope by advancing into the higher realms of thought to find the object of their longings. This is a higher and nobler longing, but man has more than mere mental wants.

He is spiritual; he was made in the likeness and image of God. He of all the creatures on earth only is capable of God. And he is greater and endowed with higher aspirations than any other earth-born creature. All on earth is less and lower than himself. He is a wide sea into which a thousand earthly rivers may pour their floods, and never fill him; there is room for thousands more. It is God, and only God, that can meet man's vast immortal needs. The beautiful pearls of the ocean, the flashing gems from the mountain, and the rich gold from the mine, can not satisfy the hunger of the soul; neither can the seals of office, the sceptre of power, the throne of empire or the crown of royalty meet the mighty needs of man.

As the blaze of countless lamps, the splendor of the stars can not illuminate and warm the earth; there is still shadow, darkness and cold; the sun must dispense his solar splendors and breathe his glowing warmth that there may be fullness of light, warmth, fruitfulness and joy; so when all things earthly have done what they could to make us blest, there is still felt to be a need which nothing less than the "Sun of Righteousness, rising with healing in his wings," can supply. The divine and gracious Savior has said what only an Infinite One can say: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden and I will give you rest." He that comes exclaims,

"This is all my happiness,
On Jesus to depend."

The Floods.

Since our last issue there have been unprecedented floods in various parts of the country. In Mississippi the damage has been very great. Railroads have been washed up, residences, barns, fences, crops and stock have been destroyed by the wholesale. It is estimated that around Columbus, Miss., alone 100 lives have been lost. Just at this time such a catastrophe is a serious matter. The people are in condition to feel even a small loss severely; but who can estimate the damage resulting from such floods as have swept over them? The State and general government should be prompt in affording relief.

Meeting of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College.

A meeting of this Board was called for Wednesday, April 6; but owing to the incessant rains and washout along the lines of railroad, it was Thursday before so many as a quorum could be gotten together, and most of those not in the city were unable to reach here even then. Under these circumstances those present felt unwilling to proceed with the most important business to come before them, and after receiving the reports of the agent and treasurer, adjourned to meet Wednesday, April 27, at which time it is intended to elect a president and, possibly, a faculty for the college. Before adjourning, however, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

THE W. H. TRIBBETT SCHOLARSHIP.

As the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, we hereby express our grateful appreciation of the large-hearted benefactions to this institution by Capt. W. H. Tribbett, of Terry, Miss. He has evidenced his hearty interest in this great enterprise from its inception and has freely consecrated his means to aid in its upbuilding. His last liberal gift of $2,500 for the purpose of endowing a scholarship to assist meritorious young men in securing a collegiate education calls for special and profound acknowledgment. He has thus shown his intelligent recognition of the great value of Christian culture, and that it is the divine function of the church to guide and guard the academic training of the land.

Resolved, That we assure Capt. Tribbett of our highest appreciation of his distinguished generosity, and pray that the richest blessing of Heaven may ever be his "goodly heritage."

Resolved, That this fund shall be known as the "W. H. Tribbett Scholarship" in honor of the noble philanthropist, and that he be requested, as long as he may live, to nominate and appoint the person or persons who may be the recipients of this benefaction from year to year.

About the hardest thing we have seen about the clergy is this: "Some ministers, supposedly 'shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace,' seem to have purchased their footwear at the wrong shop."

NOTES.

A good many Christians seem to be side-tracked.

Our National Library contains 700,000 bound volumes and 200,000 pamphlets.

Tulane University turned out 96 doctors of medicine and 13 masters of pharmacy last week.

The Bible is the only book that don't wear out by constant use. "The Word of the Lord abideth forever."

What the church needs most at this present time is an abundance of means to carry forward the great work of saving men!

One of our English exchanges says: "It is one of the healthiest signs of the times that the pulpit is beginning to see that its mission is not only to prepare men for another world, but to establish the kingdom of God in this world."

There are too many near-sighted Christians. They only see their own little church and its little work. Let them procure gospel glasses and the horizon of vision will be so enlarged that they will wonder where they have been all this time.

Religion is simply the crucifixion, death and burial of self, and the resurrection of a new man, "created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." The new creature is "created" for "good works." There is definite purpose in that new creation.

There is a good deal of talk about the present-day preaching having "lost its power." If this is so, in any degree, it may not all be the fault of the preachers. It takes two parties to make successful preaching. The hearer may have as much to do in making a sermon powerful as the preacher himself. If you are not a "powerful" hearer, your preacher will hardly be a "powerful" preacher. An inactive, unsympathetic hearer would take all the "power" out of St. Paul himself.

"Silas Ganderfoot" seems to have met some real human Christians. No doubt many of our readers have seen "Unkel Peeleg." Listen!

If it could only be made certain that the kullekahun basket and be kept clear out of site, I don't believe you could find a man any where hardly, who could fire up and get as happy in meelo on short notice ez Unkel Peeleg kin. pervided youle giv him a chance to steam hisself up hy singin a hym, for Unkel Peeleg always has ben won on these kind of men whose religion depends ever so much on the amount or noise he makes. Put him where he wud hav to keep as still as birds in winter, and nobody wud ever mistrust that he had jined the church, but only keep munny fur anuff out of atte fur him to feel free to slap his hands and holler, and its amazin how quick he kin git happy anuff to purty ny shoat.

We don't want this to be lost, so we reproduce it from the Free Methodist.

There is too often a tendency to play the parven in the pulpit, what an old friend of mine calls "the parven of the schools." To parade the language of the academy in the sacred desk is as bad form as a millionaire's speech in a talking shop in a Methodist class meeting. I know those of feeble mind count such talk "the ornam of culture," but a good many of us know it as froth churned up for the occasion. The profoundest men are the simplest; while those who talk learnedly of "correlations," "symploisies," and "sylllogisms" seek thereby, and, alas! often succeed, in "covering a multitude of sins." The truth is, the man who talks over the heads of his congregation, in cases out of ten talks out of his own hollow cranium. There is no one so hard to understand as the man who has nothing to say, and does not know how to say it. And no more pleasant spectacle than a congregation feeding thereon with open mouth, and golly away delighted because they confound nonsense with profundity.

The Epworth Herald, speaking of the "virtue of acronoy," introduces this in illustration:

There is a vast amount of second-hand learning. Many quote learnedly from the "fathers," who never read a single page of the patristic writings. A singular mistake was made not long ago by a noted pulpit orator of this country. He told a thrilling story of the soldiers of Oliver Cromwell slaying the long-meter doxology as they marched to battle, whereas the fact is that this celebrated doxology was not written until after the death of Cromwell. Anachronism, or error in computing time, are very common. One preacher of the dramatic style of oratory, in representing the departure of Abraham and Isaac for the mount of sacrifice, pictured Sarah standing in the tent door waving a oambic handkerchief. Another in describing the children of Israel at the Red Sea, said: "Before them rolled the waters of the Red Sea. Upon either bank rose the mountains of Egypt, while behind them might be heard the roar of the enemy's artillery."

To which we add this: A layman in North Louisiana told us that he heard one of our preachers discouraging on the Prodigal Son. After describing his life in the "far country," he brought him back home, and the first thing he saw at the old homestead was his father and mother sitting on the front gallery; "the mother knitting socks and the father leaning back with his feet on the railing reading the morning paper!"

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Even the Times-Democrat can not swallow the dose the "regular" Monday Democracy put up last Monday in the shape of a city ticket!

The postoffice address of Rev. W. W. Cammack is Philadelphia, Miss.

Rev. J. B. Cassity, our pastor in Franklin, La., gave us a pleasant call last week. He was in attendance on the Veterans' reunion.

Bro. Dominick, our Mississippi Conference colporteur, has a large supply of Children's Day programs on hand at his depository, 220 Capitol St., Jackson, Miss.

Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy, our pastor at Mansfield, La., attended the Confederate Veterans' reunion in this city last week, and gave us a much appreciated call.

Bro. Campbell, of the Texas Advocate, has had a hard time with rheumatism. He has been down more than seven weeks, but was improving at the last account.

Will our brethren, lay and clerical, please remember that we can not print notices in any issue that come in after 12 M. on Tuesday. If it comes in at 12:30, it is too late.

Rev. W. H. Sanders writes from Sison, Miss., April 8: "Rev. J. H. Vanghan, of the North-Mississippi Conference, died April 4." One by one the workers fall.

We had the great pleasure to receive a call last week from our friend, Miss Fannie Armstrong, now of Dallas, Texas. We are glad to note that she is as hale and chaffy as ever.

A dispatch from Rev. B. Carradine, St. Louis, Monday morning, said: "Glorious revival in First Church. Over seventy conversions and forty sanctifications during past week."

The Epworth Methodist is the name of a semi-monthly paper published in Fort Worth, Texas, and edited by Rev. I. Z. T. Morris. It is the organ of the Epworth Leagues in Texas, we presume.

All the Christians in any community would combine to work for the salvation of the unsaved, instead of working against each other, it would soon put a different face on the world.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate packs pith into this:

The only sinners that God can save are the scarlet sinners. He has never been able to do anything for the pink or the rosy kind.

Speaking of the political issues of the day, one of our exchanges says there is a "growing class of people who are more solicitous for good government than for party success." That is a good sign for the times.

We regret to learn by Tuesday's dispatches of the death of Mrs. S. P. H. Drake, widow of Rev. Dr. B. M. Drake, and mother of Rev. J. P. Drake, of the Mississippi Conference. She had passed her fourscore years. Thus one by one the links that bind us to the early days of Methodism are severed.

"Sensational preaching" is going through the papers, if not of the pulpits. It is of the right kind—all right. The highest "sensational" man ever has is when he is converted—at least, that is our experience. If the preaching will produce that sensation, let us have some of it in every pulpit in the land.

The fourth Annual Congress of the Scotch-Irish Society of America will convene in Atlanta, on April 28, and remain in session three days. The Atlanta Scotch-Irish Society is making great preparations for the event, and the indications are that the meeting will be the most interesting and the best attended in the history of the society.

Here is a piece of good advice, though coming from a parallel north of us:

While waiting for a revival of purer politics do not stand on your dignity, and say, "I'll have no part in matters as they now are." Go to the primaries and do your best to get honest, competent, clean men nominated. If you fail in this, go still to the polls and cast your ballot. You need not stultify your conscience by helping to "elect vile men." Remember a ballot is not thrown away even though the one for whom it is cast is not elected. If cast conscientiously, righteously, you can give a reason for it that will have an influence for good with all who believe in your intelligence and honesty.

Mother, if your boys come in lame from their games, bathe in Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Special Notice to Preachers.

The preachers in charge will confer a favor on the publisher if they will report in full as to collections for new and old subscriptions to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at their approaching District Conference. A representative of this paper expects to be present at same.

Sound advice: If you have a bad cold, invest 25 cents in Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

Salvation Oil, the great pain-radicator, is a first-class liniment. Keep it handy. 25 cts.

Mrs. G. H. LINSOMB,
District Secretary.

To the Preachers of North Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren: I have just received a letter from Bro. D. W. Smith, the treasurer of the "Bishops' fund" at Nashville, urging me to send him some money on this fund, stating that the Bishops are needy, and that he hasn't sufficient funds to relieve them. I have received the assessment from one preacher only during this Conference year.

Remember, brethren, that the Bishops and their families have to eat food to sustain life and pay for the clothes that they wear just as we common folks have to do. They can not subsist on honor.

District Conference Program.

By appointment of Bishop Hendrix the Sardis District Conference will be held at Batesville, May 12 and 13. Rev. J. W. Malone will preach the opening sermon, eleven o'clock A. M., first day. Let the recording secretary be present with, or be sure to send their journals for examination. The afternoon of Thursday will be devoted to the Sunday-school interest. "Why Do the Children of the Sunday-school Fail to Be Present at Preaching?"—Jno. Richey, W. W. Williams and Col. G. D. Shands.

"Are Our Doctrines Sufficiently Emphasized in Our Present Literature?"—T. W. Dye, R. P. Goar, P. T. Calliont and Thos. Cameron.

"Is the Bible Not Neglected in Sunday-school Work?"—J. W. Poston, Ben P. Jacob and Dr. J. W. Sharp.

"How Shall the Teachers Prepare and Teach in the Sunday-school so as to Lead the Children Savingly to Christ?"—J. M. Wyatt, C. W. Perkins and S. H. Hall.

It is expected that discussion of a general nature will follow each topic. The good women of the district are to occupy May 11 with their missionary meeting.

Vicksburg, Miss.

The Crawford Street Church, in this city, has recently built a neat chapel in the northern part of the town, and we now have a flourishing Sunday-school in it, numbering nearly one hundred teachers and pupils. This Sunday-school was first organized about a year ago, but after a season of prosperity had to suspend for lack of a suitable place of meeting. In addition to the Sunday-school, we have a weekly prayer meeting there, and have arranged for preaching twice a month on Sunday afternoon. We also contemplate holding a protracted meeting there in the near future. The church is furnished with good pews, nice pulpit, an organ, and lights. It remains to be painted, celled, and furnished with stoves—improvements which we hope to make before next Winter. It is free of debt and insured. That part of the city in which this building is situated is improving now, and will improve more rapidly when the Yazoo river is brought down through the lakes, in front of the city, thereby giving us deep water the year round and a permanent landing, as in former years.

It gives us pleasure to refer to the advertisement of Dr. W. H. Tuttle which appears in our columns. For over twenty-five years Tuttle Pills have been before the public, and each succeeding year their valuable properties become better appreciated. They now stand second to none for the relief of that much abused and overworked organ, the liver, and for the removal of that cause of so many ills, constipation. They are used in every civilized country, and carry with them voluminous testimonials of their safety and efficacy. Tuttle's Liver Pills should have a place in every household.

The H. Dudley Coleman Machinery Company, Limited.

We call special attention to the large advertisement of the H. Dudley Coleman Machinery Company, Limited, which appears in this issue of our paper. It will be well for all readers interested in machinery to preserve this paper for future reference.

This Company is the outgrowth of Hon. H. Dudley Coleman's and Mr. Edgar L. Stream's efforts to build up a reputation for integrity and ability upon their works.

For years Hon. H. Dudley Coleman fought his financial way to success through well-nigh insurmountable difficulties; but, by an honest, fair mode of dealing, paying his debts dollar for dollar, and doing his work faithfully, he conquered.

Mr. Edgar L. Stream is one of our own young men who has come to the front as one of the most skillful and practical machinists in this city. He has worked himself up step by step until he proudly challenges competition in his position.

For many years the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has personally known both of these gentlemen, and takes pleasure in advising those needing articles in their line to visit their establishment or correspond with the Company.

OBITUARIES.

CROWDER.—MR. ELIZABETH H. CROWDER (nee OULVIE), was born in Edgefield County, S. C., Nov. 7, 1810, and passed from earth in Shreveport, La., at the home of her only surviving daughter, Mrs. William H. Wise, on the evening of Dec. 9, 1891.

In 1831 she married Wm. Bailey Crowder. There were born to them six sons and five daughters. The husband died in 1853. Shortly afterwards the bereaved widow moved to Cedar parish, La., where she built up, as the years passed, a beautiful, unostentatious, comfortable and happy home, and with an executive ability, for which she was noted, reared and educated her children.

She contributed five sons to the army of the Confederacy. One was fatally wounded at the battle of Perryville, Ky. Dr. Miles Hill lost his right leg in the battle before Atlanta, Ga., and has since gone home to heaven. Little Lucia preceded her father home. Claudia, a lovely and gifted girl of nearly sixteen; Mrs. Mary E. Lindsay, and Mrs. Annie Bowman reached the New Jerusalem also before the mother; and of the once large circle of children there are left to mourn the departure of this good and great mother: George W. Crowder, an honored citizen of Houston, Texas; William Benjamin and Walter, all of Louisiana; Mrs. William H. Wise, of Shreveport, the only daughter, was a dear comfort to her mother in her declining years.

Other pastors have told of the formative influences which moulded the strong and beautiful character of dear Sister Crowder; how that comparatively early in life she gave her heart to God, and of the companionship and evidence which she enjoyed of the best exposure of Methodism, that form of revealed religion to which she gave the adherence of her whole nature. They have also told of that ready faith, strong will and loving heart which were tested and developed when she was left alone to tenderly rear her large family. With a mild quick in her perceptions, originating, inventive and practical, she was a counsellor in the household whose judgment demanded respect. Fertile in expedients, she triumphed over difficulties, buoyant with hope and indomitable with energy, though as the years advanced, sometimes cast down, but invariably rallied quickly, and with renewed hopefulness planned and succeeded. These were the qualities characterizing her to the very last of her remarkable life.

This writer knew her only after she had reached that period when the wise men say, "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." There was little decadence of those powers which extreme age so rarely exhibits. To the end she kept in touch and sympathy with the "living present." Instead of sighing, as many aged ones do, for the "good old days," she would be frequently expressing great satisfaction at having been spared to live in these days, at once so wide-awake and progressive.

The children, grandchildren, the church were her thoughts and prayers. She was a deep-hearted woman, and to an uncommon degree had the faculty of rejoicing with those who rejoice, and weeping with those who weep. The lessons of her own life wisely learned was the key which enabled her to unlock the hearts of others. The triumph of her faith was conspicuous. Religion with her was not a system, or peroxysm, or annex, but the principle and power of an endless life. The sun of her faith was bright at its rising, bright when it reached its zenith, and bright when it sank to rest.

Her last moments were an illustration of the promise, "At evening time it shall be light," and the "path of the just is as the shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." These were precious words to us, who were privileged to catch her parting benediction, and were witnesses to how triumphantly true Christians may meet their "last enemy," and leave this world with Christ's eternal triumph in their hearts. To the last she prayed and believed that all her family might be saved. God grant it, for his name's sake. Farewell, dear, dear venerable friend, until we meet again on the plains of glory.

JAMES L. PIERCE.

ATKINS-JAMES ELMORE ATKINS was born Aug. 7, 1838, and died at Knox Point, La., March 16, 1892.

Again we are confronted with one of the "mysteries of life and strange dispensations of God." This little boy was the light of home and hope of his parents. Of a singularly affectionate nature, he had entwined the tendrils of his childish heart about them, and also endeared himself to many others. As I write these lines my heart is saddened with the thought of a mother's anguish and a father's deep sorrow. Little Jack, too, will miss her brother, and more fully realize the loss as she grows older. It is very hard to say at such a time, "God knows best," for the cloud of grief shuts out the light of faith. Only by earnest prayer, through the Spirit's grace, will consolation come.

May the God of all grace comfort these broken-hearted parents and cheer sorrowing friends! One thing assures us. Elmore is in heaven. He was elected by virtue of his years and Christ's redeeming power. Near the portals of the Eternal City he awaits his loved ones. He is one of God's angels, "always beholding the face of Our Father in heaven." May we so live that we may see him again hereafter!

B. J. DAVIS, P. C.

MONZINGO.—MR. S. A. MONZINGO was born in Houston County, Ga., Aug. 10, 1835, and died at his home, near Cotton Valley, Webster parish, La., Dec. 20, 1891. He joined the Methodist church in 1857, and lived a consistent Christian, true to the church he loved so well, till God called him from labor to reward, from suffering to rest.

I have witnessed but few death-bed scenes; but his was so peaceful and quiet, that it proclaimed victory on the last battlefield of life; for he was willing to go. He called me to him, and told me that he was going home to rest. He saw the bright angels hovering around him, and asked me if I could not see them, too. He tried to comfort us in our sorrow by saying, "Be patient; that some day we would meet again when parting would be no more. He had been home but little for the past two years, as business required his time in Minden, but his visits home were occasions of joy, where he reigned in every heart. But now no papa comes; his chair is vacant now on earth forever, but he has a crown in heaven. When he came home from Minden, sick, he told me he would stay with his family till he was carried to his grave. He has been a great sufferer for the past four years, but he did not complain, and during his last illness he was so patient and resigned. We did all in our power to relieve his suffering and prolong his life, but all in vain; he was ready and willing to die; he said God had let him live just as long as he had asked to live. Oh! if we could live like him, then we would not fear death.

As a husband he was loving, devoted and true, and as a father he was kind and indulgent. He leaves a wife and two children, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. He was well known all over the parish, and his friends were many.

His affectionate daughter, ROSA, Cotton Valley, La.

GILMORE—J. E. GILMORE, the subject of this sketch, was born in Bladecounty, Tenn., Nov. 30, 1815, and triumphantly passed away at his home in Itawamba county, Miss., Jan. 30, 1892. His parents moved to Mississippi in the year 1819, where he was converted and joined the Methodist Church at the early age of fifteen. He lived a consistent member for sixty-one years, and by his pious walk and godly conversation many souls were turned to Christ. He exemplified the lofty virtues of the Christian religion in all the walks of life.

Those who knew him best speak in the highest terms of his many excellences of character. He was kind and gentle to the poor, the sick, the weak, and the lame—all who were not as well off in this world's goods as himself; and the poor and needy never left his door empty-handed. His mind was far more than of the ordinary stamp, and he had greatly improved it by reading and careful observation. The Scriptures were his favorite study, and to rare fidelity to his Christian calling was added a holy zeal and a more than ordinary intelligence. He had the happy tact of expressing his thoughts both in speech and prayer, but especially the latter, and we have no doubt that often when pleading with the Master he was inspired as he was very evidently transported.

He leaves an affectionate wife and seven loving children (two sons and five daughters), besides a host of grandchildren, to mourn his loss. While in the close of that perfect January day, when his spirit was gently wafted to immortal life, there stood at the pearly gates the angel form of a departed daughter to welcome the pure soul of her "dear father." The sorrowing relatives have the consolation of knowing that they are laying up treasures in heaven. And the loved ones are now watching for them at the beautiful gate.

We use Alcohol

pure alcohol to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING. Alcohol is good for leather; it is good for the skin. Alcohol is the chief ingredient of Cologne, Florida Water, and Bay Rum the well known face washes. We think there is nothing too costly to use in a good leather preservative.

Acme Blacking retails at 20c.

and at that price sells readily. Many people are so accustomed to buying a dressing or blacking at 5c. and 10c. a bottle that they cannot understand that a blacking can be cheap at 20c. We want to meet them with cheapness if we can, and to accomplish this we offer a reward of

for a recipe which will enable us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. We hold this offer open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

Spend Your Vacation on the Great Lakes.

Visit picturesque Mackinac Island. It will only cost you about $13 from Detroit or $18 from Cleveland for the round trip, including meals and berths. The attractions of a trip to the Mackinac region are unsurpassed. The island itself is a grand, romantic spot; its climate is most invigorating. Dr. William A. Hammond, of New York, says: "As a health resort so far as my personal experience goes, there is no place so good in every respect for the exhausted city worker, the banker, the merchant, the professional man and wife and children, as the island of Mackinac." Palace steamers, four trips per week between Detroit, Mackinac, Petoskey, the "Soo" and Marquette. Every evening between Detroit and Cleveland. Address: A. A. Schanz, G. P. A., Detroit and Cleveland Steam Nav. Co., Detroit, Mich.

Harriman, Tenn.

The growth of Harriman Tenn., in buildings and traffic has been steady and permanent, and the increasing demand for lots for business and manufacturing purposes, by parties from a distance desiring to locate, had induced the management to announce another Land Sale to take place on April 12, 13 and 14, 1892.

The Queen and Crescent Route quotes one fare for the round trip from all its terminals, and has requested all connections to name same rates for this sale. See that your tickets read via Queen and Crescent Route.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians of America.

The next Bi-annual Meeting of the Ancient Order of Hibernians will be held at New Orleans, La., May 10 to 16. Arrangements have been completed whereby the Queen and Crescent Route will run solid vestibuled trains through without change, leaving Cincinnati on Sunday, May 8. On the return trip arrangements have been completed to give all an opportunity to stop over one day at Chattanooga to visit the famous Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, the scenes of the decisive conflict during the late war.

See that tickets read via the Queen and Crescent Route from Cincinnati. Sleeping-car berths from Cincinnati can now be secured on application to D. G. Edwards, G. P. A., Cincinnati, O.

Southern Baptist Convention, Atlanta, Ga.

The Queen and Crescent Route will sell tickets to Atlanta, Ga., on May 3 to May 6, inclusive, at one fare for the round trip, good to return until May 17.

The Queen and Crescent Route is the only line running solid vestibuled trains, which for comfort, safety and speed are unsurpassed. For further information call on any ticket agent, or write to D. G. Edwards, G. P. A., Cincinnati, O.

The Feast of Flowers was celebrated in the City of Mexico and throughout the republic on April 10. The ceremony in the city took place on the Paseo de la Viga, and was participated in by thousands of Indians, who flocked in from the surrounding country.

Owing to the scantiness of the unoccupied space in Westminster Abbey the dean of Westminster has reluctantly declined to find room in the Abbey for the proposed monument to the late James Russell Lowell. The dean has suggested that instead of a monument a window in the chapel or house, the scene of the delivery of some of Mr. Lowell's addresses, might be filled with a stained glass memorial.

The declaration of Ulster Loyalists, through their representatives at Belfast, that they will use all means in their power to overthrow Irish home rule, if enacted, besides preventing its enactment, if possible, has caused a great sensation in political circles.

Threats of this kind have been heard before, but they have never been followed by any representative body of Irish Protestants. It is known that they are armed and organized and ready for a struggle whenever a home rule Parliament shall attempt to assume authority over them. The number of men the Orangemen could put into the field has been variously estimated, but never at less than 40,000, and some of the estimates go as high as 80,000.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Pittsburgh Glass Works, at Beaver Falls, Pa., owned principally by the Economite Society, has been totally destroyed by fire, entailing a loss from $60,000 to $70,000.

The members of the New York Cotton Exchange have decided, by a vote of 144 to 8, to make Good Friday a holiday. It was also decided to close the Exchange on the Saturday following.

Both factions of the Democratic party have selected a city ticket. The Posteries have nominated for mayor Hon. Jos. A. Shakspeare, the present incumbent. The McEnery ticket is headed by John Fitzpatrick.

The Crowley (La.) State Bank was organized by stockholders representing over $50,000 capital stock, and a charter adopted calling for a capital stock of $75,000, with power to increase it to $250,000. Business will commence as soon as there is a paid-up capital of $50,000.

Mr. McCreery, in the National House of Representatives, has introduced for Mr. Springer a bill to authorize the holding of an international monetary congress. The bill, which covers all details, provides that the congress shall meet in Chicago, April 3, 1893, and continue in session at the will of the majority.

Bradstreet's compilation of clearing-house returns for last week shows an average increase of 17.3 per cent., with New York included, and of 6.4 with the metropolis out of the count. New Orleans reports a decrease of 12.0 per cent., with aggregate clearings of $9,715,409, which ranks us as ninth in the list in this respect.

Complete election returns from Rhode Island give Brown (Republican) 106 majority over Wardell (Democrat). Melville Bull (Republican) was elected lieutenant-governor by 1,031 majority. The total vote cast was 54,736. The Senate stands twenty-three Republicans and ten Democrats, with three yet to be chosen.

The Sugar Trust is beginning to fear the results of the determined warfare which has been inaugurated against it by wholesale grocers all over the country, and especially those of Philadelphia and New York. The grocers are said to be heavily interested in the new refineries proposed to be built in Philadelphia and on Staten Island.

It is probable that a good portion of the time of the present session of Congress will be devoted to tariff matters, although it is not known just to what extent the efforts to reform the McKinley act will be pushed. A bill to put refined sugar on the free list has been talked of, and there has also been some thought of endeavoring to repeal the sugar bounty, although the latter proposition has become less popular of late.

There are two bills pending in Congress to appropriate money for the improvement of the Mississippi river. The Senate bill, which is championed by Senator Gibson, proposes to give $3,500,000, but limits the entire expenditure to the improvement of the channel.

The House bill, introduced by Mr. Blanchard, appropriates $4,000,000 for the Mississippi river, and permits an indeterminate amount to be expended for levee building.

FOREIGN.

A copyright treaty between Spain and Mexico has been arranged.

Mr. Gladstone has consented to address a great London demonstration before the general elections.

Since the Berlin riots Emperor William is accompanied on all his rides in the Tier Garden and through the Grunewald roads by gendarmes, who are armed with revolvers.

Many thousands of acres of fine crops have been completely ruined by the overflow of the river Louna, in Mexico. The government has ordered that the streams be dyked immediately.

Newfoundland's seal fishing has so far been successful this season. Of twenty steamers which left the ice fields last month eleven have returned, with 20,000 seals, which at $2 per head gives a total value of $58,000.

The Splendid Foundry and Machine Shops of the H. Dudley Coleman Machinery Company, Ltd., New Orleans, La.

A Talk with Mr. Coleman.

A reporter of the States made a visit to the large establishment of THE H. DUDLEY COLEMAN MACHINERY CO., Ltd., and after going over the molding floor and through the machine and the mill stone shops, and every other part of the establishment, the writer was surprised at the magnitude of the business going on. He sought out Mr. Coleman in order to obtain some accurate information.

Said Mr. Coleman: "You can see for yourself the extent of our works, and I will give you a few details. First, the steam boilers and sheet iron work; second, power transmission machinery, shafting, pulleys, hangers, etc.; third, miscellaneous work; fourth, corn mills and repairs, and then comes sugar cane mills, draining pumps and elevators, rice mill pounders and machinery, sawmill engines and repairs, railroad work and cars, plain castings for other manufacturers, repairs of second-hand machinery, and much more work that can not be enumerated. The above is only the product of the manufacturing branches of our business, and does not include the sale of the mills, engines, boilers, machinery, and supplies manufactured by others and sold by the

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN MACHINERY COMPANY.

"We have in our employ from eighty to one hundred men, and we pay out annually $50,000 for labor, or an average of $1,000 weekly. We made the iron work for the Pickwick Club building, corner of Canal and Carondelet streets; the H. B. Stevens building, 122 and 124 Canal street; Sugar Exchange building, corner of Bienville and Levee; Bodley building, 74 St. Charles street; Board of Trade building, on Bank Alley; the Montgomery furniture building, 85 and 87 Camp street, and the Mercier building, corner of Canal and Dauphine streets, besides many other large edifices."

CAN COMPETE WITH ANY RIVAL CITY.

"In traveling to and from Washington I have noticed that the foundries of Chattanooga, Tenn., and Birmingham, Ala., are doing a large business in house columns, cast iron building fronts, etc., for a vast extent of country. I inquired as to the prices, and say that we are prepared to compete with them both as to prices and quality of work. All such work should be fairly weighed to the satisfaction of all, and carefully inspected; a column may be all right at the ends, but not so in the middle."

MR. COLEMAN'S BUSINESS CAREER.

"When did you go into the machinery business?" "My father, Willis P. Coleman, started in 1850. He succeeded well until the breaking out of the Civil War, when he shared the misfortunes of the Southern people. At the end of the war I returned a paroled prisoner of Lee's army and arrived in New Orleans with fifty cents Confederate currency, and that before the twentieth anniversary of my birthday."

"In December, 1865, I engaged with Thomas B. Bodley & Co., dealers in machinery and agricultural implements, No. 9 Perdido street, for fifty dollars per month. The experience I had in my father's factory during my school vacations (though necessarily limited) I found to be of service to me in my new position."

"My father died in 1868, and in the settlement of his business I naturally succeeded him. My first sale of a steam engine was to Mr. Leon Godchaux, of this city, who purchased a portable steam engine and boiler to drive a draining pump on one of his plantations."

"We have now every facility for manufacturing and handling machinery, and in that line are not surpassed by any, and are equalled by few in this city."

"Who now owns the old machinery stand, No. 9 Perdido street, where you started in this business as a clerk?"

"I am pleased to say that some years ago I purchased that property and have since used it as a machinery supply depot, for which it is admirably adapted."

BUSINESS HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH POLITICS.

"Do you find that your having been a Republican member of the Fifty-first Congress has injured your machinery business?"

"While, during the heat of a political campaign, this fact may have influenced some persons in their dealings, I hope to show and prove to the people of this country that parties wanting to buy mills, engines, machinery and anything else are not influenced by political prejudice, and I hope to prove that I, a citizen of Louisiana, a native, always living here, can enjoy the privilege of my personal political views without question and without suffering therefrom. I solicit the trade of all who want goods in my line, and I do not question the politics of my customers, my employees or my creditors."

The reporter left the Coleman foundry impressed with the conviction that it is a great industrial institution, and deserving of confidence and encouragement.

The Famous Union County Roads.
BY EDWIN RALPH COLLINS.

The New Jersey Legislature passed a law in 1880 empowering the Board of Freeholders in any county to set aside certain roads as county roads and take charge of them, the cost of maintenance to be borne by the county. The Boards were empowered by this act to issue county bonds to raise money to put the roads in condition as first-class highways. The Freeholders' Board of Union county were the first to take advantage of this law. They selected thirty-five miles of road, the main highways through the county, set them aside as county roads and voted to issue bonds to the amount of $300,000 to pay the cost of macadamizing. At this action, a wail went up from the farmers. Such unprecedented extravagance would plunge the county hopelessly in debt, raise the taxes above boiling point, and ruin them all; such expenditure might be wise in a county like Essex, including large cities, but to entail such a debt upon Union was rank idiocy. Nevertheless, the Freeholders pushed the preliminary work steadily forward, sent the engineers over the ground and took bids for the work, which was portioned into sections. After the work was under way the Board was confronted with the fact that $300,000 would not complete the work undertaken. The dilemma had the usual two horns—leave the work incomplete, or raise more money. The opposition was strong, but they concluded to raise the money and finish the work as originally planned; so additional bonds for $50,000 were issued, making a total of $350,000. At the extra issue of bonds the dissenters settled down in silent despair and waited for the result.

It is now nearly a year since the completion of the roads that give Union county the finest highways in the country. From Elizabeth, the county seat, they branch out in fan-shape through the county, to Rahway, to Plainfield, to Summit. At Elizabeth and Springfield they join with the Essex county system, that goes through Newark and the famous Oranges, giving fifty miles of first-class road between the extreme points, from Pine Brook in Essex county through Montclair, Orange, Newark, Elizabeth and Plainfield to Dunellen in Union county. Then the intersecting roads from Elizabeth to Rahway, Rahway to Westfield, Westfield to Fanwood and Scotch Plains on the west, and Springfield and Summit on the east, all combined, render any part of the counties accessible at all times of the year. The roads are always in good condition, mud has no terrors for the teamster or coachman, and the weight of the load is only limited by the strength of the team.

Now that the roads are built and have been in use nearly a year, it is difficult to find a farmer who opposed them. When you do find one who admits it, he blushes to acknowledge it. At all seasons and at all times, the markets of the city have been accessible to him. If he had anything to take to market, he was not compelled to hurry it thither in poor condition before the winter storms made the roads impassable, or to hold it until Spring, when there was no demand for it. For the same reason the farmers were not compelled to rush all their produce into market at the same time, overstock the market, and consequently run down prices. The supply has not overrun the demand, and for all kinds of produce sold by the Union county farmers in the markets of New York, Newark, Elizabeth and Rahway—prices have been steadier and the general average higher the past year than before. Then, the farmer has been benefited again in the rise in the value of property. The good roads have proved an attraction to a class of residents who do not look to the farm for a livelihood, but are ready customers for farm products. These roads have made every part of the county desirable as a place of residence for business men. Land, that before these roads were constructed, went begging for a purchaser at $100 an acre, finds a ready sale at $175 and $200 an acre, and there is not much offered even at that figure. Farming is profitable now where it was a losing business before. The increase in land values alone would pay the cost of the roads many times over.—American Agriculturist.

A Chemical Study of the Cotton Plant.

Repeated trials indicate that the average weight of chemically dry lint to one acre of the crop tested was 300 pounds; of seed, 651 pounds; bolls, 404 pounds; leaves, 575 pounds; stems, 658 pounds; roots, 250 pounds; making a total plant product of 2,841 pounds to the acre. This weight contains, in round numbers, 46 pounds of nitrogen, 12 pounds of phosphoric acid and 39 pounds of potash, besides soda, lime, magnesia, sulphuric acid and insoluble matter. The 300 pounds of lint, which, under proper methods, is the only part of the crop that is not returned to the soil, contains of nitrogen 0.72 of a pound, phosphoric acid 0.18 pound, and potash 2.22 pounds—far less than an ordinary grain crop removes from the soil. More than half of the valuable constituents of the cotton crop are left behind; whereas, with corn and oats, only small amounts of shallow growing roots and stubble are left. It is folly to burn the stems, together with the remaining bolls, and such parts of the roots as are removed from the soil when the plant is pulled up. The total nitrogen in the bolls, stems and roots is nearly 11.3 pounds. In burning the refuse, fully half of this nitrogen and part of the potash are volatilized, while the organic matter, also valuable to the soil, is lost. Fertilizer tests, made by plots with all three plant-food constituents, separately and in groups, showed that cotton needs all three. Phosphoric acid, alone or in combination, gave the best results, and nitrogen next. Nitrogen and potash applied separately were of little value, but with phosphoric acid doubled the yield. These mixtures were effective.

No. 1. Acid phosphate 420 pounds, nitrate of soda 125 pounds, and kainit 125 pounds. No. 2. Acid phosphate 370 pounds, dried blood 165, and cotton-seed hull ashes 60 pounds. No. 3. Stable manure two tons, acid phosphate 330 pounds and nitrate of soda 20 pounds. No. 4. Acid phosphate 350 pounds, cotton-seed meal 280, and muriate of potash 20 pounds. No. 5. Acid phosphate 350 pounds, cotton-seed 800, and kainit 40 pounds. No. 6. Stable manure two tons, acid phosphate 330 pounds, and cotton-seed meal 40 pounds. These amounts are to be applied to one acre.

The South for General Farming.

Soon it will be discovered, writes Gen. E. P. Alexander in the March Forum, that a thousand miles nearer the markets of the world than are the arable lands of the West, lies a vast territory as fertile and as healthful as the very best of the Western lands, with vastly more resources, and with all the conditions of life greatly easier. This territory is the South.

The interiors of all continents suffer far greater extremes of heat, cold, and drouth than lands nearer the sea. The percentage of crops lost or injured by lack of rain or by early and late frosts increases rapidly as we leave the vicinity of the ocean, which is the great equalizer of temperatures. Hence, far inland are but few fruits and vegetables that can be profitably cultivated at all, and the production even of those is more uncertain than it is nearer the coast. The farmer's chances are, therefore, fewer and poorer even for his chief crops. In comfort and economy of living, too, the farmer in the far interior suffers even more, for the vegetables are less hardy than the field crops, and his garden can not help out the farm as it does at the South. The risk and expense of wintering stock in the South are reduced to a minimum. The winter economies and comforts in clothing and fuel, in farm work and in social life, are considerable. Nor are the Summers hotter than those of the Northwest; though they last longer they are less extreme. The Southern climate is not less salubrious than that of the North, the mortality among whites in 1880 being 14.74 per 1,000 for the whole United States, and 14.04 per 1,000 for the Southern States from Maryland to Louisiana, inclusive. The lands of the South are still not one-half occupied. The sole condition which now prevents a large immigration, both from abroad and from the Northwestern States, is ignorance of the situation.

Production of Coal in Great Britain.

The production of coal in Great Britain in 1891 was 185,479,126 tons, which is by far the largest output in any one year in the history of coal mining in that country. These figures go far towards explaining and justifying the action of the English coal miners in refusing a reduction in wages when it was offered, claiming that the depression was due to over-production, and that the true solution was to restrict production instead of reducing wages. Up to 1891 the largest production in any one year was 181,614,288 tons, so that the output for last year was about 4,000,000 tons in excess of any previous year.

Not a day passes over the earth but men and women of no note do great deeds, speak great words and suffer noble sorrows. Of these obscure heroes, philosophers and martyrs, the greater part will never be known till that hour when many that were great shall be small, and the small great.—Charles Reade.

The Creation.

This is an age of interrogation marks. The telescope, the microscope, the spectroscope and the crinoid, and, above all, the undamned mind searching for knowledge and truth, have played sad havoc with the superstitions and errors of former ages. Out of this confusion and chaos truth will come tenfold more glorious. No one need fear that the Bible will suffer in consequence. Yet, in all probabilities, many human interpretations of it will be thoroughly exploded. The standard authors of geology say to-day that one must go elsewhere from this science to find material to refute the teachings of the Word of God. No believer in the Bible doubts for a moment the ability of God to create the world in six literal days, or even in the twinkling of an eye. As far as human wisdom can apprehend his plans and methods, "through measureless ages in which he is rich, resting not, hasting not, but slowly, and by the steady operations of his own laws, he works out to the finest detail his mighty thought of a world." "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." In all God's dealings with man, he works out his great purposes by slow, steady and ever-progressive means. When man fell, a Messiah was promised. Why wait four thousand years for his advent? The conflict between good and evil has continued since the expulsion of the primeval pair from the Garden. The overthrow of the powers of darkness will yet be consummated. But six thousand years have passed, and Satan still tempts the followers of the blessed Christ. Why has not a fiat of the great Jehovah chained him forever in his dark domains? Then, in contradistinction to the old maxim, "Time is short," I put the correct one, "Time is long." We are told that, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void." When that "beginning" began no man can tell. There was no light, nor were there any means of measuring the vast cycles in which "God moved upon the face of the waters." The latest and most reliable authority estimates that far-off "beginning" at one hundred million years. The earth, in its primeval state, must have been molten or gaseous, or else it would not have assumed its present spheroidal form.

Sir William Thomson says that if the consolidation of the earth had not occurred several million years ago, the poles would not have been flattened. The work of each day during creation is confirmed by geological research. Moses gave us an outline that will stand the tests of the centuries; yet I do not believe the account given in Genesis is intended as a full and complete description of the birth and growth of a world, but merely as an outline. And, furthermore, the same changes that geology records as occurring in the misty ages of the past are actually occurring to-day, though, of course, with less rapidity than in former times. The Mosala account informs us that on the third day vegetation appeared. This age, the carboniferous, was the one in which our great coal fields were formed. These immense deposits (18½ feet thick in Pennsylvania) could not have been formed by natural causes in one day. To produce a seam of coal 10½ feet thick would require 46,800 years in the Amazon Valley, the most luxuriant vegetation known. Vegetation requires carbonic acid, a deadly poison to all animal life. In the present age there is so little of it in the air that its effects are not felt. The vegetation in the carboniferous age was far more luxuriant than that of the present day; yet this necessitates the presence of carbonic acid in the air to such an extent that all animal life was impossible.

Now, if man was created three days, or seventy-two hours, after vegetation, then his history must extend back more than 40,000 years. At no time in man's history could vegetable matter have accumulated much faster than at the present time, for the increase in carbonic acid so necessary to this increased growth would have been fatal to him. The air could not have been freed from this poisonous gas in so short a time, nor could the giant forests have grown enough that, with the growth since the birth of man, to have formed our vast coal fields. From investigations in coal mines it has been ascertained that nearly every specie of vegetation forming these coal fields has become extinct, or, if existing at all, very small and insignificant. This proves that but little of our coal has been formed in man's history.

On the fifth day fish swam in the seas, and birds flitted through the air. These could not have lived if there had been a large amount of this gas in the air. So, take either view you please, it has been far more than 6,000 years since vegetation first appeared upon the earth.

In many parts of the world the river beds are thousands of feet below the surface. The grand canyon of the Colorado river has a height of nearly 7,000 feet. The sides of this canyon are almost solid rock. How long would it take a stream of water, however swift, to wear a channel 7,000 feet deep through almost solid rock? But is it not possible that ice or bowlders helped to form these natural wonders? This would be admitting that, at least, a part of geology is true. There are abundant proofs of a glacial epoch just before the advent of man. In Massachusetts stones weighing many tons are found several miles from where they were formed. All over Indiana and Ohio specimens of copper ore are found which came from the mines near Lake Michigan. No other agency save glaciers and icebergs could have produced these results. But admitting that glaciers performed a prominent part in cutting out the grand canyon, yet the proofs are convincing that it has been in existence many thousand years. The internal heat of the earth—sufficient, it is said, to melt any known substance fifty miles below the surface—is decreasing from year to year. From its present rate of cooling, vast ages and cycles have passed since it was in a molten state.

This view of the creation takes nothing from the glory and power of the Creator. It adds grandeur to the thought. Think of God through vast ages watching, with unabated interest, the progress and growth of his created world!

"My heart is awed within me when I think of the great miracle which still goes on in silence round me—the perpetual work of thy creation, finished, yet renewed forever."

Children's Day.

To the Pastors and Sunday-school Superintendents of the North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: As you look over the ADVOCATE "to see what is in it," and your eyes fall upon this brief address, I hope you will not give it a mere passing glance, but read and ponder it with as much concern for the cause represented as the writer feels while writing.

In the providence of God, we are nearing the time set apart by our church for the observance of Children's Day. It is, therefore, becoming that we should, as an act of church loyalty and a token of our concern for the rising generation, make timely and due preparation for its celebration. We can not better commend this observance than by quoting the following from Bro. J. R. Popper, chairman of the Sunday-school Board of the Memphis Conference. He says: "Out of the benevolent feature of the occasion, 'Children's Day' furnishes an excellent educational opportunity to our pastors and Sunday-school workers to emphasize our doctrine and the peculiar institutions of Methodism—a work much needed just now. Besides, it affords a specific time for father and mother to sit with their children in Sunday-school—a thing about as much needed as for the children to sit with their parents during the preaching service." "Therefore, in view of the many streams of good flowing from 'Children's Day,' we earnestly invoke the co-operation of every pastor and superintendent to have its new year in endeavoring to have its observance at every appointment in some way, either separately or in connection with other appointments. We have only seen the beginning of the good coming from this beautiful May-day offering."

Last year, of 135 pastoral charges in our Conference, only 36 reported as having celebrated this day, while the Memphis Conference, adjoining ours, reported "nearly every charge as observing it." Also, they raised on that day four times as much money as we did, with a membership only a little in excess of ours; and the Mississippi Conference, with a membership less than ours, reported more than twice as much as we did. These statements are made, not to disparage our work, but that we may be provoked to improvement.

If any ask, What need is there for the funds collected? we would answer, There is much need. We expect the reports this year to show that all the funds in hand are used to good purpose, and we are contemplating plans for the furtherance of our Sunday-school work, the which, if executed, will require all the means that can be raised.

Now, brethren, please take up your Disciplines and turn to page 142, paragraph 245, and read carefully the law and instructions concerning "Children's Day," and then observe the following directions:

1. Programmes will be furnished, on application of pastors or superintendents, at the rate of ten cents per dozen, or sixty cents per hundred, to be paid for out of collections taken, where provision is not otherwise made.
2. Report full amount of the collection to Rev. O. L. Savage, treasurer, or to myself, who will forward the ten per cent. to Nashville, and settle for the programmes used, as above stated.
3. Send all orders for programmes to the undersigned, and send in due time, that there may be sufficient margin for delay of mails and time for suitable preparation for the occasion. All orders should be in by May 1.
4. Let no congregation, and especially no Sunday-school in our bounds, be deprived of the benefits of Children's Day exercises. Bro. Kirby, in the Sunday-School Visitor, truly says: "Pastors, superintendents, teachers, parents, children—all are equally interested in making this the brightest, gladdest day in our church and Sunday-school year."

Let all go to work at once, determined to do your best to make the occasion this year a grand success in every sense. The "programme" for this year is a "gem" of beauty, and a treasure of songs and useful knowledge.

Sunday-school Agent.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, Holly Springs, Miss., April 17: "We have just closed a gracious revival of religion here. Had twenty, or more, conversions and sixteen accessions on profession of faith. Had 174 at Sunday-school to-day. Have sixty-one members of Epworth League, and five prayer meetings."

Rev. T. B. Hargrove, Greenwood, Miss., April 12: "Bro. H. L. Vaughan, preacher on McNutt circuit, died at McNutt, April 4, seven P. M. His father, who had been telegraphed for, with Sister Vaughan, started with remains to Columbus; but the railroads were washed up so they could not go. He was buried here last Thursday evening. A good, pure, true man has fallen. Pray for his family."

Rev. B. W. Lewis, McBride, Miss., April 7: "Our hearts are sad. Sister Ophelia Butler departed this life April 6, at 1:15 A. M. The community has lost its best friend, the church its best worker, and the Sunday-school its best teacher. She was always bright, cheerful and happy. Sister Butler leaves a husband and three children to mourn her death. May the Lord bless and comfort the surviving loved ones! Pray for us, brethren. My work is getting along very well. The spiritual condition is not as good as I would like to see it; but we are moving upward, and feel that God is blessing our labors."

Rev. Jas. G. Cammack, Summit, Miss., April 16: "Yesterday was the first meeting of the W. P. and H. M. Society at this place. The society adjourned to meet the next Wednesday; but, instead of returning to their homes, they were seen all going in the direction of a neighboring dwelling, from which they soon returned to the parsonage with baskets, buckets and bundles of every description, the contents of which will need no explanation for an itinerant preacher to understand. We were so overcome that all we could think of to say was: 'As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.'"

Rev. Healep R. Tucker, April 4: "At the unanimous solicitation of the people of this community, Rev. Geo. S. Inge came to Houston and preached for four days. He was preceded by Bros. Whitehurst and Saunders, and after eight days of earnest effort the meeting closed with good results. The meeting was held in the spacious hall of the Mississippi Normal College, one of the most suitable in the State. Bro. Inge preached mostly to the church, and scores pledged themselves to better lives by erecting family altars, and attendance upon all the services of the sanctuary. The good done can not be estimated. How many will join the church can not now be known. These brethren left much loved. Bro. Inge was born here, and is fixed in the affections of all the people."

Rev. Eugene Johnson, Senatobia, Miss., April 14: "Bro. Morehead, our presiding elder, held our second Quarterly Conference last Saturday. The stewards made a good report. Preacher's salary almost half paid to date; all the other interests of the church in a healthy condition. Bro. Morehead is doing good work on the district; is prompt and efficient in the discharge of the duties of his office; is in favor with preachers and people. Sacramental service and love-feast, Sunday, well attended and spiritually profitable. This is my first year on this charge; but, if the people continue as they have begun, I hope it will not be my last. They know how to take care of their preacher. We anticipate much pleasure in having Bishop Hendrix with us at District Conference, and hearing him preach again."

Rev. K. S. Enoch, "I have no large cards, but will try to give you some dots on a little one. This hall from Perry circuit, Mississippi Conference. I am among one of the best set of Methodist people I ever saw. They nearly all believe in growth, and are using the means of growth. They care for their preacher with a hearty goodwill, and respond liberally to the calls of the church for support of her institutions. We have a praying people here. A large majority of the heads of families lead in the public prayer, and keep up their family altars. The church seems to me to be in a fair way to do great things for the Master's cause. And we look earnestly, hopefully for a revival of spiritual and practical religion this year. Indeed, the tidal wave has already set in with this praying and church-going people."

Rev. I. L. Peebles, Edwards, Miss.: "When we arrived here after Conference we were met at the train by Bros. R. H. Noblin, W. Price, S. Johnston, and conducted to the parsonage, where a nice dinner, prepared by the ladies, was awaiting us. After repasting and prayer, we were left alone to view our surroundings. We soon found that more than a nice dinner had been provided for us. We are well circumstanced, and we are well pleased. Our first quarterly meeting embraced last Sunday—April 10. We had a good meeting. Our presiding elder, Bro. E. H. Moulter, preached us three good sermons. They did our souls much good. He is a conservative man. We have collected one-half of the $242 assessed this charge for Conference purposes. One-fourth of the presiding elder's and pastor in charge's assessments have been paid. We have taken eight persons into the church. Pray for us."

Rev. M. J. Miller, China Grove, Miss., April 8: "Our first Quarterly Conference embraced the third Sabbath in March. Our presiding elder, Bro. Woodward, was with us, and preached three excellent sermons. He is a good, clear, practical religious preacher, who warms the heart rather than tickles the fancy. A good attendance, liberal assessment for preacher in charge, and a good report first quarter, together with many presents, and the Conference claimants' assessment paid in full, with growing congregations of interested hearers, makes us (preacher in charge and family) feel that 'the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places.' We have had no 'storm,' and don't want any. Don't like the name 'storm.' See? Thank God we have constantly received tokens of careful Christian liberality, such as meet the wants and supply the necessities of the preacher and family. We pray for much success every way."

Rev. C. H. Pittman, P. O., Mashulaville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, April 7: "Mashulaville circuit is making some advancements. I am now living in the parsonage just bought and furnished. The preacher has never suffered yet (for want of temporal means). There has been no storm of dainties here that I 'read of,' but about the first of January I launched my small boat for a pleasant harbor, and cast anchor here. Since then I have been surrounded by dandling, smiling wavelets of generosity, each bearing upon its crest some comfort of life to add to our store. Our congregations are growing. The Nashville and New Orleans ADVOCATES are tolerably well circulated here. We have some family altars, and hope to have more soon. We have one Sunday-school and one prayer meeting. Will have more soon. The church has been somewhat revived; twenty backsliders reclaimed. Brethren, pray for me and my work."

Rev. H. O. White, P. E., April 8: "The work on the Dehl district, Louisiana Conference, is moving on very well. All the preachers are well, and in great favor with the people. We are having some very spiritual quarterly meetings. Liberal salaries have been allowed, and the preachers are getting enough to live on in spite of the stringency in money matters. About forty have joined the church. Bro. H. Knickerhocker, of Bastrop, is having great success in that difficult work. His house is full at every service. Although our quarterly meeting was held on Thursday, we had very good congregations. In the morning about 50, and at night 150, which is extraordinary for Bastrop. Monroe is doing well. Providence and Waterproof are improving. Oak Ridge and Rayville, Winsboro and Oakley—in fact, nearly every work—is making advances over this time last year. I think our young brother, Bogan, is the right man in the right place. We are looking forward to a gracious revival all over the district."

Rev. J. G. Cammack, Summit, Miss., April 11: "Our first Quarterly Conference convened here Saturday and Sunday last. The session was very pleasant and harmonious. The reports showed that two members had been added during the quarter; ten dismissed by letter, and two died. One hundred and seven dollars and twenty-five cents had been raised for the preacher in charge; $18.75 for the presiding elder; Conference claimants, $14; domestic missions, $5; Bishop's fund, $13. We had three delightful sermons preached by our presiding elder. Although he has had serious loss lately in the burning of the district parsonage and its valuables, he has lost none of his power to preach. Miss Addie V. Marshall, of Brookhaven, was with us from Friday till Monday morning, and while here organized a W. P. and H. M. Society, with fourteen members; also a Juvenile Missionary Society (Clara Christian Workers), with eighteen members, and more to follow in each society. On the whole, we feel like we are moving along nicely, and hope to have a prosperous year every way."

Rev. J. W. Raper, Tremont circuit, North Mississippi: "This is my second year on Tremont circuit, and I am glad to report the work of the Lord increasing. This is a large work. It takes one man all his time, and then there is work left undone which should be done. I believe the work, in the main, is in a better condition than it has ever been. We have some churches that are drags, and it is likely they will be. I suppose this is the case with all large works like this. Now, we have as good people on this work as the world affords. They are godly men and women, endeavoring always to push forward the work of the Lord. I have only two Sunday-schools which run through Winter. These schools are doing great good in that department of the church. One of these schools is only one year of age, the church having been established about fifteen months ago. It is one of the best little schools I have ever seen. It is working harmoniously in systematic order, and is developing itself into a strong and mighty power for good in the church. Our first quarterly meeting has passed. Bro. Stone, our elder, did not get to us—on account of bad weather, I suppose. We held the Conference, and are going on with the work. We hope Bro. Stone will not fail to come on his next round, because our people appreciate his coming so much. Now we are praying and working for a mighty upheaving of the kingdom of sin in these parts. We hope to have the grandest revival in the history of this work. We earnestly beg the brethren to pray that the Holy Ghost may be upon us, and this country to be wholly given unto the Lord. Good wishes for the dear old ADVOCATE."

Rev. S. L. Boyd, Tatum, Tillatoba circuit, North Mississippi Conference, April 4: "This charge has five regular appointments, embracing portions of Yalashusha, Grenada and Tallahatchie counties, covering a territory twenty by twenty-five miles. The membership extends farther. Through the faithful efforts of Bro. Rayner (in 1890 and 1891) and his Parsonage Committee, the committee succeeded in securing a parsonage several weeks ago. It is small, but neat and comfortable, with plenty of outhouses, a good garden, potato patch and grass patch; located in sight of a very good school (public), and right near Tatum, where mail comes from Grenada twice a week. We are surrounded by the kindest of neighbors. They have not stormed nor pounded us, but have egged us, buttered us and abused (f) us in too many ways to mention here. Suffice it to say, they keep a gentle breeze blowing on us almost constantly, but with no more indication of storms than the occasional fluttering in of a nice hen. Eleven have been sent to us, three of which now 'scratch for' pretty broods. 'Preacher's delight,' which will be ripe in a few weeks. Card full."

Rev. N. J. Roberts, Utica circuit, Mississippi Conference, April 8: "This work is composed of five churches—two on the Little J railroad, via Learned and Utica. The parsonage is located at Utica, a thriving little town of about 350 inhabitants. The parsonage is a substantial building, but needs some repairing. This is our third year with this kind people, and I feel thankful to-day that the outlook is promising. The parsonage did not have its annual storming; still, the people continue to consider our welfare. The two past years the Lord was very gracious to us. We have received since we took charge of the circuit—January, 1890—280 members into the church, baptized seventy-five infants; licensed two young men to preach, who are now at college preparing for their life-work, and each gives promise of great good. Organized and built one new church, a number of new family altars erected, and many that were in darkness and sin are now rejoicing in Christ as their Savior. The finances of this circuit have developed, with its spiritual growth, from $450 for the preacher to $1,300. They paid me in 1890, $725; in 1891, $800. The church at Utica, feeling that preaching only twice a month was not sufficient for the interest at stake, asked the Bishop to reinforce us, in order to give them preaching twice each Sunday in the month; they agreeing to pay the salary of one man. The Bishop granted their request by sending the Rev. W. H. Lewis, who came to us full of faith and zeal that characterizes every man truly called of God to this work. Though young, we find in him a safe counselor, a good preacher, thoroughly consecrated to the work. Our people are delighted with him. The stewards of the circuit met soon after Conference, and fixed the preacher's salary at $1,300, and they assure us it shall be paid. The Conference assessments have all been increased on this work within the last two years, and have all been paid, and are still higher this year than ever before; but we feel safe in saying they will all be paid. I have just sent $51, the entire assessment for the year for Conference claimants, to the treasurer of the Board. Our presiding elder, Bro. Little, held our first Quarterly Conference on March 26. Our people are delighted with him. He preached three sermons for us, profitable to all who heard him. In summing up the labors of the past two years, we feel very grateful to God for what he has done for us. In looking to the future, we see much to be done; but, with Bro. Lewis by our side, and some of earth's noblest men and women to hold up our hands, and knowing Christ, our leader, is on the field, we thank God, take courage, and go forward. Pray for us."

BY LUCY LARSON

I said it in the meadow path,
I say it on the mountain side—
The best things any mortal hath
Are those which every mortal shares.

The air we breathe, the sky, the breeze,
The light without us and within,
Life with its unspoken treasures,
God's riches are for all to win.

The grass is softer to my tread,
For rest it yields its unnumbered feet;
Sweeter to me the wild rose red,
Because she makes the whole world sweet.

And up the radiant peopled way
That opens into worlds unknown,
It will be little's delight to say,
"Heaven is not heaven for me alone."

Rich by my brethren's poverty,
Such wealth were hideous, I am blest
Only in what they share with me,
In what I share with all the rest.

Memoir of Rev. E. R. Strickland.

BY REV. H. J. HARRIS.

The campaign of 1840 on Paulding circuit was fraught with many incidents that have left their impress lastingly upon my own mind, and, as I have already said, will be of telling effect upon the history of Methodism in that region, and in the destiny of souls. The honor of being the chief instrument in the hands of God of a most glorious revival of religion, and gathering into the church invaluable material, is due to the zeal and faithfulness of Bro. Strickland.

In this memoir it will be my plan to specify only in certain cases where the wisdom and faithfulness of Bro. Strickland on the one hand, and on the other the power of the grace of God, displayed through him.

Our circuit was sparsely populated, and there was little wealth among the Methodist people. Notwithstanding, Bro. Strickland conceived the idea of holding a camp meeting near the town of Paulding, about three miles westward. We had to solicit aid from men outside the church, and draw support from distant points of the circuit. Bro. Strickland called a council, arranged his plans, sent out his lieutenants to secure all the help we could. Hon. Henry Moulter, father of Rev. E. H. Moulter, of the Mississippi Conference, was judge of the circuit court for the district at the time, and Gen. John Watts was district attorney. It was important, if possible, to secure help from them. Neither of them was a member of any church. This writer, in company with Rev. R. J. Jones, Sr., then a local preacher on the circuit, were deputed to interview Judge Moulter. Bro. Strickland called upon Gen. Watts. We succeeded in getting the co-operation of both these popular and influential men. They erected large tents, and entertained scores of people after the old style.

But now of the results: These two prominent men were happily converted, and all their houses, for neither of them, nor their families (except, perhaps, Mrs. Watts), were converted before, nor belonged to any church. Such display of converting power we had never seen before, as crowned the labors of that meeting. Judge Moulter's whole family now, for the second generation, are

"Traveling home to God
In the way their father trod."

The same is true of the descendants of Gen. John Watts, whose brothers and sisters all, as well as his own family, are Methodists. Both these noble men, about a year after their conversion, were licensed at the same time as local preachers. The next week after they were converted they opened the court at Paulding with prayer, and continued to do so all around the district.

"Oh, what will the harvest be?"

What a load of sheaves will Bro. Strickland bring to the eternal harvest! He was wise in "winning souls." He was "not generic" in his moods; artless, apparently, as a child, but strategic and wonderfully successful in his early ministry.

Illustrative of his manner of attack upon the common enemy, I give one more incident: In making our semi-monthly rounds upon Paulding circuit, we had to pass a cross-road dram-shop and a "quarter race track," located about three miles from a church where we preached on Sunday, usually passing by this "deadfall" on Saturday afternoon. There were generally more persons assembled there than we had to hear us preach on Sunday. Passing by one Saturday, Bro. Strickland, seeing the multitude assembled as usual for revelry, determined to attack the devil in his stronghold. Reining his horse up to the door of the dram-shop, he saw quite a number inside playing cards and drinking. He announced an appointment to preach there, four weeks from that day, at eleven o'clock, and quickly moved off. Everyone was taken by surprise. The keeper ran out and hailed him. Bro. Strickland halted, and they parleyed for some minutes about the propriety of preaching in a dram-shop. Bro. Strickland remarked to the keeper that "he saw generally a larger congregation there on Saturday than he had at the church on Sunday." No indignity was offered the preacher, but the poor sinner tendered the use of his private residence near by, and promised to give publicity to the appointment, which he did. The preacher came, had a fine congregation, baptized the man's household, the dram-shop and "race track" were broken up, and this writer knew at least, one man, who was a ring-leader at the time "when towed fellows of the baser sort" resorted to this place, who became a preacher, and who is remembered to this day by others. Oh, what wonders God hath wrought through feeble men! Stars will deck our brother's crown in glory for this day's work. Precious memories linger still amid the scenes of that eventful year, during which Bro. Strickland was as a father to me. He was returned to the circuit for a second year. The year following (1842) he was appointed to Opelousas, La.

The Conference at the close of 1841 was held in New Orleans, Bishop Waugh presiding. Bro. Strickland determined to take his wife with him to Conference. Leaving their children with friends in Neshoba county, Miss., they traveled by private conveyance to the sea-coast through a comparative wilderness, and, leaving their conveyance either at Biloxi or Mississippi City, they took passage upon some water-craft for New Orleans. His appointment to Opelousas was a surprise, and by many considered an unnecessary solicitation. He had for two years traveled a poor circuit, had a meager support, and was exceeding scarce of means; his family scattered, and ere he could gather them together his money would be exhausted. His precious wife wept bitterly; the whole Conference sympathized with them. Nevertheless, he determined, with God's help, to go to his appointment. When father and mother had reached their children once more, they were further from their field of labor than when at New Orleans, without any public transportation and without money to defray the necessary expense. Yet, with firm trust in God and at the urgent appeal of his heroic wife, who was a grand and noble woman, committing all into the divine hands, he started, and made the trip from Neshoba county, Miss., to Opelousas, La., on horseback. For three months of painful anxiety and suspense he heard not a word from his family, nor had they any tidings from him. (This was fifty years ago, well nigh, and mail facilities were limited and unreliable.) At the end of these three months this writer received a letter from him, making pitiable appeal for some intelligence from his loved ones. I succeeded in getting communication between them; but it was six months before he ventured to leave his work long enough to visit them. The dominant religion of the Opelousas country, as it was then called, was Roman Catholic. There were, perhaps, not more than two or three Protestant families of any prominence to the hundreds of the circuit. Chief among his supporters, and the friends of Methodism, were the Lewis and Nugent families. But these were of the right sort, and their posterity still adhere to the religion of their fathers, and, wherever scattered abroad, are found battling for God and heaven. Bro. Strickland, if I mistake not, succeeded in building a house for the Lord in Opelousas, where there was none before, and many were added to the church during the two years he was allowed to remain there. Meanwhile his family had found him, and all his tribulation was overruled for good.

I must be content in subsequent remarks to note the different charges that Bro. Strickland served during his effective ministry, and some peculiarities of the man. It would take a volume to contain all that could be written of this remarkable man.

Bro. Strickland traveled Louisville circuit one year; Paulding, two years; Opelousas, two years; Brandon, two years; Bayou Pierre, two years; Crystal Springs, two years (where we were colleagues again); Raymond, one year; Greenville, one year; Holmes, two years; Summit, two years; Monticello, two years; was superannuated in 1877, and was faithful to the end. He fell asleep in Jesus, and is now joining the ohorus of the redeemed.

Bro. Strickland had lost his wife not long before his appointment to the Greenville circuit, and I think it was during the time he was stationed there he was persuaded by some kind friends to accompany them on a tour of Europe, especially to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, taking in the great Crystal Palace in London. It was regarded an almost unpardonable sin for a preacher to leave his work for an excursion in those days, and Bro. Strickland was sharply rebuked by the Bishop and his presiding elder, though excused by the Conference.

Bro. Strickland was a portable church extension society in his day. There is put up in every circuit he traveled from one to four, five or six good, substantial churches, standing to this day, monumental to his zeal and earnestness in this department of ministerial duty, especially in Hinds, Holmes and Copiah counties, in Mississippi.

Not having the Conference Minutes at command for that period, I may be at fault in giving his precise relation to the Conference at the time he conceived the idea of building up a female college at Jackson. He was perfectly enthused with the idea, and having, in the providence of God, recuperated from reverses of fortune, and made a very wise investment in the shape of a magnificent farm on Baker's Creek, between Jackson and Vicksburg, he determined to put his whole estate in jeopardy to carry out his plan of erecting a "Methodist female college" at Jackson. He purchased the beautiful site known as the "Helen property" for the purpose; and, had the Methodists of Jackson and elsewhere in the Conference rallied to the support of this enterprise, as they have to Millsaps College, to-day there would have been at the capital a lasting monument to the name of E. R. Strickland, who perished and lost all he had in the effort to found it.

My friend and brother was censured often for his zeal in the matter of church building. He was too sanguine of support from the church, and often, with limited aid promised, he would assume responsibility for building material, and contract for building churches, and often had difficulty in raising money to carry out his plans. But God helped him.

Bro. Strickland was married four times: first, to Miss Amanda C. Robinson, of Georgia, sister of Capt. Henry C. Robinson, of East Mississippi; second, to Miss Holt, of Hinds county, Miss.; third, to Mrs. Hooper, of East Baton Rouge parish, La.; fourth, to Miss Margaret Neill, of Amite county, Miss., who, with her two children, survive him.

Now, I trust, under the divine guidance, I have, though feebly, performed the task assigned me. I am alone. The only one living, so far as I know, who was a member of the Mississippi Conference when I joined, fifty-two years ago last December. Winans, Lane, Pipkin, Clinton, Drake, Marshall, Watkins, Strickland—all are gone. But, with God's help,

"We shall meet beyond the river,
Where the surges cease to roll."

May God comfort the bereaved ones, and gather them in an unbroken family in "that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!"

An Old Letter.

A brother and contributor sends the following letter written to a young preacher forty-five years ago. There are in it some valuable suggestions which we trust our young itinerants will ponder.

Vicksburg, April 23, 1847.

DEAR BROTHER: Your letter some days since came duly to hand. I was pleased with its spirit and contents. A multitude of pressing pastoral duties have hindered me from replying sooner.

In preaching we should take the prophets, apostles, the Savior to guide us as to matter, method, manner. As to what we preach, we should ask ourselves, Is it the message God requires? If not, cast it aside. Here the minister is called to search his heart and try his motives, and to practice the severest self-denial. Pause till you have pondered in this respect the examples above. As to method, you will find the truths presented were so arranged as to give them tremendous point and searching power, discerning the very thoughts and interests of the heart. As to manner, there was zeal, vehemence, intense earnestness.

The Savior delivered his sermons in a style of easy simplicity and unaffected zeal, discarding all the arts of modern orators. As a man, his messages were first understood and felt by himself. Consequently, plainly, forcibly, feelingly did he communicate them.

The same may be said of prophets, apostles, etc. They first understood clearly, fully, deeply the message they would deliver and it rested with power on their own hearts. Consequently they never imposed on themselves the labor and servitude of writing and memorizing sermons.

The minister must give attention to style, manner, etc., so as to suit himself in some measure to his hearers; but this attention to the taste of society should be kept within the restraints of the gospel patterns. A heart inflamed with love to God and with love for immortal souls, and an intellect richly furnished with scriptural knowledge, and a patient arrangement of that knowledge in the exposition, argumentation and application of divine truth, will always ensure a minister the attention, the approval and the gratitude of his hearers. More, he will be guided of the Lord in the salvation of souls.

I want you to carefully Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus, with Dr. Clarke's notes on them. You may rest assured that all the apostle says to Timothy and Titus the Holy Ghost intended for you. Mark, digest and put into practice.

As often as you can, avail yourself of opportunities to exhort, having a hymn or some Scripture as a kind of starting and rallying point. I do not wish to reprove you for writing sermons. To write will be of service to you. But study the thoughts and sentiments of your subject. Understand it, and you will have language given you at the time of delivery. Would you be useful in winning souls to Christ you must learn to speak without a manuscript or without memorizing. Memorize sentiments or get a subject fastened on the mind, but don't memorize words. Don't be discouraged at any thing. You have now settled in your mind to preach. God will give ability to do all he requires. He will exercise you many ways to bring you to a willingness to conform fully to his will. But in obeying he will bless and qualify and make you useful in the work.

A progression steadily in the divine life in your own soul is of indispensable importance to your success in the ministry. A heart that has God dwelling in it will plead with sinners to come to the Savior with an eloquence of feeling known only to the true ambassador of Christ. Let your standard of holiness be scriptural; nothing below that of the Bible.

As to myself, I am more devoted in every particular than I have ever been. I am a happy man. Every day brings cares and labors in abundance, but a heart devoted to the work willingly engages from day to day afresh in the service of God. You may expect me to live and die a minister, and, I trust, a faithful one in the many departments of duty, and I know if I do, I have much happiness and a rich reward before me.

Yours sincerely, H. LEAVELL.

A Man for Whom Christ Died.

A sacredness never experienced before lingers around those objects associated in our minds with a departed loved one.

The object of a love almost idolatrous passes away, and through our tears we see a treasure in every trifle. Our bruised hearts gaze upon something having but little intrinsic value, and by a peculiar alchemy it appears as a jewel too precious for gold to purchase. A little incident that recently occurred affords us a forcible illustration of this truth.

Two little dogs came friskily into a lady's dining-room. The lady ran immediately to the corner of the room and, getting a whip, began to chastise one of them. Thick and fast the blows fell upon the little creature's quivering form. Faster still they fell. It ran from the room, a shrieking, yelping mass. But the other she tapped with a "love flick" and kindly coaxed to go out.

"Why such partiality?" I asked. With a sad countenance, evidencing tender, profound and sacred affections, she answered, "The latter was Willie's dog."

Ah! how full of meaning was that answer. Christ once lived on earth. He endeared himself to all Christians by dying that they might live. Now he has gone to the bosom of his Father. But the souls which he loved and still loves are still here. When we are tempted to treat a neighbor wrongfully, let us remember that he is Christ's man; that he is one for whom Christ died. The thought may stay many a blow, hush many a cry of pain, and cure many a bruised heart.

District Ministers' Institute.

MR. EDITOR: Complying with a resolution passed by the Columbus District Ministers' Institute, at its meeting, West Point, March 30 and 31, I send you the following synopsis of the proceedings:

The Institute elected Dr. T. C. Wier, P. E., of the Columbus district, chairman, and your correspondent secretary. The programme as published in the ADVOCATE was carried out except the first topic, "The Preacher." Bro. Newsom, who had prepared a paper on this topic, was prevented from attending by sickness, much to the regret of all the brethren. Bro. Kendall delivered a splendid address on "The Sermon." (1) The selection of a text or subject; (2) the collection of materials; (3) the preparation of the sermon; (4) its delivery. The address elicited quite a discussion.

Bro. K. M. Harrison told us in a well-written paper, "How the Preacher May Continue to Grow in Power and Usefulness."

Bro. Sage gave us the benefit of his long and varied experience as to "The Preacher Outside the Pulpit: Relation to Community: Pastoral Usefulness."

"Revivals: Necessity: How to Promote Revivals," was presented by Bro. D. L. Cogdell, one of our most successful pastors.

"The Sunday-school: A Field for Pastoral Usefulness," was presented by J. A. Randolph.

J. H. Mitchell presented the subject of "Finance," and told us how he had always succeeded in getting his collections.

A motion prevailed requesting Bro. K. A. Jones to furnish his paper, on "The Preacher and Discipline," to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publication.

Bro. Oakley, in his usual happy way, spoke of "Fellowship of the Ministry: Co-operation and Reciprocal Helpfulness."

The Institute was a great success. The selection and assignment of topics showed the good judgment of our presiding elder, to whom more than any other one man the success of the Institute was due. Bro. Bachman, our Conference's colporteur, and Bros. R. A. Burroughs, J. C. Park and J. A. Bowen were with us. A resolution looking to the perpetuation of the Institute was adopted, and the Institute will be held annually at the call of presiding elder.

The people of West Point sustained their enviable reputation for hospitality. They think they have the best preacher in the Conference, and nobody disputed the fact.

When the next Institute is held, may we be there.

Notices.

To the Pastors and Sunday-school Superintendents of the Kosciusko district, North Mississippi Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: Our Discipline makes it our duty to hold a children's service on the third Sunday in May. A collection shall be taken in each congregation, the proceeds of which are to be used for the furtherance of the Sunday-school work.

Now, let us see that a service be held in each congregation, and I would suggest that you begin on the third Sunday in May, and on circuits continue every Sunday until you hold one in each congregation.

I hope the pastors will send to Rev. G. W. Bachman at once and get the programme, and, if not otherwise provided, the cost of same will be deducted from the collection.

Brethren, don't think this a small matter, not worthy of your attention, but give it all your earnest thought and attention, and great good will be accomplished.

If we had $200 to put into the hands of our Sunday-school agent, and let him go into every circuit, and put into the hands of our people such literature as they have not, and are not able to buy, it would go a great way towards educating the people for church work.

We have so many people who seem to be perfectly ignorant of church work, or their obligations to the church, and I believe the only way to educate that class of people is to put our literature into their hands and get them to reading this literature, and they will naturally fall in love with it. If once you can get them to love good books and papers, you can do some good preaching to them, and they will make sacrifices to supply themselves.

Now, let us see how much we can raise this year in the Kosciusko district by these Children's Day services.

Talking the Minister Up.

Years ago there was trouble in a certain church over the young pastor. Many members insisted upon his leaving. His few ardent friends insisted with equal zeal upon his remaining. Much bad feeling had been generated. The case was critical. Finally two prominent gentlemen called the congregation together and counseled them as follows: "It is true our pastor is not a great man. He does not preach learned or eloquent sermons, but we all know that he is a good man, and that he is doing all in his power to promote our spiritual interests. Let us all agree to bear with him, and instead of talking him down, let us go out from this meeting resolved to talk him up." The good advice was accepted. The result you can guess. He remained in that church nearly half a century, and remarkable success attended his ministry to the close.
